DON'T WANT SEWAGE DISPOSAL PLANT

Residents of Otonabee Sign Petition Asking Council To Prevent it---Campers Also up in Arms.

As generally happens in the case of every new civic project, strong objections are being taken by city residents who camp during the summer just below Rye's boathouse, and also by, it is said, the many residents of Otonabee, to the proposed action by the city to build a sewage disposal plant on the east side of the river.

Campers feel that despite assurances that there will be no odors emanating from the disposal plant, they will be forced away from their usual haunts on account of the obnoxious smells.

A petition of protest has been circulated in Otonabee and this will be submitted to the Township Council. It is said that the very large majority of residents have signed.

Trouble at Toronto.

On Morley Avenue, Toronto, a sewage disposal plant similar, it is said, to the plant which will be built here, has had the effect of depreciating the value of property and making it impossible for property owners who desire to move from the odor zone, to dispose of their holdings without suffering quite a loss. Merchants also complain that they are losing their trade.

COSTLY THEATRE BURNED; SUFFRAGETTES SUSPECTED OF HAVING USED BOMB

Canadian Press Despatch.

Yarmouth, England, April 17.—A violent explosion woke Yarmouth people at four o'clock this morning and a few moments later a theatre at the head of the great recreation pier, recently rebuilt at a cost of one hundred thousand dollars, burst into flames and was destroyed.

Suffragette literature was found all around the pier and beach and it is assumed that some of them left a bomb in the theatre after the performance last night.

HE QUIT WORK RATHER THAN THE CIGARETTES

Five Coffin Nails in an Hour Too Much for Boss

The ladies putting forth such a gallant effort to banish the cigarette might jot the following down:

This morning when the men engaged on the excavation for the new stores in front of the Curling Rink commenced their daily duties, another man was hired. He worked just one hour and in that time demonstrated the fact that his love for the land of the heather, was equalled only by his love for Her Majesty, Lady Nicotine.

In sixty minutes he rolled and smoked five cigarettes, and when the foreman told him to either cut out the fags or the work, he quit the work. Then somebody said there are hard times in Canada.

HUERTA BALKS

Canadian Press Despatch.

Washington, April 17. — Despatches from the charge O'Shaughnessy at Mexico City say President Huerta has balked again. He now wants his salute to the American flag to be returned gun by gun, which there is no likelihood of the United States agreeing to.

FIFTEEN YEARS FOR THOS. RILEY

EXEMPLARY LIFE SAVED HIM FROM THE MAXIMUM TERM

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, April 17.—Thomas Riley, of Kansas, convicted of manslaughter for shooting George Blackburn, was sentenced this morning to fifteen years in the penitentiary by Judge Kelly, who said Railey's exemplary life since coming to Canada had saved him from the maximum term.

SILVER SERVICE PRESENTED TO JUDGE HAYES

Congratulatory Speeches on Major L. M. Hayes' Appointment.

The Officers' Mess of the Armouries was the scene of a delightful function last evening, the occasion being a farewell banquet in honor of Major L. M. Hayes, K.C., who has been appointed senior judge for the County of Wellington.

Judge Hayes besides being the recipient of congratulations, was also presented with a handsome silver service.

Major Duncan Walker presided and spoke of the long term of service of Major Hayes and his efficiency in military matters. It was a most regretted departure, but the Rangers were honored to have one of their members appointed to a Judgeship.

Major George W. Bennett made the presentation on behalf of the officers.

Col. Clegg, Major Mills and other officers made short speeches. The evening was brought to a close with the singing of the national anthem and For He's a Jolly Good Fellow.

MANY FAMILIES IN A TENEMENT MADE HOMELESS

One Hundred Horses of Express Co. Are Also Burned.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Chicago, April 17.—Fire to-day damaged the United States Express Company's stables and nearby tenement houses to the extent of two hundred thousand dollars, burning one hundred horses and driving one hundred families from their homes.

NEW COMERS HAD ROUGH PASSAGE ON ASCANIAN

Were Twelve Days Making Trip and They Won't Forget it

A party of five immigrants arriving in the city to-day, consisting of Messrs. J. Roolins, H. Bell, V. Veiscer, C. Moore and Frank Ashens, relate a rather thrilling story of how they were nearly lost at sea on Wednesday evening on the Ascanian.

Frank Askens, a fairly well dressed man of respectable appearance, in conversation with a Review reporter, said that when they first came on board he was under the weather. This was on Sunday. A storm was coming up at the time. On Wednesday evening after a long battle with the raging elements the passengers were ordered below. The night that followed will be one long to be remembered by the passengers. They were tossed about like a shell all night

"The manner in which we suffered is indescribable," said Askens. "During the night one of the firemen was thrown against something and his arm broken. Others suffered similar injuries. One man the next evening still suffering from the effects of the storm, tried to jump overboard. He was tied to his bed in order to prevent him carrying out his act. Evidently suspense and roughness had affected his head, for he was very hysterical.

"We were over twelve days coming, with half the time stormy weather such as the crew claimed they had not witnessed for some years. Whales were numerous, also large ice packs."

"FIVE TOPPERS" IN THE ULSTER SITUATION.

These men are making history over across the sea, and upon their statesmanlike qualities will depend the matter of peace or war in Ireland. From left to right they are: Premier Asquith, now returned to the House as member for East Fife; Mr. Bonar Law, the Unionist leader in the House of Commons; Sir Edward Carson, the grim leader of the anti-Home Rulers; Lord Londonderry, one of Carson's most stalwart supporters; and John Redmond, leader of the Irish party in the House of Commons.

POPE BEFORE KING GEORGE ON CATHOLIC TOAST LIST

Incident at Winnipeg Creates Stir — Some Officials Did Not Attend.

WINNIPEG, April 17. — On the toast list of the Western Canada Catholic banquet last night, the Pope was placed at the head, His Majesty the King was placed second. Because of this Sir D. C. Cameron, Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba; T. R. Deacon, mayor of Winnipeg, and other prominent men, refused to attend. Hon. C. J. Doherty, Minister of Justice, was also absent. Mr. Doherty's message of regret stated that under ordinary circumstances be would have been most happy to attend.

The affair created considerable discussion in religious, state and civic quarters yesterday, and the matter has not been improved by a mixup at the opening of the banquet. The Pope was duly placed first, and, replying, His Grace Archbishop Langevin, referring to the matter, said:

"We will render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's." Following the toast to the Pope, the toastmaster rose and toasted "Canada," the third toast on the list, that of the King, being second. The banqueters rose, but the orchestra for some reason, struck up "God Save the King." There was some slight confusion and then the anthem was taken up generally.

INQUEST AT HAVELOCK

Assistant Crown Attorney Wearing, M.A., is in Havelock to-day in connection with the resumed inquest into the death of N. Duloff, the Bulgarian.

SHOOTING IN NEW YORK

Bullet Was Evidently Meant for New Police Commissioner

Canadian Press Despatch.

New York, N.Y., April 17. — As Mayor Mitchell, Corporation Counsel Polk and Arthur Woods, the new Police Commissioner, came out of the city hall and prepared to enter an auto early this afternoon, a shot was fired from a member of a crowd nearby, which took effect in Mr. Polk's jaw, injuring him seriously and knocking out nearly all his teeth.

The Mayor's chaffeur promptly seized the would-be assassin and prevented him firing again. He is an elderly man, whose name, it is understood to be David Rose, and he had apparently intended to shoot Mr. Woods.

MISS PEACOCK HELD AT TORONTO BY ILLNESS

Will Not Take Secretaryship at Y.W.C.A. for Couple of Weeks.

Working Girls to Receive More Attention by the Institution.

Word has been received by the local Y. W. C. A authorities that Miss Peacock, recently announced as the new general-secretary for the institution, is seriously ill at her home in Toronto, and will not be able to take up her duties here for two weeks or more. Miss Peacock has had vast experience as secretary of various branches of the Y. W. C. A., and her coming to this city will mean that everything that appears in any way to be of a benefit to the Association or the city in general will be gone into thoroughly.

The Review learned to-day that one effort to be put forth is the formation of classes composed of young ladies other than the regular boarders. The separating of the boarding department from the club rooms has been under consideration for some time, but if no step be taken in that direction it is very probable that classes will be formed and the officials will endeavor to have the working girls, especially the girls having no relatives here, to take advantage of these classes which will be of great benefit to them both physically and intellectually.

During the past winter a class known as the "Loyalty Class" was held every week. It was composed of English girls in this city who are working out, and they took part very enthusiastically.

At present the Y. W. C. A. reading room is open to the young ladies of the city, but very few avail themselves of the opportunity to better their education by this means.

With the arrival of Miss Peacock something will be done to get the young ladies of the city interested, and if precedents count it will undoubtedly be successful.

INDIANS ON THE WARPATH AT BUCKHORN

Arrests Were Made by Constable Montgomery After Free-for-All Fight.

Three Indians in jail and one still missing is the result of a free-for-all fight staged near Buckhorn yesterday, when some eight Hiawatha Indians participated, in which quart bottles and other articles were the principal weapons used, with dire results, resulting in the red men being bady injured.

Very few claim credit for witnessing a grand Indian melee, but such is the experience of Mr. S. Middleton, of the Blewett and Middleton Livery, Water Street.

This morning Mr. Middleton related the story of the fight to a Review reporter. He said he left here yesterday morning with the eight men, all Indians from Hiawatha, for Squaw Lake, where they were going on the drive for the McDonald Lumber Company. When they left here, the Indians showed signs of having tarried too long with stimulants. A few miles outside of the city they again became rather quarrelsome, but peace reigned more or less supreme until nearing the back country, where they became unmanageable and extremely quarrelsome. At Buckhorn, on going into the stable, Mr. Middleton found their coats piled on the floor. A grand fight was in progress. The entire journey between Selwyn and Buckhorn was staged with drunken brawls, and the Indians exhibited more or less inclination to scalp each other with the bottles, which proved bad weapons in their hands.

During one of the bouts one of the Indians was knocked under the seat, and had to be removed from his position by means of a rope.

The missing man, who was evidently the ring leader in the brawl, was missed shortly after leaving Buckhorn. His hat was found some distance from there near a woods. The hat bore traces of a struggle.

Shortly afterward County Constable Montgomery appeared, having been notified of the affair, and he arrested the three men, bringing them back to the city, where they were lodged in jail. The other four, consisting of two boys and two old men, were allowed to go on to the Lumber camp.

"Did they attempt any violence with you?" asked the reporter.

"No, they used me all right, but I want no more Indian trips to the back country like that."

Albert Smoke, R. Perry and S. Perry appeared before Magistrate Edmison at noon to-day and were remanded till Tuesday.

TEN PERISH IN FLAMES

FOUR OTHERS ARE INJURED AND ONE MAY DIE

ESCAPE CUT OFF

VICTIMS DID NOT WAIT AT WINDOWS FOR THE FIREMEN

Canadian Press Despatch.

New York, April 17.—A fire started in a pile of waste in the basement of a five and ten cent store underneath a five storey apartment house at 741 Eight Ave. to-day. It was under control within an hour, but in the meantime ten persons perished and four were injured, one probably fatally.

The identified dead are: R. William Walace, aged forty-six; Mrs. Wallace, aged thirty-two; Mrs. Spencer, twenty-eight; Muriel Davis, three years, and Mrs. George Davis.

The bodies were taken from a theatrical boarding house which occupied half of the building. The fire cut off escape by the stairway. There were no fire escapes on the front and inmates seeking escape by the roof or rear fire escapes ran into the flames, refusing to remain at the front windows and be rescued by firemen's ladders.

HERE'S ANOTHER BIBLE THAS HAS SEEN LONG SERVICE

Was Printed in London, England, in the Year 1677.

Editor Review:

Dear Sir:—

Referring to an account of an old family Bible belonging to Mr. W. C. Mikel, K.C., of Belleville, published in your issue of yesterday, it may be of interest to you to know that Mr. J. L. Dunsford, son of the late Hartley Dunsford, Registrar of the County of Victoria, possesses an old family Bible printed in London, England, in the year 1677, which belonged to John Dunsford, of Tiverton, Devon, who in 1683 was sent by the family to South Carolina "to seek a safe and comfortable asylum from intolerance and persecution." His report of South Carolina on returning to England was so discouraging that none of the family emigrated to America at that early date.

To perpetuate his memory and voyage, John Dunsford willed the old Bible mentioned to his nephew, Martin, and heirs, and as above stated, it is still in possession of a member of the family.

Yours truly.
W. H. DUNSFORD.

The Lindsay Post says:—Mr. Jas. Laidlaw, of Victoria Road, has been appointed Overseer of the Trent Valley Canal, succeeding Mr. Samuel Clegg, who was suspended, along with Mr. J. H. McClellan, Supt.

Mr. Laidlaw is well known in Lindsay and county.

The acting superintendent at the local offices would not say anything in regard to the appointment when interviewed this morning.

5 FINES OF $4.60

Jas. Murphy, aged seventeen, was fined $4.60 by Magistrate Dumble this morning on the charge of assaulting Robert Eggleton, aged sixteen. Both appeared to be under fourteen from their appearance in court. Eggleton claimed that Murphy assaulted him by striking him on the face.

Walter Vass, James Crowley, Arthur Clayton and Ernest Hubbel were each fined $4.60 on their plea of guilty to the charge of being disorderly on Charlotte Street last evening.

UNITED STATES WOULD HAVE HARD TASK TO SUBDUE MEXICANS SAYS REFUGEE FROM TROUBLE ZONE

ONCE RICH BUT NOW ALMOST PENNILESS

After losing $90,000 in Mexico, Mr. Harvey Wilson, Australian by birth, former British army officer and for the last four years a British subject in Mexico, arrived in Toronto yesterday with his wife and three children, his grip and $5 in his pocket. He had just enough money to bring him to the nearest British possession, and now he is looking for work, with his wife ill as the result of her experiences in the trouble zone during the past few months and his baby child dying. A man well versed in business endeavor and competent to command large forces of men, he expressed himself as willing to accept any kind of employment to tide him over the immediate future.

The Oil Fields.

Mr. Wilson owned extensive oil fields outside of Tampico. Tampico, he said had 5,000,000 acres of oil territory, while the oilfield acreage of Canada and the United States combined is only 8,000,000. One well alone, the Portrero del Llano, produced 12,000,000 barrels in four months, but owing to the plundering of the bandits, only managed to save 3,000,000. When it is remembered that there is practically no oil in British territory, or at least not enough to supply war vessels should this be used as fuel, these figures are amazing. The oil properties are in the control of two companies, the Standard and the Pearson interests, and fifty or sixty small investors.

Guns Under Pillow.

"I have never gone to sleep once in the last four months without two guns under my pillow," declared Mr. Wilson. "I never knew what would happen. When I went away from my home, besides my other worries, I always feared what I might find when I returned. You in this country have no conception of the conditions the white people meet in that country. Besides their plundering, no white woman is safe in the country. If you imagine the lowest class of Southern States negro, add a dash of Spanish, and multiply it by about ten thousand, and you will have some idea of what a Mexican is like.

Americans Pass as Canucks.

"In 1912 there were 75,000 Americans in the country and last year there were about 30,000 left after the exodus, but to-day you can't find one man in the country who will admit he is an American. That gives you an idea of what they think of the protection of the United States. They usually go to the British Consul when in trouble.

"If the Americans attempt to put down Mexico they will have the time of their lives," said Mr. Wilson, referring to the latest move of the United States Government. "They could land troops at Tampico and and take it without half a dozen shots being fired—that would be the easiest thing in the world. But what can they do then? They have got to go to Mexico and take it. They might be able to get there, but it would be like when the English got to Pretoria—they would find they had just started. It would take about ten years to bring the Mexicans to terms.

They would have to do like the English did at Transvaal. They would need a system of block houses along every mile of railway. They would find that Huerta and Villa would combine forces, for much as they hate each other, they hate an American worse. The Americans in the country have wanted their country to interfere for a long time.

They Like to Loot Churches.

The success of General Villa (pronounced Vee-ya) against Huerta (pronounced Werta) has lain in his ability to get men. Villa tells his men that he cannot pay them money, but they will be allowed to keep everything they can by looting. On the other hand Huerta promises money to his men when he can get it, but as he is the present Government he cannot allow plundering. The men under Villa, therefore, are better provided for. The piece-de-resistance is the way of looting ground in the churches. They contain the most valuable, and absolutely nothing is safe.

Mr. Wilson himself had his oil burned, which also destroyed his tanks, by rebels and they decided to flee. When he reached Galveston he pawned everything he could, including his and his wife's jewelry to get enough money to get to Canada. On the way out he met an elderly Spaniard, who had once been rich, but had lost all to the bandits. Other brigands had found him, and not believing his story that he had nothing left, applied red hot bayonets to his feet in an effort to make him tell where the supposed valuables were hidden.

STATION AGENT MacNABB PRESENTED WITH CLUB BAG BY G.T.R. EMPLOYES

Lindsay Warder.

After a residence of five years in Lindsay as Depot Agent for the Grand Trunk Railway, Mr. A. McNabb leaves this week for Peterboro to assume similar duties there. During his sojourn in Lindsay he has endeared himself to his fellow men on the system, and yesterday afternoon he was the recipient of a beautiful leather club bag, a gift of the ticket office and freight office staff. The address was read by Mr. Jas. Doran, and the presentation by Mr. W. Dillon, of the freight office department.

Mr. MacNabb, who is quite able of making suitable and appropriate replies at all times, was taken completely by surprise, but thanked the boys heartily for their kind remembrance. He greatly regretted leaving Lindsay, but duty called. Nevertheless he would carry with him the very best thoughts of his pleasant stay in Lindsay.

Another Presentation.

It is understood that Mrs. MacNabb was a few days ago presented with a rich and well cut vase by the Talent Workers of St. Andrew's Church.

SLAYER OF GEORGE BLACKBURN IS FOUND GUILTY OF MANSLAUGHTER

W. J. CHISHOLM IS ELECTED SECRETARY

Dr. J. F. White, of Ottawa, dealt with school surveys before the Training Department at Toronto yesterday morning. By these modern ideas a careful examination is made into school conditions, showing the character of buildings, condition of equipment and qualifications of teachers. Surveys were made of all schools in Ohio, from the primaries to the Universities. The public report made, gave a much fuller knowledge of conditions than any statistical report could possibly afford.

This has led the State Legislature making changes in the laws to correct the most noticeable weaknesses. Ohio now requires agriculture to be taught in every one of its rural schools.

Specific tests were made to show the efficiency of the children in certain subjects, such as penmanship, composition and arithmetic. This was to correct the varying standards of teachers and to enable a just estimate of the school's standard to be reached.

The subject interested the Training Department to such an extent that a committee was appointed to go into the matter of school surveys and make a report in the future.

The new officers elected for the department were as follows: President, W. Prendergast, Toronto; secretary, W. J. Chisholm, Peterboro; director, A. Stevenson, London.

JUST PLAIN HENS.

A flock of 97 pure-bred S. C. White Leghorn hens owned by Mr. H. Waters, Warkworth, laid 49 dozen of eggs in seven days, April 3rd to the 10th. These hens have been laying an average of 25 dozen eggs every week since last November.

LOST HIS HOME.

The home of Robert Allen, in Galway, was destroyed by fire last Monday night. It is thought the fire originated from the chimney.

Thos. Riley Who Shot and Killed Bartender at London is Convicted.

LONDON, Ont., April 17.—Thomas Riley, who shot and killed George Blackburn, bartender of the Hotel Cecil on the evening of Oct. 3 last, was last night convicted of manslaughter. Riley was charged with murder, and an effort was made by the crown to prove that Riley's deed was premeditated. The prisoner will be sentenced by Mr. Justice Kelly to-day.

The verdict was received with mixed feelings by Riley's mother and wife, who were among the relatives present, and who were accompanied here from Kansas by friends who yesterday testified to the good character of Riley before he came to this country.

Riley was the twenty-first person in as many years to be tried in the London court house for homicide; only one was hanged, "Peg Leg" Brown, who paid the death penalty in 1899, though there were others convicted and sent to asylums. Riley's trial was perhaps the shortest of any, the evidence being commenced yesterday morning and being ended late in the afternoon.

William Burrows, a bartender at the Cecil Hotel, Howard Beattie, Wm. H. Morgan and Chas. Holliday were the chief witnesses for the crown, along with Henry Andrews, who had been Riley's mate braking on the Grand Trunk for a short time before the shooting.

PREACHING WON'T HOLD US BACK.

AT ODD TIMES we see in print disquisitions on the speed of progress under which Canada is advancing. The Canadian Courier thus comments in part along this strain :

> Some years ago Woodrow Wilson coined a phrase which is applicable to the present state of Canada's affairs. Commenting on Carlyle's style, he said : "All life is not running to a fire."
>
> This is the age of neurasthenia, owing to our inability to live quietly and sanely. This disease is fomented by sensational magazines, newspaper front pages with red type, the eccentricities of the fashion papers and the excessive attention paid to cheap theatrical productions. Canadians should give their nerves a thorough rest for at least a year.

In spite of what the Courier and other journals may say, Canadians will not give their nerves a rest for a year or even a day. Grant that Canada is developing at a rate perhaps unequalled by any country in the world, grant that a slower pace might result in more solid building; Canadians will still keep to the same rate of progress.

The development, fast as it is, grew with the years. It began, as far as the English speaking part of Canada's population is concerned, with the coming of the Loyalists in the closing decades of the eighteenth century. The pace was set by the energy required to clear an Ontario farm of spreading maples, sturdy beech, graceful elms, lofty oaks and pines. The Loyalists came like an invasion, they worked like an army, throwing up ramparts of snake and stump fences. Troubles in Ireland brought a great immigration here from the Emerald Isle, and the pace of progress was maintained. With occasional lulls in the inflowing tide of people, new recurits from various shores have joined the ranks, and with the same expectant hope that animated the Loyalists, have been driving the chariot of progress. New factors, like railways and inventions served only to facilitate development, only to bring quicker realization of returns. In spite of all preaching, Canada's progress has been and is conditioned by the natural features of the life here led. It cannot be changed in a day, and, if rapidity has some bad results it also has advantages. A little preaching may result in correcting some minor evils, but it will not change the course progress has followed for the last hundred and twenty years.

MUNICIPAL HOUSING.

THE CITY COUNCIL of Chatham has instructed its solicitor to prepare a petition to the Ontario Legislature asking for Legislation permitting cities to borrow money for house building schemes. Apparently, the City Council of Chatham thinks that the recently passed Housing Act does not meet the problem. The new act authorizes all cities, smaller ones as well as the larger, to give substantial aid to housing projects that conform to certain regulations. These housing projects are under the control of private individuals who have subscribed the capital for the undertaking. Some claim that this is a disadvantage. The act limits the returns to private capital to six per cent. This limitation makes the raising of the required fifteen per cent., private funds very hard, even when municipalities guarantee securtities amounting to eighty-five per cent. There does not seem to be a requisite amount of private basis, for the Toronto Housing Company has had difficulty in marketing securities. While German and English cities have carried successfully through, municipal housing projects, that is not a reason for its adoption here because the conditions in Europe are not the same as in Canada. In this country, the municipal problem is one of its own kind, and it is doubtful whether municipal house building in Ontario would be an improvement over the house building of private individuals. Owing to the fact that money will likely be easier now for some time, there will probably be more private building which usually meets the needs of the municipality better than municipal undertakings.

FEWER IMMIGRANTS THIS YEAR.

A REPORT from the Capital states that only 250,000 immigrants will come to Canada this year as against a total of 390,000 for the previous fiscal year just closed. The estimate was made by W. D. Scott, Superintendent of Immigration. Furthermore, it is predicted that the number of artisans coming to this country will be much reduced, although it is thought there will be a dearth of farm laborers and domestics. Mr. Scott stated that this latter class was the only one sought by the department as new citizens for Canada.

A little restriction on immigration especially in view of the fact that times are prosperous in Britain, will do Canada no harm. A great many coming to Canada in the last few years, remain in cities, when they are needed more in the country and form the beginning of some municipal problems that are practically new in this country. Unemployed, slums, paupers, poverty, are consequences of flooding cities with immigrants. A little time to ease the surplus of city population to the country, or to curtail the growth of an unprovided part of it, will be a great assistance in preventing the rise of problems in Canadian cities that are perplexing many large American centres of population.

LIBERAL M.P. IS FOR PROTECTION.

WHEN THE DOMINION PARLIAMENT assembled after the Easter recess, debate on the budget was resumed. Mr. Carroll the Liberal member for South Cape Breton rather disconcerted his fellow Liberals by complaining that sufficient protection had not been given the iron and steel industries and that the drawback on bituminous coal imported for coking and smelting purposes was a step in the direction of free coal. Mr. Carroll squared himself with his Liberal confreres by advocating free food, and, in fact, free trade in everything not produced in his own constituency. The number of Liberals who publicly have shown disapproval of the party's trade proposals shows that the party is much divided on its platform and has nothing of real worth to offer in opposition to the sound administration of public affairs that the Borden Government is giving the people of Canada.

BY ALL MEANS EXTEND THE CAR LINE.

THE PROPOSITION to extend the street car service out Charlotte Street to the boundary should not be allowed to get cold until the rails are being laid. The West end is growing rapidly and already there is a large number of houses which are removed too far from streetcar service. There are people who can remember when very few residences were west of the present car line and that is not so very long ago. An extension to the boundary would be a distinct benefit to the west end as well as to the development of new properties on the other side of Monaghan Road. If this city is to be properly developed money must be invested in it, and, the extension of its street car service is one of the things absolutely necessary.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

WE HAVE just received a report from the laboratory of the Inland Revenue Department, (Bulletin No. 275). This usually dry brochure, a compendium of statistics, is for once humorous, for its title page gives the subject dealt with as ketchup, catchup or catsup. Why not add katchup, ketsup, and plain ordinary chili-sauce ?

THE SPEED with which the United States Government has sent an ultimatum to Mexico when a few of its marines were arrested and when Huerta has been crippled by his defeat at Torreon show that the United States is playing a waiting game. The Benton affair was not allowed to stir up the pot. It is not the highest kind of politics, but it is safe and usually successful.

A GOOD MANY LIBERALS forget in their cry for free food, free agricultural implements, etc., that the Borden Government was elected on a straight tariff fight. A good majority of Canadians declared their preference for the Protective Policy and it is this general support outside the confines of the Dominion Parliament that is behind the tariff proposals of the Hon. W. T. White.

WITH THE WARM DAYS coming on apace, the city council has apparently done nothing on the question of having Peterborough's paved streets flushed this summer. In Ottawa, Toronto and Hamilton the asphalt streets are flushed from wagons instead of sprinkled and cleaned by street-cleaners. The streets are kept cleaner by this flushing and the expense is not so much as by sprinkling and scraping. We wonder how long the people will suffer from dusty streets before the council will consider the best methods of doing away with this nuisance.

A Diplomatic Rebuke.

Aristotle, wishing to cure Alexander of his hasty temper, which he was apt to display to many, wrote thus : "Anger is an emotion that is not felt toward inferiors, but rather against superiors. As you have no equal, there can be no fit object of your wrath."

The Retort Courteous.

A crabbed old misogynist said to Ethel Barrymore at a dinner :

"Woman ! Feminism ! Suffrage ! Bah ! Why, there isn't a woman alive who wouldn't rather be beautiful than intelligent."

"That's because," said Miss Barrymore, calmly, "so many men are stupid while so few are blind."

Globe Reports Subject to Big Discounts.

Brockville Times.

So rankly untrue are the reports of The Globe's special Irish correspondent that the Secretary of the Irish Unionist Alliance has cabled to the Mail and Empire denying the fake story that there was any disagreement between the Ulster Unionists and those in the South of Ireland. The Globe's statements about Ireland are apparently about as reliable as its statements regarding the Conservatives of Canada.

The Race.

"Did ye ever hear of the two Irishmen who were going to run a race to a certain tree ?" asked the man at the cross-roads, after we smoked awhile in silence.

"Well, it seems they had to go be different rowts, an' before they started Mike slapped Pat on the back, an' ses he—

" 'How in heaven will we tell who gets there first ?' ses he.

" 'I'll tell ye, Mike,' ses Pat. 'If I get there first I'll make a mark on the tree wid this bit o' chalk, an' if you get there first you can rub it out,' ses he."

A Side-Light on Armaments.

Christian Guardian.

Japanese officers have been charged with accepting commissions to the tune of $400,000 from German armament contractors on naval supplies furnished to the Government. The affair created a crisis leading to the fall of the cabinet. This incident is only another indication of what is coming to be an accepted fact, that there is a world-wide and most powerful lobby carried on by armament makers strictly in the interests of their business. The agents of these interests are being discovered, everywhere, working far beneath the surface in many instances, and, though they know no national boundaries, yet they make the appeal to patriotism their most effective weapon. It has been these war syndicates that have been keeping war alive and piling up its intolerable burdens upon the shoulders of the people.

PAINT UP

By Walt Mason

As I've often said before, you should toddle to the store, if your standoff's not too faint, and invest in yellow paint; then embellish house and barn, till the neighbors say, "By darn! What a lovely, gorgeous hue! We must get to painting, too!" That's the way great movements start; some wise gent with hero heart sets the pace, and then the guys follow where his pathway lies. If with glad and joyous whoop you should paint your chicken coop, red or yellow, pink or gray, you will see the neighbor jay to the nearest drugstore rush, there to buy some paint, a brush; and next day you'll see that chump putting green stripes on his pump, and he'll give a coat of blue to the fence and clothesline, too. In the spring Dame Nature tries to astonish human eyes, spreading on the colors thick; everything is span and spick; fields of green and skies of blue, everywhere a pleasing hue. And her sunlight often falls on our gray and dingy walls, and it makes her sick and faint, that we don't indulge in paint. Buy a gallon can right now! Paint the sidewalk and the cow, paint the house and paint the shed, paint things yellow, paint them red!

Birthdays & Note

FRIDAY, APRIL SEVENTEENTH

JOHN MACOUN, F.R.S.C., assistant director and naturalist of the Geological Survey of Canada, who was born eighty-two years ago to-day in County Down, Ireland, may well be regarded as one of Canada's grand old men of science. He emigrated to this country when only eighteen and became a farmer. Then he developed a fondness for botany and took up the study of the science eventually becoming a professor in Albert College, Belleville. A government job followed in 1879 and he was with Sir Sandford Fleming's party which crossed the continent soon after. He was made botanist of the Geological Survey in 1882 and received his present appointment five years later. He has written several books and conducted numerous investigations on behalf of the Government.

Ignominious Defeat.

"I have tried to make a fashionable gentleman of you," said the reproachful father.

"I know it," replied the remorseful young man. "But the smell of a chrysanthemum disagrees with me, I look funny in a silk hat, and I always get a cane twisted up between my ankles. If it's all the same to you I'd rather go to work."—Washington Star.

Slow Old Times.

The wonders of the ancient world
Were far between and few.
For seven alone they could but count
And keep the record true.
They hunted round, but that was all
The wonders on display.
It seems so strange, because we have
A new one every day.

Just how the world could get along
With less than half a score
Is more than we can understand;
They must have longed for more.
Why, Edison gives us seven a day
When he is feeling fit,
And if his plans are moving right
He hates with that to quit.

On ancient people and their ways
We do not care to knock.
But modern men see more than that
In walking half a block,
And, passing down the city street,
They have to dodge or one
May fall in them with force enough
To spoil that day their fun.

How small those listed ones appear
Beside our modern brand!
And how they dwindle and grow less
Before the ones at hand!
For often greater ones than those
They held in such regard
May be arranged in rows to grace
Some millionaire's back yard.

Interesting.

"Has he any occupation?"
"Oh, yes; he has occupation enough."
"What does he do?"
"Expects to inherit money."

Some Class.

"That woman is a notorious shoplifter."

"Why don't the police arrest her?"

"She is too clever for them."

"Is there no hope to reform her?"

"Well, she expects to steal enough to make her so rich that she will be regarded as a kleptomaniac."

Politics in France.

Americans generally know as little about French politics as Frenchmen know about ours. Issues, methods and parties in the two countries are radically different. In France parties are so many in number and so small in membership that they are usually designated as groups rather than as parties. It is always necessary to combine the forces of three or more of them to constitute a majority in the chamber of deputies, and that can be done only by giving each group a representation in the cabinet. The parliamentary system of France resembles that of Great Britain in this: When the chamber gives a vote adverse to the ministry, the ministry resigns. But that means only that a new alliance is formed that includes groups other than those represented in the retiring ministry. As a consequence it usually happens that some members of the defeated cabinet are retained in the cabinet that succeeds it.—Youth's Companion.

Napoleon and the Balloon.

When Napoleon was a young cadet he went on one occasion to witness the ascent of a balloon in the Champs de Mars. He entered, unperceived, the inclosure which contained the balloon, which was then very nearly full and about to ascend, and requested the aeronaut to allow him to enter the car. The request, however, was refused, the reason given being that the feelings of the boy might embarrass the aeronaut.

"Though I am young, I fear neither the powers of earth nor of the air!" Bonaparte is reported to have exclaimed.

On being requested to retire, the little cadet, enraged at the refusal, drew his sword and, slitting the balloon in several places, destroyed the apparatus which had been constructed with infinite labor and ingenuity.

Such was Napoleon's first and last attempt to ascend in a balloon.

A Persistent Poisoner

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

The use of the poisoned needle is not new. In the early part of the seventeenth century a man named Tebaldo in Venice invented an instrument in the form of a key from which he shot a tiny needle into the flesh of one he wished to kill.

In Rome during the period when the use of poisons was an art in Italy there occurred a similar case to that of this Venetian. One Lorenzo Luchese went from Florence to Rome, taking with him a more minute knowledge of poisons and poison methods than existed anywhere except in the city on the Arno. There was something uncanny about him that soon turned the Romans against him. A certain young lady, Bianca Ranzine, attracted the attention of the stranger, and he was observed to cast longing eyes upon her. But she was betrothed to a noble Venetian, Ricordo Mantel, and it was assumed that Luchese's love was hopeless. But one day Signorina Ranzine's lover after having mingled with a crowd witnessing a race on the Corso was seized with a sharp pain and died within a few hours. It was supposed he died of heart disease.

Not long after this Luchese proposed to Signor Ranzine for the hand of his daughter. The application was declined on the ground that the lady's heart was buried with the lover she had lost and she would never marry. Luchese said that he would not give up hope and took every means to ingratiate himself with Signorina Ranzine. But she took a dislike to him and would have nothing to do with him.

After awhile the young lady met a man named Francesco Demetrio, a handsome and in other ways a charming man, who fell desperately in love with her and won her from her intended celibacy. They became engaged, and Bianca's friends rejoiced that the heart of one so young would not after all be buried. Demetrio had heard something from Florence about Luchese that put him on his guard against the man.

Every one knew that Luchese had cast longing eyes on Bianca Ranzine before the death of her betrothed and that he had proposed for her hand soon after his death. Moreover, poisoning being much in vogue at that time, there were those who believed that Ricordo Mantel had not died of heart disease, but had been secretly poisoned. Demetrio after hearing the reports from Florence about Luchese strongly suspected not only that Mantel had been poisoned, but that Luchese had been the poisoner.

However, he kept his own counsel and at the same time a strict watch on Luchese. If Demetrio was in any room where Luchese was present he would immediately leave. On several occasions he noticed that the Florentine tried to get near him, but he had always prevented his doing so by moving away. One day Demetrio was talking with a friend on a street on a fete day when a procession of the church was passing and suddenly felt a sharp pain in his arm. Turning, he saw Luchese pushing his way from him among the crowd.

"Seize that man!" Demetrio said to his friend. "He has punctured my arm and doubtless poisoned me."

The friend gave chase and caught Luchese. As soon as he laid hands on him he felt a sharp pain in his hand. There happened to be a doctor in the crowd, who, learning what had occurred, asked Demetrio to show him where he had been pricked. So small was the wound that it could scarcely be discovered, but the doctor whipped out a lancet and cut away a piece of the flesh. Demetrio's friend, having turned Luchese over to an officer, came reeling back, and the doctor, learning that he, too, had been pricked, treated his hand as he had treated Demetrio's arm.

The doctor took both pieces of flesh to his house, and on cutting them into bits found in each a small needle not half an inch long. Whether there had been poison in either of them he could not tell, but the evidence was strong enough against Luchese to insure his conviction. He was searched as soon as arrested, but nothing incriminating was found on him. His house was searched, and in it were found a variety of poisons and a little box containing needles similar to those that had been put into Demetrio and his friend. The instrument with which he had shot the needle into the flesh was picked up on the street near where the attack had been made. It was simply a small brass tube with a spring in it, which could be loosened by a pressure of the thumb.

Luchese was tried and executed. Demetrio suffered but little from the effects of the puncture, but his friend was ill a long while.

The fact that Mantel had doubtless been poisoned by the man who wished Bianca for himself was kept from her. Indeed, she was not informed that Luchese had tried to poison her second lover. After Luchese's execution she and Demetrio were married, and great interest was manifested in the wedding, for every one except the bride knew that one lover had been murdered and the second had nearly met the same fate.

But it was not to be expected that what was common property could be kept from her always. She learned in time and in consequence always dreaded that her husband might fall at the hands of some secret enemy.

London used to have an Ugly club. On his admittance to the Ugly club a short descriptive sketch of the new member was entered in the minute book. We find the picture of a claimant to the title of the ugliest man on earth in "Joseph Farmer, merchant," whose description reads as follows: "Little eyes, one bigger than ye other; long nose, thin lantern jaws, large upper lip; mouth from ear to ear, resembling a shark's; a rotten set of irregular teeth, which are set off at great advantage by frequent laughing; his visage long and narrow; his looks upon the whole extraordinary, haggard, odd, comic and out of ye way. In short, possessed of every qualification to render him the phoenix of ye society, as the like won't appear again this one thousand years."—London Chronicle.

MAKING SCRAP BOOKS.

Work Done by Children's Missionary Guild For Sick and Crippled.

Although the making of scrap books is no new idea and many are manufactured every year by Sunday school children and members of church guilds for the benefit of children in hospitals, they are always welcome. Not every one makes them in just the same way. A woman in charge of a children's missionary guild who has made a number of scrap books for sick and crippled children gives the following directions for the work:

The books that the children made were fashioned of plain colored wall paper, which was bought in short ends of pretty light colors at a low price. The paper was cut into strips twenty-four inches long and ten inches wide, each sheet folded once, thus making them 12 by 10, each book containing twelve of these double sheets. The children collected the pictures, which were cut out and sorted at the first meetings before the pasting began. In the sorting process pictures that would best please little girls were put together; also those most suitable for boys. Animal pictures were put together, as well as pictures suitable for very small children. Boiled paste was made in quantity when the pasting began, a little being given to each child in a tin pattypan, with a paint brush for the pasting. The children arranged the pictures to suit themselves. When a book of twelve leaves was finished holes were punched and the sheets tied with ribbons or cords.

The scrap books described above are of a good size for sick children to hold. The mistake is too often made of having them too large and unwieldy for a child who is weak to enjoy.

Children are delighted with cutouts of any kind. Magazines that contain fashion pictures, especially colored ones, supply little girls with a collection of dolls. They not only love to cut them out, but they will play for hours with the dolls, as they call the figures. Animal pictures charm little boys, who sometimes construct entire miniature zoos in this way.

CRAPES IN SPRING.

They Are Just Right For Fashioning the Eccentric New Draperies.

Crapes are just the materials to take ou gracefully the lines of the new models which Paris has elected we shall follow. It is predicted that crape will be one of the most popular fabrics this spring and summer. Illustrated here is a smart gown for afternoon wear, which is carried out entirely in silk crape. The tunic drapery is what is known as the corkscrew, following in its lines the graceful spiral of this utensil. Colored buttons and bands of satin give a touch of color to the garment.

Something very new is the narrow plaited skirt which is held snugly to the figure by broad ribbon sashes in the form of tie backs. The new panniers or short tunics are used over the hips of these plaited dresses, while the sashes encircle the figure at a point just below the edge of the pannier.

THE CORKSCREW TUNIC.

They are adjusted to fit snugly to the figure, so that the plaits of the skirt are kept in place. Large bows finish the back, sometimes with loose falling ends and sometimes just ending in two big loops. Sometimes plaited tunics are worn with these plaited skirts in one or two tiers, with narrow ruffles at the edge to increase the width at the hips.

Stained Laces.

Laces that have been stained with perspiration should first be washed with cold water and soap. After the stain has been removed rinse in warm water.

Ignorance of the law excuses no man—unless he has a pull.

Sachet Shower.

A novel way of entertaining in honor of the prospective bride is to give her a sachet "shower." A girl who gave such a festivity says:

"When the guests were invited each one was to say what kind of a sachet she'd bring. I waited a few days to get the list. There were sachets of crape paper (pink roses and blue bowknots design), made just to fit a bureau drawer. One layer of sheet wadding was inside, the cotton being split to hold the sachet powder, and all the girls used the same kind, violet and orris root. The paper was laced together with pink satin baby ribbon. Trunk tray covers were made of pink rosebud silk and had a cluster of three wee sachet bags tacked to each corner.

"Two of the girls decided upon corsage sachets made by taking soft satin ribbon and making just a plain bow with ends. The two loops were stuffed with cotton to hold the sachet, and the ends neatly overhanded together. These are worn either in or outside the corset cover beneath a lace waist. The faint color is very pretty. Sets of six colored satin squares (2 by 2 inches) were softly stuffed with cotton and sachet and gilt safety pins attached. One of the girls made some of these waist or armhole sachets of finest mull over pink satin, edging them with narrow val lace.

"The practical girl made linen bags filled with lavender flowers for the linen closet, the name, 'Sweet Lavender,' being worked in lavender floss. A novelty to me was the sachet made from an envelope filled with sachet to be placed in the desk drawer, and scented blotters made by soaking in a good violet toilet water and drying."

Crushes Out of Fashion.

There was a time when hostesses prided themselves on the numbers of people they had at their parties. Once they asked all and sundry, so that they could afterward boast of what a big affair it was.

But they found that nobody really enjoyed these "crushes." There was not room enough. They left the house feeling much more annoyed than if they had not been invited. So now experienced hostesses limit guests to a number they can comfortably entertain. Nobody has to stand all the evening because there are not enough chairs. Nobody finds himself wedged in a corner whence it is impossible for him to extricate himself.

Seating Guests.

The seating of guests of honor at a dinner of ceremony is often a perplexing problem to host and hostess. It will simplify matters considerably to remember that the host with the lady guest of honor goes into the dining room first.

The lady sits at the right of the host and others follow, each lady being seated at the right of the gentleman whom she accompanies. The hostess comes in last with the gentleman guest of honor, who sits at her left. By this procedure a lady is at the right of each gentleman, no matter how many guests there are at the table.

Juvenile Evening Attire.

Girls and boys under the age of seventeen never need wear evening dress, even on the most formal occasions. Let the girl have a nice light frock—one of her summer dresses perhaps—with light shoes and stockings to match and white silk gloves. The boy can wear his Sunday suit, with dancing pumps and white gloves.

It is not good style or good sense to put young girls into elaborate evening dresses, which probably can be worn only once or twice before they are outgrown. A girl should never wear a really low necked dress at all till she puts up her hair and "comes out" in her first ball gown.

The Boasting Girl.

In the matter of that much desired thing which we call popularity, there is a great temptation for young women to boast of the number of social engagements that have filled their calendars. It is not unusual to hear a girl talk of the number of bouquets she has had sent to her during the dance season. This same girl will wonder out loud what she is going to do with all the requests from gentlemen to take her to the theater, musicales, receptions and dances. It is really a vulgar flaunting of popularity and is a mark of ill breeding.

Dance Invitations.

As for the etiquette which governs invitations to dances, let it be said that if the affair is to be a formal one the invitations are issued from two to three weeks in advance. If the party is an informal one then a short note may be written by the hostess herself to each guest a week or so before the affair is to take place, or if she prefers she may extend the invitation over the phone, which is considered quite proper for informal parties.

Notes of Sympathy.

A note of sympathy should be sent to friends in whose family death has occurred. Excepting in the case of intimate friends this note is even more acceptable than a personal call. In the case of mere acquaintances the sending of a calling card takes the place of a note.

The man who hesitates may find it too late to act.

A WILL AND A WAY.

How a Great Sculptor Insisted Upon Getting Recognition.

While still an unknown, struggling student, Carpeaux, the famous sculptor, determined to get his work and his name before the public, so he sent a bas-relief that he had just finished to the Salon in the hope of gaining the notice of Napoleon III.

The subject he had chosen was "The Surrender of Abd el Kader to Napoleon III." He labored so hard over the work that he fell ill. He lay on a sickbed in the hospital when the news came that the Salon jury had accepted the bas-relief and would hang it at the approaching exhibition.

Unfortunately "Abd el Kader" was so poorly placed in the Salon that it entirely escaped the notice of public and emperor alike. Carpeaux was not discouraged. He was no sooner out of the hospital than he heard that the emperor was to visit some cities of northern France. Immediately he packed the cherished group and set off for Valenciennes. When the emperor entered the city hall of that town the bas relief was exhibited at the entrance. Napoleon inquired about it. Unfortunately, Lemaire, the deputy from that district, was something of a sculptor himself and of a jealous disposition as well.

"Bah!" he replied. "An uninteresting piece; the work of a student." The emperor passed on.

Undaunted, Carpeaux repacked his work and set off for Lille. There the collapse of the ballroom floor put a stop to the festivities and to the emperor's visit. Carpeaux started for Amiens, only to be arrested as a suspicious character and to have his precious bundle confiscated. He succeeded in proving his innocence and immediately hastened to the archbishop, who gave him permission to exhibit the group at the cathedral gates.

The emperor, deep in thought, entered the church without glancing to right or left. Again "Abd el Kader" had failed to attract Napoleon's attention. Carpeaux now decided to risk everything on one chance.

The next day the emperor, with his usual retinue, visited a local exhibition. They were examining some paintings when suddenly a young man pushed forward and halted before Napoleon. Pointing to the bas-relief of "Abd el Kader" he started to speak, but before he could utter a word he was surrounded and hustled to one side. A great hubbub arose, for every one thought that it was an attempt on the emperor's life. Finally, the young man, still struggling with his captors, managed to shout above the clamor, "I, Carpeaux, am the author of that group!" And again he pointed to the bas-relief. Gradually calm was restored, and Napoleon examined the work which the sculptor had so dramatically brought to his attention. He was delighted with it and purchased it on the spot. Carpeaux's reputation was finally established!—Youth's Companion.

Of Course.

"Yes, dear."

"What is meant by the phrase "hard hearted landlords?"

"The owners of buildings who insist on their tenants paying their rents."

THE LATEST FROM DAME FASHION

THE FLUFFINESS OF WRAPS.

There is a delightful fluffiness and flariness to the new spring dressy coat that makes it truly feminine. Fairly shapeless is this one about the shoulders and the body, and beruffled to flare saucily from a long waistline to below the hips. Shot taffeta in plain and in moire effects, nocturne satin and the heavier mandarin crepes are favorite materials. A collar that is suggestive of the mode of Paquin is made, in this coat, of printed satin, while the sleeves are loosely Oriental. Over an afternoon frock, with a hat that has plenty of flare and boots that are in dainty buttoned fashion and the costume is perfect.

True Economy.

A certain old housewife believed in "having clothes appropriate to occasions," and she boasted that she could "get more wear out of a dress" than any one else. When a garment was past its first, second and third stages of usefulness for public wear it was relegated to certain seasons of domestic stress, from which it passed eventually to the ragbag. One gown long dear to her heart had reached this last stage, and she acknowledged it one day to the village seamstress.

"Don't seem as if I'd had half the good I expected to out of it," she said wistfully. "'Tisn't but eight years since I had it made up. Two years I wore it Sundays, the next two sewing circle afternoons, next two when I went errands to the village, and these last two round the house common. But now"—and she regarded the bundle sorrowfully before stuffing it into the yawning bag—"now 'tisn't even fit to hang out washing in on Mondays!" —Exchange.

One Hundred Years on Same Farm.

Mrs. Marcilla Doyle is dead at Port Hood Mines in the County of Inverness, N.S. Her maiden name was Marcilla McDonald, and she was born a few months over one hundred years ago on the same farm on which she died. She retained good health, her senses and mental faculties to the last. There are at least three persons still living in South Inverness who have passed the century mark.

Salmon For Wolfe Lake.

Fishery Overseer Wm. Truelove of Fermoy intends placing a large number of salmon trout in Wolfe Lake, near Brockville, Ont., at an early date. Several years ago salmon trout were plentiful in this lake, and the news that the lake will be restocked will be received with pleasure by anglers from all parts of America. Conditions are ideal for salmon, and the venture is sure to be a success.

HOW TO BUILD POTATO PLANTER

Labor Saver That Any Farmer May Make for Himself.

A simple home-made instrument that farmers, when planting potatoes, will find very convenient is being used by eastern farmers. The following descriptions gives particulars, showing how the planter may be made and operated.

The main frame is 3 ft. 6 in. by 5 ft., and made of hardwood planks 3 in. thick by 10 in. wide, bolted together at the corners. The spouts are made of heavy gaspipe, 14 in. long and 3½ in. in diameter, tapered at the point like a cultivator tooth, so that they will not drag the sod or manure. The upper end of the tooth has a thread on it and is screwed into a piece of hardwood scantling 6 in. and 28 in. long, bolted firmly to the frame. The balance of the spout attached to the hopper is made of heavy zinc and is wider at the top for convenience in dropping in the potatoes. The spouts are placed 3 ft. apart and the wheels are centred 18 in. from them, so that the one wheel comes back into its own mark, thus making all the rows the same distance apart. Should it be desired to have the rows closer together, the machine can be made on the same principle to suit any distance.

The wheels are the kind used on the old fashioned walking cultivators, with levers for raising and lowering. The rachets on the levers should be small and close together, so that they can be moved up or down any desired distance. Gang-plough wheels with ratchets on the sides may also be used by elevating the frame to suit.

The wheels should be so placed that the machine will balance when two boys are sitting on the back. The boxes, holding one bushel of cut potatoes, are shaped like a mason's hod and held firmly in place in front of the top end of the spouts. The distance apart for dropping the cut potatoes is regulated by blocks, bolted on the spokes, which come in contact with a piece of light steel spring, which makes a noise so that the boys know when to drop the sets into the spout. A seat may be arranged directly behind the spouts for the comfort of those dropping the potatoes.

As soon as the potatoes are planted, it is advisable to harrow the land so that any that are not deep enough may be covered. It is also advisable to harrow several times before the potatoes come up, the last harrowing to be just when the sprouts are appearing.

DAIRY VALUE

In the commercial world it is reasonable to assume that what you pay and what you get determine value; a low price, in itself, does not spell value; price and quality, together, determine value.

As applied to the dairy herd, how does this work out? A farmer does not necessarily buy a cow because the price is low, he wants quality; in this case, quality may be interpreted to mean dairy capacity, or ability to produce plenty of good milk. If he does not purchase, possibly the heifer coming into milk has been raised at rather too high a cost so that her dairy quality is impaired. She may not be of the right stock, that is, from a dam of deep milking qualities and a sire of known ability, and all may have suffered from lack of the right feed.

The other parts of the value side of every dairy cow, that is, what you get from her, is right in the dairyman's own hands. He can easily determine each cow's value, or dairy quality, by keeping individual records of production. Then if he wishes to part with a good cow, her selling price is enhanced by reason of that certificate of value, her record, which helps to fix the price. Right buying is true economy; the factory patron with the highest conception of value will buy, or raise, right, and will know, by his own simple records that each cow in the herd separately, not averaged in a lump, fits his ideals of value. Fix a good standard, make each cow pay. Milk and feed record forms are supplied free by the Dairy Commissioner, Ottawa.

WHERE ALLIANCE REALLY EXISTS

Ottawa, April 17.—Mr. J. H. Burnham, Member for West Peterboro, in a speech on the budget, charged that the Nationalists voted with the Liberals almost wholly, showing where the alliance really is.

There are times when a woman wants to be alone, but never when there's a man in sight."

PRAIRIE FARMERS NOT IN DISTRESSED CONDITION

J. A. M. Armstrong, of North York, in Budget Debate Analyzes the Appeals of Opposition on Behalf of Distressed Western Graingrowers—Mr. Burnham Compliments Minister on Stand in C.N.R. Case

OTTAWA, April 17. — Five more speeches were contributed to the budget debate in the Commons yesterday afternoon and evening. Most interest centred in the first references on the floor of the House to the C. N. R. aid proposals. They were made by Mr. McColg (Lib., W. Kent) and Mr. Burnham (Con., W. Peterboro).

J. A. M. Armstrong (Con., North York), resuming the budget debate, said that the Liberals were apparently appealing for support to the farmers on the prairie. These farmers were represented as being in a most distressed condition, yet the census returns showed that they were better off than any other class in the Dominion. If this western country is such a plague-ridden place, if men, women and children are starving because they cannot have free wheat and free agricultural implements, why do they not come back to Ontario and return to the United States? Mr. Armstrong went on to criticize the Senate for vetoing the navy bill, but was called to order by the Speaker.

A. B. McColg (Lib., W. Kent), who followed, declared that a reduction of duty to be a benefit to the farmers should have been on plows, spreaders, barrows and corn implements. It was upon these implements that the farmer spent most.

Mr. McColg said that he believed in free wheat. Canada produced 181,717,000 bushels of wheat over and above what she consumed. If the farmers were not allowed to dispose of their wheat to the United States, the result would be that the farmers of Western Canada would take up mixed farming, which would prove a serious blow to the farmers of Ontario.

He criticized the Minister of Militia, for having rented 65,000 acres of crown lands in the west at two cents an acre to a concern for raising remounts for the Canadian militia. This, said Mr. McColg, was dealing a hard blow to horse-breeders.

In conclusion, he denounced the proposed aid to the C. N. R. He declared that the Opposition would oppose the giving of any more money out of the Treasury to Mackenzie and Mann. Personally, he would vote against aid of any kind being granted them.

At the evening sitting Dr. Edwards discussed the subject of agricultural implements. He said that Mr. McColg was the agent of the McCormack Harvester Co. of Chicago, and was therefore interested in having American implements brought into Canada free of duty.

In conclusion, the member for Frontenac expressed the hope that Canada would soon do her share in Imperial naval defence.

"I wish no harm to any member of the Senate," he protested, "but I would like to see the Conservatives in control of that body at an early date."

Dr. Edwards was followed by Edward Devlin (Lib., Wright) who said that the Conservative party had abandoned the national policy of Sir John Macdonald and substituted therefore a policy of high protection. Sir John, he said, in 1878 had advocated not raising the tariff but readjusting it with a view to bringing about reciprocity between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Devlin advocated increased Government aid to the farmers. He said this should take the form of more experimental farms, free agricultural colleges, free books on agriculture and a fund out of which money would be loaned to farmers at two per cent., to enable them to build houses, barns, etc. He maintained that it would also be feasible for the Government to establish a fund for loans at two per cent. to laborers, so as to enable them to build their own homes, and thus relieve them of rent, which was an important factor in the present high cost of living.

Mr. Burnham (Con., W. Peterboro) following Mr. Devlin, took occasion to compliment Finance Minister White on the firm stand which he has taken regarding Government aid to the Canadian Northern. The Government of Canada had already given too much to the C. N. R. and similar enterprises.

"Anything that is done for the C. N. R.," declared Mr. Burnham, "will be done by way of salvage."

Mr. Burnham said the people who were crying for cheaper food did not seem to realize that great quantities of staple products were being brought into Canada in spite of the duty. Only a short time ago New Zealand sent a shipment of butter to Montreal, which immediately brought the price of butter down two cents per pound. He believed it was better to build up Canada than to build up the Antipodes.

INTERCEPTED WIRELESS.

Express Train's Mechanism Broke Communication With Fleet.

NEW YORK, April 17.—The ships of the Atlantic fleet on their way to Mexican waters were cut off from all official communication by wireless unintentionally yesterday by a passenger train speeding through the meadows of New Jersey. The official messages to the battleships which were interrupted were being sent from the wireless station at the navy yard in Brooklyn. The wireless waves of the Government's apparatus were confused and blurred by the waves sent out by the wireless telephone apparatus of the Lackawanna Railroad station at Hoboken, which communicated for the first time successfully to the Lackawanna Limited ten miles away. On further inquiry Supt Phillips of the Lackawanna was informed by the Brooklyn Navy Yard that the wave length of the Government wireless apparatus installed on the battleships and at fixed stations was 600 metres. That is exactly the length of the waves sent out by the wireless telephone apparatus installed on the Lackawanna Limited.

The Lackawanna superintendent was requested to stop sending messages until the length of the wave used by the Lackawanna was changed, and this Supt. Phillips readily said he would do. Further tests of the wireless telephone on moving trains will be suspended until the apparatus can be overhauled for changing the wave length.

Counting the Ticks.

"Did you know," said the man who was reading about the contraction of metals, "that a clock ticks faster in winter than in summer?"

"No. I never noticed that about a clock. But I know a gas meter does."

TURKEY AS AN EXAMPLE

ONLY PROHIBITION COUNTRY IN WORLD IS THE POOREST.

NEW YORK, April 17.—Addressing the American Hotel Protective Association here yesterday George Wright of the Walker House, Toronto, read a clipping from a Canadian paper in which it was said that the Turkish Government had solicited German brewers to establish breweries in Turkey and had favored the abolition of prohibition in the country as the best means of overcoming the drug evil. Mr. Wright added:

"The Ottoman Empire is the only prohibition nation in the world, and it is the poorest. The nations that lead the world — England, France, Germany, and the United States—have always been consumers of alcohol."

Britain Will Study Canada.

LONDON, April 17.—(C. A. P. Cable.) — Manufacturers here having shown such a lukewarm attitude towards the proposed British exhibition train to tour Canada, the Canadian Associated Press learns that subscriptions are now being sought to send a British commissioner to Canada to study the opportunities for trade with the Dominion, especially in view of the opening of the Panama Canal. It is hoped a hundred firms at least will be willing to subscribe £25 each toward this object.

LUMBER CUT THIS WINTER PRICES MAY BE LOWER

Nearly Five Hundred Million Feet Taken From Ontario's Forests During Winter—Two-dollar Reduciion Predicted

Once again there is comparative silence in the Ontario woods, so far as man is concerned. The clang of steel against the tall trees, the strong smooth sound of the logs slipping along on the hard, snow-covered ground, the cries of the woodsmen startling the silent winter air—these have disappeartd for the time, but it has all left a happy band of men.

The lumber season in Ontario has been a good one in many respects, the conditions prevailing in the bush for the transportation of the lumber have seldom been better, and the prices have maintained a fairly high level. The figures which have just been compiled by the Deputy Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, are as follows:

Pine, 350,000,000 feet B.M.; spruce, 7,500,000; hemlock, 35,000,000; other varieties of timber, 75,000,000; hardwood (maple and birch), 5,000,000; pulpwood, 225,250 cords; charcoal wood, 60,000 cords. railway ties, 5,500,000.

The total figures last year for pine and other varieties was 552,525,898; this year the figure is 472,500,000 feet B. M.

With regard to the price of lumber a member of one big Toronto firm is reported to have stated that pine will be from one to two dollars less per thousand feet this year. Hemlock will sell at $16.50, as compared with $18.50 last year.

CLEVER COUPLE MADE BIG HAUL IN MONTREAL

Montreal, April 17.— Montreal had a distinguished visitor during March and April, one not heralded in the society columns, but a man, nevertheless, with a handle to his name, and a reputation widely known in a dozen European centres and four different continents. He arrived udring first week in March, registered at the Windsor, stayed a few days there in luxurious surroundings, and then moved on to the Rits. He was entertained lavishly by some of Montreal's leading citizens, and put as an honorary member of, at least, one prominent club—and is said to have had $15,000 to $20,000 more cash when he departed than when he arrived.

It may be mentioned that poker and other similar forms of entertainment were enjoyed while here by the distinguished guest.

The man boasts Holland as his native country, and since his roving began has acquired a title which he uses when he frequents the European capitals. He usually travels with one of Europe's best known adventuresses, a brilliant woman, who has been used in diplomatic services by more than one government, and whose pearls and rubies are the envy of even a Pittsburger's wife.

The local police authorities, as well as federal officials, have been notified of the "clean up" here, and are working on the case. They have made diligent inquiries from foreign sources, and state that the couple are the cleverest pair of international wooers of fortune that ever visited Montreal. The pair left even more suddenly than they arrived, going south last Saturday night by the Rutland for New York, from whence they intended to sail for Italy within a day or two.

Their operations in Montreal have been kept fairly well under cover, as most of those "stung" want to take their losses without publicity—since, one and all, they can afford them. In a little poker game last Thursday night one Montreal business man dropped $5,000, and as he is a "good sport," he paid up without a quaver. But one of his friends waxed suspicious, sent away a cable or two, and found out some suspicious facts. An endeavor was made to stop payment on the cheque, but this attempt came too late. Mr. Man-from-Holland was waiting on the bank steps when that institution opened for business.

A federad officer was asked to-day what he thought the brilliant pair had gotten away with, and he said he considered they had cleaned up at least $15,000, and probably more. They paid their bill at both local hostelries at which they stopped, and tipped with a lavish hand. A prominent broker is said to have introduced them in several select circles.

No formal complaint has yet been laid, and if they are located, even then an arrest may not be made.

THE LAZIEST MAN IN CANADA

He is Glad to Go to Prison If There is No Work

Fort William. April 17. — The hustling little railway town of Sioux Lookout has produced western Ontario's laziest man.

The man of pronounced disinclination with regard to violent exercise is Frank Maki, about 25 years of age, and he was brought to the city by Provincial Constable Stringer. During his several months' residence in Sioux Lookout, Maki has not worked, despite the fact that he had been offered employment and had been threatened with arrest if he did not go to work.

When arraigned at Sioux Lookout before Magistrate Vaughn, under a vagrancy charge, Maki said he was unemployed for the reason that he did not want to labor. He explained that he had subsisted for months on what food he picked up at the rear of hotels and restaurants. Some of his nights were spent on chairs or benches in hotel offices, but he slept during the cold weather in box cars, he declared.

He was sent to Central prison for six months.

FOR CAMPERS

Dont's That May Save Many Thousand Dollars.

(1) Don't, when in the woods, throw down a lighted match, cigarstub or other flaming object; make sure that the flame has been thoroughly extinguished before throwing it away.

(2) Don't build your camp fire larger than is necessary.

(3) Don't, under any circumstances, leave your fire unguarded, even for a comparatively short time; see that it is dead out before you go away.

(4) Don't build your fire in leaves, rotten wood or other inflammable material.

(5) Don't build your fire against a large or hollow log, where it is hard to be sure when it has been entirely put out.

To these "don'ts" it may be added that in windy weather, or in a dangerous place, it is well to confine the fire in a hole dug clean down to the mineral soil. A fire may smoulder in the humus; or "duff" for days, only waiting for a strong breeze to fan it into a flame that may burn over miles of timber.

Summer tourists and campers unfortunately have a bad reputation among the owners of timber limits as being a frequent cause of fires. Such fires could be prevented, almost without exception, by a little extra care on the part of the campers, who have been the unintentional cause of much forest destruction, and who have just as real an interest in the preservation of the forests as the owners of the timber themselves. The rules given above are the result of long experience and observation on the part of many woodsmen and lumbermen as to the origin of fires from this cause, and are earnestly commended to the attention of campers, sportsmen and others.

PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN WOULD HELP NEW ONTARIO AFFAIRS

In Reply to Resolution Urging the Appointment of a Commissioner of Lands, Hon Mr. Hearst Expresses Belief That Present Policy is Keeping Pace With Development of the Country.

TORONTO, April 17.—Yesterday's principal discussion in the Legislature was devoted to the affairs of New Ontario and Sam Clarke (Lib., Northumberland) offered a resolution favoring the appointment of a commissioner of lands and a staff to make a more aggressive campaign for settlers.

Hon. Mr. Hearst, in reply, declared his belief that the present policy of the Government was keeping pace with the development of the country and reviewed the work of his Department.

In opening his address Mr. Clarke said he was not doing it in a spirit of censure but of suggestion for the agricultural prospects of the north. The Minister of Lands and Mines had too much work on his hands properly to look after northern farm lands. The Government should appoint a commissioner and a group of assistants—the best men that could be engaged—to take prospective settlers out and show them the land and help them to decide what locations they would take. The grant of two million acres to the Canadian Northern, who he said had not brought in one single settler up to this time had kept these lands "tied up." He enlarged upon the favorable opportunities which New Ontario offered for settlement and declared that 5,000 people in the city of Toronto would locate there if the proper inducements were offered. In addition there were hundreds of hardy, honest men in the rural portions of Old Ontario who would be far better off on the new land than on the sandhill farms which they now occupied. He believed it was a mistake to encourage immigration of mechanics and laborers to Ontario. What New Ontario needed was settlers, who would do for the new territory what the forefathers of the present generation had done for the older parts of the province. "When we have the settlers," he said, "on the land, like the father to the child, look after him until he is strong enough to look after himself.

Mr. Hearst, in replying, said he appreciated the manner in which the resolution was put and the kindly manner in which the subject had been treated. On a great many points he was in thorough accord with the West Northumberland member, but he took exception to some of his statements on the score of his limited knowledge of north country conditions. He maintained that practically every one of the suggestions mentioned by Mr. Clarke had been put into effect by the Government and were being carried out. Referring to a suggestion as to colonization along the Ontario route of the Grand Trunk Pacific, he pointed out that the line was still in the hands of the contractors. He had taken the matter up with officials of the road on his trip through the country last summer, and they promised to co-operate with the provincial authorities to bring in settlers as soon as the line came under their control. He declared that Mr. Clarke was wrong in his statement that vast quantities of land were tied up against settlement. He compared the present Government expenditures for bridges and public works with that of the former administration, and found the former 408 per cent. greater in the same period of time, while the road expenditure showed a like growth of 293 per cent.

In moving an amendment to Mr. Clarke's motion Albert Grigg (Con., Algoma) eulogized the work of the Government in the north but suggested that it might prove a good policy to check the large departmental stores which were being established in all parts and corralling the retail trade. The influence was felt in the north.

A further amendment was moved by Mr. Elliott (W. Middlesex), approving, in turn, of the $5,000,000 grant, and more if necessary, but expressing regret that the funds from this loan had been applied for other purposes than those set out in the act.

Mr. Grigg's amendment was adopted on division.

CAPTAIN AND HIS WIFE AND SIX OF CREW ARE DROWNED.

NEW YORK, April 17.—The identity of the schooner which went ashore in a northeast gale near Long Branch, L.I., Wednesday night was established by life-savers at daybreak yesterday as the Charles E. Buckley, from Jacksonville, Fla., for New York. The schooner is a total loss, and Capt. Hardy, his wife and all members of the crew, except one seaman named Atchison, were lost while attempting to launch a lifeboat.

Besides Captain Hardy and his wife, it is believed that at least six members of the crew went down when the lifeboat failed to weather the waves.

To Offset Roosevelt's Visit.

PARIS, April 17.—The contest for influence in Argentina between the United States and Germany is the subject of a despatch yesterday from Buenos Ayres to The Temps. The correspondent attributes the visit of Prince Henry of Prussia to South America to Germany's desire to counteract the effect of Col. Roosevelt's presence there. He avers that the raising of the United States legation to Argentina to the rank of an embassy was another episode in American-German rivalry.

KING'S REPRESENTATIVE IN ONTARIO TO HAVE HANDSOME PALACE

The Government House Over Which So Much Debate Has Occurred a Magnificent Structure Both Outside and In.

A great, rambling palace, set on the side of a hill in the northern part of Toronto, where one may wander and dream strange dreams—that is the future home of the King's first officer in the Province of Ontario.

The design of the French chateau is what is followed in architecture with a parapet from which one might leap down into the valley of the Don. Though three storeys in height, this grey stone building, with its gothics and its turrets, and its red-capped roof, seems to hug close to the ground. Perhaps that is because it is sprawled over a large area, but on the whole, if you do not view it from a distance, the impression it creates is one of majesty, a dignity and isolation which befits the rank of kings, and it is safe to say that this edifice will soon find its place on the list of the curious sight-seers.

Without, the impression is majestic. Within, it is one of splendor, with its high ceilings, its corridors, its massive reception hall, which reaches the full three-storeys in height and over-reigning it a double tier of balconies, with its ball-room which for grandeur will not be equaled anywhere in the whole city and which for the brilliance of the gatherings it must shelter through the future years will be rivaled only by a Rideau Hall or a Windsor Castle. Beneath that red-shingled roof there will be harbored all the outward expression of the French instinct for magnificence.

As one enters by way of the porte-cochere he finds himself in a spacious reception room, with three ways to turn. To the left is that mysterious chain of offices with its brass-buttoned lackeys, through which one must pass before he can finally gain audience with his Honor, the Lieutenant-Governor, whose business office will be located in the extreme southwest wing. A large, airy room, flooded with sunlight, is that official domain, and scarcely less pretentious is the apartment of the secretary. If one turned to the right, he would find the suite for official receptions, three large rooms, any one of which might accommodate a moderate family, but if the sight-seer went straight ahead, into the main corridor, which runs traverse of the building from north to south, he would find facing him the chief reception hall, large as the pit of a theatre, capable of accommodating hundreds.

From this hall, which is to be draped in the most modern manner, lead spacious steps which end in the tangle of rooms above, or open upon the corridors from which doubtless thousands of curious folk will some day look down upon gay scenes. Immediately behind the reception hall and separated from it by folding doors, is the ball-room with its alcoves, its double balcony, and its palm room, the latter sixty by forty feet in dimension, the main room seventy by fifty. On the ground floor, immediately adjoining the reception rooms, is the living suite of the Lieutenant-Governor, composed of writing room, living room, and library, all of which are designed upon the same generous scale. The living room is forty by thirty feet. To reach the dining department, one must cross the main reception hall, and there he will find either the private dining room of the Lieutenant-Governor's family, or the state dining hall, built upon a scale to accommodate a hundred guests or more. The private dining room differs little from that enjoyed by the ordinary family, being only large enough to seat a dozen or more. Immediately at the back of this department is the culinary establishment, and the quarters of the servants.

Above, which one may reach by way of elevator, are the various sleeping suites. To the southwest, above the Lieutenant-Governor's office, is the royal suite, consisting of three sleeping rooms, a reception room, and baths, looking out upon a flat roof. In the northern wing is a series of suites, a dozen chambers or more, for the private family or for guests, rooms high and brilliant, with their French casements, their balconettes, and their view of the world, on the other are the balconies, looking down upon the grand receiving hall, while above all these rooms is another series of bedrooms, with individual bathrooms, a veritable tangle, endless rooms to a number which will be used only upon state occasions, when the home of the Lieutenant-Governor becomes the scintillating centre of the social world.

Back, in the servant's wing this is all duplicated—rooms, rooms, rooms for men, and women, for butler, and underling, for sleeping, for receiving, for dining, for linen, for silver, for china, and for the dozen and other things which go to make up the cast of royalty. It is all there, the accoutrement which leaves the brain dazed. Verandahs are massive and spacious, with pillars hewn from the rocks of the Credit Valley, weighing many tons each, there is a billiard room where one may while away the hour, and behind there will be the conservatories and the equipment of locomotion—the home of the lodge-keeper, of the coachman, of the chauffeurs, of the gardener, of the landscape artist—a veritable village in itself.

Then should one, in curiosity, pry down into the cellars below, he will find the same intricate series of dark, gloomy rooms, for the hundred and one things required to run such an establishment.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

MONK'S REPARTEE.

Ex-Member For Jacques Cartier Has a Biting Wit.

The retirement of Hon. F. D. Monk from Parliament leaves a distinct gap in the public life of Canada. From the year 1896 he represented the County of Jacques Cartier in the House of Commons, and no more courtly or kindly man ever sat in the green chamber. A student, orator, famed for his skill in drafting legislation, a man of strong and high principles, he filled a niche in Parliament distinctly his own. As a fighter in the Opposition days of the Conservative party—those lean years stretching from 1896 to 1911—he quickly won his spurs, and when the Borden administration came into office on Oct. 10, 1911, Frederick Debartzch Monk was chosen to carry the heavy portfolio of Public Works. From the very day he stepped into the office formerly filled by Hon. William Pugsley, he was plunged into the fog of patronage. The job-hunters made his life miserable. They camped in droves outside his office, followed him on cars, accosted him in the streets, waylaid him on his doorstep, in fact worried him to death. Many a good story is told of the attitude of Mr. Monk towards these importunates. On one occasion a man rang him up at one o'clock in the morning asking for a position. Mr. Monk told him to come round to the office the following morning. Sure enough the man was one of the throng outside the Minister's room in the Public Works Department, before nine o'clock. All the morning he waited, and when Mr. Monk came out at noon to attend a meeting of council the man tackled him.

"What is your occupation?" asked the Minister, kindly.

"I am a waiter, sir," rejoined the job-hunter.

"Then you will have an excellent opportunity of showing your proficiency," was the prompt reply, as Mr. Monk strode council-wards.

Mr. Monk's somewhat ponderous style of oratory in both English and French, was enlivened by many flashes of wit and repartee. On one occasion in Opposition days, while making an attacking speech, he stumbled in the gangway, and came within an ace of falling. One of the rank and file of the then Government party, who is out of public life at the present time, and whose private life was supposed popularly to be not above suspicion, jeered and laughed as the man from Jacques Cartier just saved himself from falling. "You see, Mr. Speaker," put in Mr. Monk, "the difference between me and my honorable friend is this: my lapses are physical ones." And a roar of laughter went up from both sides of the House, much to the discomfiture of the jeerer.

In the House, after he became Minister of Public Works, Mr. Monk bore his share of the criticism for dismissals. On one occasion he was accused of dismissing a laborer who had only one leg.

"What was this man with the wooden leg dismissed for?" put in George Kyte of Richmond.

"I suppose my honorable friend will admit that he must have been guilty of 'stumping,'" retorted Monk, amid a peal of laughter.

At a campaign meeting at Three Rivers in the campaign of 1904 Mr. Monk, and Hon. L. P. Pelletier, now the Postmaster-General, were the chief speakers. One man on the fringe of the crowd, in order to embarrass Mr. Monk, kept yelling out "louder, louder." Now Monk's stentorian tones could be heard blocks away, and the audience began to be amused at the yells of the heckler. Mr. Monk paused in his speech and told the audience of how Sir John A. Macdonald had once been interrupted in a similar manner. Sir John had said: "I really believe when on the Day of Judgment the angel Gabriel blows his horn, some fool will cry out 'louder, louder'." The little story was inimitably told in French, and the next thing seen of the heckler he was being lugged down the main street by several loyal and youthful adherents of the Monk Club.

OUR WEALTHIEST PEOPLE.

Blackfeet Indians of Alberta Lead In Per Capita Riches.

It will be rather startling to many to be told that a tribe of aboriginal Indians, now resident in Canada, are the wealthiest people in the Dominion, and that their per capita wealth is only $3,000 less than that of the richest people in the world.

The Blackfeet are all resident in Southern Alberta, living on the reserves provided for them at the time treaty was made with them many years ago. There are three bands, Bloods, Blackfeet, and Pelgans, and they are the least civilized of all the Indians in Canada. In the last five years, however, competent Indian agents and farm instructors have induced the red men to till ground and occupy themselves with other industrial work, and the result has been that the wealth of the tribe has been considerably increased.

A careful survey of the reports of the agents shows that the total wealth of the Blackfeet Indians, including an average yearly income, is $10,987,250. This divided among the 2,329 bucks, squaws, and papooses on the three reserves means an average of $4,675. It is well known that squaws are not allowed any share in the earnings of the Indians, and that the wealth is held by bucks over the age of 16 or 20 years. If the wealth of the Blackfeet nation were divided among the males of over 20 years of age the per capita wealth of each would be $16,445. Indian families, as a rule, are large. Ten is not considered many for a teepee. But if we should allow seven to a family and give the wealth of the family to the head of the house, he would be the possessor of some $32,125.

Fortunately this great wealth is held in land, implements, fencing, buildings, livestock, etc., so that the Indian cannot squander his immense wealth. The tribe has increased by four during the last year.

The only rivals of the Blackfeet in the matter of wealth are the Osage Indians in Kansas. Their per capita wealth is $7,612, held in much the same way as the Blackfeet.

The Gull's Home.

To view the Canadian lake gulls in their ideal breeding-grounds, one should visit the Georgian Bay about the middle of May when the first eggs are laid. Three go to a nest; and the latter being the roughest, crudest little circle of matted twigs and grass hidden around the granite crevices, or among some driftwood tangle shorewards. If a patch of moss is there for padding, it is by the caprice of an over-luxurious parent-gull, looking forward to the second week in June when the first grey chick breaks its way through the shell, downy-feathered already; and able clumsily to walk, after a fashion even to swim. The parents, however, of necessity bring them food till well in August, about which time the uninitiated are wont to think them two different species—the white and the grey. If you are curious, you will stalk the young chicks to their nest; so confiding is their nature that they will even let you fondle them. Do not harm one, or a flashing-eyed, muscular fisherman may stalk you. Also, never shoot a grown gull on any pretext, or that lone fisherman may become a dozen. The laws prohibit the dumping of fish offal in our rivers and lakes; and the fishermen after each night's "clean-up," deposit their leavings on any handy flat rock close to their shanties.

Mormon Agents Busy.

New Brunswick is very much exercised over the activity of the Mormon propaganda throughout the province and there are many reports of Mormon missionaries or agents at work in St. John. The reports indicate a house-to-house visitation in the interests of Mormonism. In one case the agent rang the door bell and a maid responded. He sought to sell a book on Mormonism, but the purchase was declined by the mistress of the house. However, that did not end the matter for a small booklet containing pamphlets was left with the maid.

In another case more persistence was reported. Entrance to the house was gained and a book sold. The family are Methodists. It happened that the birthday of the master of the house was approaching and his wife bought the book to give him as a birthday present, not scanning it sufficiently close to know that it was a Mormon publication.

The recipient was rather surprised, and the giver equally so when she learned the nature of her present.

The Commercial Association of Lisbon, Portugal, have decided to take steps towards a larger import trade from Canada, and have sent the following letter to the Portuguese Consulate at Toronto:

"Being desirous of enlarging our commercial business, especially the foreign one, the directors of the association have approved the installation of a room for catalogues of the most important commercial houses of the world, in order to have our business men become acquainted with the prices of all articles in the world's market, and invite the commercial houses of your district that export their products to present their catalogues to the association."

Irish In Canada's Parliament.

Excepting the French-Canadians, men of Irish extraction predominate in the Commons.

By the way, this is a peculiarity of this Parliament. In every Parliament hitherto men of Scottish ancestry outnumbered all others, even the French-Canadians. At present there are 49 of Irish descent and 46 Scots. But if the North of Ireland men be called Scots there would be 21 more of the latter or 67 Scots in all. There are 53 French-Canadians in this Parliament. —Ottawa Journal.

THE MARKET

Latest Quotations in Grain Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, April 16. — Immense sales of corn today broke the market. There were many defections from the bull side and it looked as if a large number of heretofore stubborn holders had decided to stand out no longer against Argentine competition. After a fall that amounted in some cases to as much as 2¼c to ⅜c a bushel, prices closed heavy at a decline of ⅝c to 1⅛c to ⅝c net. Other speculative articles all showed a set-back—wheat ⅜c to ½c to 1c, oats ⅛c to ¼c, and provisions 10 to 12½c to 32½c.

Banana Meal.

It has been proved in India and the Malay peninsula that the produce from one acre of bananas or plantains, as the fruit is termed in that region, will support a much greater number of people than a similar area under any other crop, and the immense yield may be preserved for an indefinite period by drying the fruit and preparing meal from it. Plantain meal is made by stripping off the husk, slicing the core, drying it in the sun and then reducing it to powder, and finally sifting. It is calculated that the fresh core will give 40 per cent of meal and that an acre of average quality will yield over a ton.

MEXICAN DICTATOR FORCED TO YIELD TO U.S. DEMANDS

Salute to American Will be Given and Return Given by the Fleet—Return of Salute Does Not Involve Recognition of Government.

WASHINGTON, April 17. — The United States Government last night accepted Gen. Huerta's offer to salute the Stars and Stripes as an apology for the arrest of American marines at Tampico a week ago yesterday. The Huerta Government salute to the American flag will be answered with a salute to the tri-color of the Mexican nation.

This arrangement, the details of which were being finally arranged last night in an exchange of official messages between Washington and Mexico City, ended, in the view of all high administration officials, the crisis that had arisen in the last few days, resulting in the despatch of American war fleets to Mexican waters. Executive quarters and congressional circles breathed a sigh of relief that the tension had passed.

No time has been set for the firing of the salute, and until the details are arranged no further orders will be sent to the American fleets now proceeding south. It is practically certain, however, that while many of the vessels will be turned back, others will continue south and a substantially increased naval force will be maintained in Mexican waters.

Huerta's offer and request for a return salute caused President Wilson to ask for an opinion from the counsellor of the State Department and Navy Department officials. All reported that it was the invariable custom in naval practice to return a salute and cited precedents. The President was also informed that Rear Admiral Mayo, in making his original demand for a salute, agreed to return the courtesy.

Mr. Wilson said a return of a salute under the circumstances did not involve recognition of the Huerta Government, but was merely an act of the same character as grasping the hand of an individual who was apologizing as he extended it. Secretary Bryan, too, took the view that the American salute would be given to the flag of the Mexican nation, just as much respected by the Constitutionalists as the Huerta Government, and no technical recognition was involved.

Enquiry as to the character of pressure which had been brought on Gen. Huerta to yield brought out the fact that foreign Governments had an active interest in the events of the last twenty-four hours. Both the French and German ambassadors, after conferences at the State Department, were in communication, it is understood, with their representatives in Mexico City. Another phase of the situation was a well authenticated report that the last instalment of a loan due by Huerta was about to be held up by foreign bankers if he did not comply with the American demands.

Eager To Avenge Insult.

LONDON, April 17.—Contrasting the action of President Wilson in connection with the arrest of American marines at Tampico, with what was done when Wm. S. Benton, the British ranch owner, was killed at Juarez, The Manchester Guardian, one of the leading Liberal newspapers, said yesterday:

"Intervention which murder and robbery failed to bring about is apparently to be the punishment for a mere symbolic slight on American dignity."

"Why should Villa murder with impunity and Gen. Huerta be chastised with the whole strength of the right arm of the United States for a mere breach of international politeness?"

Railway Brotherhoods Want Him to Be President of New Federation.

BOSTON, April 17. — Charles E. Mellen, formerly president of the New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., may become the active head of a federated body, supreme among the various organizations of the United States, with 2,000,000 railroad employes affiliated.

It became known yesterday that Mr. Mellen had been approached on the subject, and that he was giving it favorable consideration. The new organization is to be known as the Federal Council of Railroad Brotherhoods, and will be formed at a meeting of delegates in this city on April 26, and the former director of the New Haven Railroad System will be nominated for the presidency. The idea of the council has been promoted by the Order of Railroad Station Agents, which met here in January and appointed a committee to invite the many independent societies of railroad men to send delegations to the forthcoming meeting. It is stated that favorable responses were received and 100 delegates have been elected.

New Zealand Thinks It Can Take Care of Its Own Protection.

LONDON, April 17.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—Col. Allan, New Zealand's Minister of Defence, in a speech yesterday, said that the Government conceived that its duty in the future was not to contribute five hundred thousand dollars a year to the Admiralty, but instead to utilize the money in training New Zealanders to serve both New Zealand and England. Was New Zealand, he asked, to rely for protection on a trade alliance with Japan? Was she to have no voice in the expenditure of her contribution and representation in questions of peace and war and also diplomatic relations. The thing was unthinkable to people grown to manhood.

J. M. BROOKS ON RULES COMMITTEE FOR CENTRAL ONTARIO RACING ASS'N

Schedule Covers Two Months From June to August

A meeting of the representatives of the different towns in the Central Ontario Horse Racing Association was held at Orillia on Monday, when the following delegates were present: Hon.-Pres., W. J. Cowan, Cannington; President, J. M. Brooks, Peterboro; A. C. McKenzie and Geo. Spencer, Beaverton; Dr. Bailey, Barrie; Wm. Carnew, Beleville; Mr. Walters, Port Hope; Thos. Hodgson, Orillia; Mr. Bailey, Huntsville; Mr. Kennedy, Burk's Falls. Dr. J. C. Moore, sec.-treas. of the Association, represented Halleybury.

The schedule covers two months from the middle of June to the 20th of August with a race meet each week as follows:

Peterboro—June 17 and 18.
Belleville—June 24 and 25.
Port Hope—July 1 and 2.
Lindsay—July 8 and 9.
Orillia—July 15 and 16.
Bracebridge—Two days in week of July 27.
Burk's Falls—August 4 and 5.
Huntsville—August 7 and 8.
ybury—August 12 and 13.
New Liskeard—August 19 and 20.

For the Orillia races $1,200 will be hung up in purses and there will be three races each day.

Orillia was after July 1st and 2nd but as this would cause considerable extra travelling, Port Hope was given these dates.

The official races that will take place in each town in the circuit are: first day, 2.35 trot or pace, 2.15 trot or pace; second day, 2.20 trot or pace; free-for-all or pace. Each town is given the privilege of adding other races to the above if they desire.

Some of the fastest horses in Canada will follow this circuit and take part in these races.

A Rules Committee, composed of Dr. Sinclair, Cannington; Geo. Spences, Beaverton; Thos. Hodgson, Orillia; J. M. Brooks, Peterboro; and Dr. J. C. Moore, Orillia, was appointed and will meet in Lindsay on Saturday to draw up the rules and regulations to govern the racing in the circuit.

WEATHER IMPROVES AND PETES USE THE WILLOW

Avices from the front state that there were no new arrivals at the camp of the Petes in Youngstown yesterday, but this did not cause any consternation. Curley Blount chased his hirelings to the ball lot for a light work-out.

The weather was dark and threatening, and certainly not conducive to enthusiasm, but nevertheless the players renewed acquaintances with Spaulding's spheriods, and afterwards indulged in a two-mile trot. Then they beat it to the dinner table.

The afternoon entered with clearing skies and warmer, and at 1.30, with Blount and Tirrill serving the slants, Frank Fox led off for a batting practice.

A number of local players are working out with the Petes.

SENATORS MAY GET THIRD SACKER FROM FORT WAYNE

Fort Wayne, Ind., April 17. —Carl Fleming, a fleet third baseman, drafted by Fort Wayne from the Campaign Club of the Illinois Missouri League last season, will likely be turned over to the Ottawa club. Frank Shaughnessy has taken a liking to this youngster and is trying to make a dicker with Claude Varnell for his services. Fleming hit .282 and fielded .941 last season. He is a very fast younth.

Brant, purchased from Chatanooga, is making good with the Fort Wayne team, and Ottawa is not likely to get him. There is a possibility of Bramble, a right hand spitballer, being sent to Canada. He played in that league last year.

SPORTS AT THE Y. M .C. A.

The Boys' Department of the "Y" are experiencing some doings these days. Mr. Galley has the organization of lacrosse teams, baseball teams, and bicycle teams under way, and the elections for captains are resulting in some excitement. The Bicycle Club is a new one for the boys.

Ford

More Canadian Fords are now shipped in one day than in the entire first year of the Company's existence. That's a wonderful record of growth in ten years. But we must grow if the world insists on riding in Fords.

PLAYERS OF ERIE YANKEES ARE REPORTING

Everything in Readiness for Training at Perry Field.

Erie, April 17.—Erie fans received their first glimpse of the Yankees to-day when nearly all of the players under contract to the local management arrived in town. Three are expected to appear later, Charles Behan, of Bradford, who is expected Monday, Jack Dawson, who is expected Saturday, and Dummy Taylor, who will arrive some time before the season opens. Transportation was sent out some time ago, good only until to-day, if players come later they may have to pay their own fare.

Manager Heinie Smith and George O'Neil, owner of the Erie Canadian league team conferred concerning the situation here. Things are moving smoothly and Smith announced himself ready to proceed to work the instant the men arrived. Perry Field has been put in excellent condition. The diamond and outer gardens are dry and hard, the fences and grandstands have been repaired, the clubhouse has been put in order, and other equipment has been installed. The lot is in condition to stage a league game to-morrow if it were necessary.

Training will be commenced to-morrow if the weather permits. If rain or cold puts a damper on proceedings, Manager Smith will make an effort to obtain the use of the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium for limbering up purposes.

So far, two games have been scheduled here for the Yankees, one with the Buffalo International team on Sunday, April 19, and the other on Saturday, April 25, against the Erie All-Stars.

The game next Sunday will give Erie fans their first chance of seeing the team in concerted action against an opposing team. Manager Smith feels assured that the local boys will be able to give the Internationals a hard battle, despite the fact that the bigger leaguers had the benefit of southern training.

BASEBALL

Wagner Still There.

St. Louis, April 16.—The Pittsburg team won from St. Louis today 4 to 1. Pittsburg tallied its first run in the second inning, when Wagner got his first hit of the season, a single over second base, and took third on Witted's throw past first in trying for Viox. He scored on Mitchell's single.

Tigers Lost.

Detroit, April 16.—Three Detroit pitchers were unable to stop St. Louis to-day and the Browns won 8 to 5. James, who pitched his first complete game of major league baseball, was also hit hard, but only in the fourth inning, when they scored two runs, were the Tigers able to bunch their drives.

Good Twirling.

IS CHARGED WITH ATTEMPT TO BURN. TRENTON HOTEL

Trenton, Ont., April 17.—At 4 o'clock in the morning of the 14th inst. the interior of the Strathcona House, on Front Street, was set on fire in two places. Fortunately discovery was made in time, and the fire was extinguished before much damage was done. Application was immediately made to the Criminal Investigation Department of the province, and last evening Inspector Reaburn was sent down to investigate the matter, with the result that Morris Stewar, an inmate of the house at the time of the attempt to burn the building, was arrested and charged with the crime.

PROTEST AGAINST RENEWAL OF THE McCONKEY LIGENSE

Religious Organizations Appear Before the License Board.

Toronto, April 17.—McConkey's Restaurant was the object of a concerted attack directed by the churches and religious organizations of the city yesterday afternoon at the annual meeting of the Board of License Commissioners when application was made for a renewal of the liquor license. Speakers referred to it as having been the means of starting more young people on a downward career than any other hotel in Toronto, and of having placed the city under a cloud of shame before the whole Dominion as the result of what Judge Denton described as an "orgy" there on New Year's Eve. The Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Christian Endeavor Union, W .C. T. U., and other organizations were represented by deputations.

Mr. H. M. Ludwig, K.C., appeared for Mr. McConkey, and utterly repudiated statements made by the temperance people to the effect that the proposed sale of the restaurant was merely a blind. He also hotly denied allegations affecting the morality of the establishment, and informed one speaker that he might have an opportunity of proving his remarks in this regard before a court.

Commissioner Coatsworth and Guinane and Chief Inspector Burrows were the only members of the board present, Commissioner Lamb having been unable to attend. They reserved their decision. The commissioners will meet again next Thursday, when the McConkey case as well as those of all the other license-holders in the city will be considered. Whatever decision the board reaches will not affect McConkey's for the time being. Their license will go into effect again on the 27th, when the suspension expires, and under the Act will remain in force until the end of the year.

ONTARIO RICH IN OLD BIBLES

To-day's Toronto Globe says:—A few days ago in the illustrated Magazine section of The Globe appeared the statement that "W. C. Mikel, K.C., of Belleville, former President of the Ontario Bar Association, owns what is probably the oldest Bible in Ontario. It was published in A.D. 1700." Since the publication of this statement the mails have been laden with information about old Bibles, many of which long antedate that in the possession of Mr. Mikel. The oldest Bible in the Province is reported by R. McClelland of Strathroy. It was printed in 1580, when great Elizabeth's sailors were engaged in the pleasurable task of harrying Spain and looting her treasure ships.

The second oldest Bible seems to be one of which the present whereabouts are unknown. Mr. W. Macdiarmid of Lucan writes that in 1911 he saw in that town a copy of the "Breeches" Bible in English black letter, printed in 1589. On the title page were the worlds, "Imprinted at London by the Deputies of Christopher Barker, Printer to the Queen's Majestie." The Bible was in excellent preservation.

Another copy of what is almost certainly the "Breeches" Bible is reported by Rev. Jesse Arnup of this city to be in his posesssion. It has on its title page the words: "Imprinted at London by the Deputies of Christopher Barker, Printer to the Queen's most excellent Majestie. Anno, 1595. Cum Privilegio."

Of the reign of James I, that most "high and mighty Prince" to whom we owe the standard form of the English Bible printed first in 1611, there seems to be at least one relic in the Bible of Mr. W. Manning of Clinton, printed A.D. 1615. It, like the Elizabethan copies, tells how our first parents provided themselves with "breeches" when they found themselves naked in Eden. It is rather surprising to note the persistence of the Geneva version after the King James Bible had been published. The Geneva Bible was first published in 1557 by English divines exiled from their homeland because of persecution. It was given its better known name because in translating it the word in Genesis III. and VII., which in the King James Bible is rendered "aprons" appeared as "breeches."

A Rhemes, or, as it is more often called, a Douay, Bible of the fourth edition, dated 1633, is in the possession of Mr. H. F. Mackintosh. It originally belonged to a Catholic family in Staffordshire, England.

J. G. Johnston, of the Bridgeburg Review, says his mother has in her possession a Bible of date 1682, with records of the Oliphant family of Toronto, of which she is a member, dating back to 1779. This Bible was printed at Edinburgh, and contains "the Psalms of David in Meeter newly translated."

There is a possibility that the oldest Bible in Ontario still lies "perdue" in some seldom visited attic. The first Bible—the Mazarin—was printed about a century before any of those recorded above, and there were many editions of the Bible in English and German before the middle of the sixteenth century. It is not without interest, however, that there are in Ontario several copies of the Scriptures antedating the first issue of the King James version.

VOTES FOR WOMEN

An Interesting Discussion at Open Meeting of Oddfellows.

The open meeting of the Peterboro Lodge of Oddfellows, No. 111, held in their hall last night, proved to be a big attraction, and the hall was taxed to its capacity. The discussion on "Women's Suffrage," in which any person in the hall was invited to take part, was very interesting. Two ladies, Mrs. Bert Watts and Mrs. R. Jones, were in favor of their sisters voting, and they were assisted by several gentlemen speakers. The negative side was taken exclusively by men. There was no decision given, and the majority of the audience agreed that it was about equal.

P. C. Patterson contributed several Scotch songs.

SOCIETY WOMEN USE THE WEED

W. L. Scott Says Habit is Prevalent in Best Circles.

OTTAWA, April 17.—If girls and young women in high society at Ottawa and elsewhere did not feel their ears tingling yesterday, it was not because they were not the ones referred to. Before the Government special committee dealing with the cigarette evil, W. L. Scott, president of the Ontario Union of Children's Aid Societies, said the habit was increasing rapidly among society women.

"It has been introduced within the last six years," he said, "and the majority, perhaps, of the girls in highest society, now smoke cigarettes."

Also Judge Choquette of the Montreal juvenile court, said of the 3,000 delinquent children he had dealt with 95 per cent. of them smoked cigarettes. "The pictures in packages are a great incentive for children to buy, and I have known parents who gave money to their children to buy cigarettes with."

CARE OF CLOCKS; CHEAP ONES MAY BE CLEANED AT HOME

The Method is Very Simple—Experts, However, Frown Upon Any Tinkering With a Valuable Timepiece.

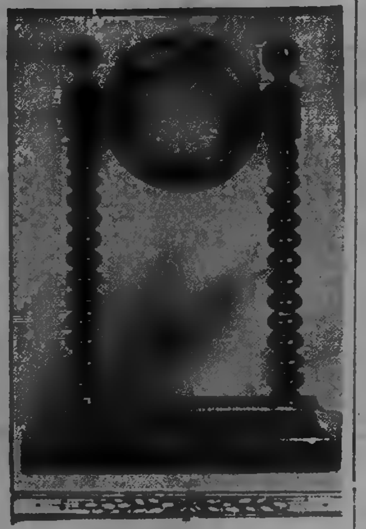
There is no more important piece of furniture in the house than the clock. On its condition depends not only the peace but the welfare of the household. To its faithful hands the wage earners look for warning as to the hours when they must leave home for office or shop; on them the housewife depends for information as to when it is time to arise, when to prepare meals or keep her various engagements. When the clock goes wrong there is not only weeping and lamenting, but dire disaster unless the timepiece is speedily put to rights.

In many households, where the little metal alarm clock is the chief mentor, the procedure usually is to discard the clock when it proves unreliable. It is certainly hardly worth while to take the more inexpensive ones to the clockmaker for repairs. The charge would be almost as much as for a new clock. So the defective clock goes into the ash can or rubbish heap and a new one takes its place.

On the back of clocks one finds an apparatus that regulates the movement, fast or slow, but when no manipulation of this will make the clock go as it should an oil bath will sometimes put it into good running order again.

To administer this bath take a vessel sufficiently large to hold the clock. Place the clock on the bottom of the vessel and pour over it enough kerosene to cover the timepiece. Shake the clock about in the oil from time to time, as this will serve to dislodge particles of dust or dirt.

The clock may be left in the oil overnight or for twenty-four hours if it is very dirty. Then take it out, set it somewhere that the oil may drain off, and when it no longer drips rub it off, and after winding and setting very likely it will go as well as ever.



NEW BOUDOIR CLOCK.

A valuable clock should always be taken to a clock mender at once. Home methods of repairing are not to be thought of in such cases.

An expert on clocks gives the following advice:

A clock should never be moved from one position. If it does not go when it is first placed in a position probably it is set unevenly. An unevenness of a fraction of an inch may cause a clock to vary several minutes from the right time each day or may cause it to fail to go altogether. Start it in a good position and leave it there as long as possible.

If a clock stops and it is not run down or wound too tight or set on an uneven surface send for a clockmaker. It may need oiling, but oiling is something which only an expert should be allowed to do. It may need cleaning, and this, too, should be done by an expert.

Be careful about winding clocks. Wind them always at the same time and never wind them too tight. Find out just how many full turns of the key it takes to wind the clock to the proper point and always stop with that number of turns.

The care of the clocks must be left entirely in one person's hands. It ruins clocks if they are constantly tinkered with, and it is much easier for one person to set the clock than for two persons to keep track of it.

A clockmaker says that the hands of the clock should never be turned backward. If it is necessary to set the clock, push the hands forward, as there are some very delicate screws that the backward pushing is likely to disturb.

If the clock strikes, always wait, when setting the clock, with the hand just after each hour for the clock to strike for that hour, and wait at the half hours, too, if the clock strikes every thirty minutes.

Don't let the clock run down. Wind it regularly every twelve or twenty-four hours or thirty-six hours, or seven days or every stated time when it needs winding.

Attractive timepieced are a boon. The one illustrated here is a colonial design fashioned in mahogany. It makes a pleasing gift and is suitable for the library or boudoir. Colonial styles being so popular, it makes a welcome addition to the list of furnishings.

A CANADIAN SOLDIER.

Brig.-Gen. Dobell Is Son of a Former Laurier Minister.

Brigadier-General Charles Macpherson Dobell, who was recently appointed to the post of Inspector-General of the West African Frontier Force in succession to Major-General Wilkinson, is a son of the late Hon. R. R. Dobell, the well-known lumber merchant of Quebec, who was known throughout Canada as one of the original member of the Laurier Cabinet. Brigadier-General Dobell, who recently returned to England from South Africa, where he had been engaged upon special service, is one of the most brilliant graduates of the Royal Military College, Kingston. While a cadet he made an enviable record as an athlete and was prominent in all the college sports. He graduated in 1890 and the following year was gazetted a lieutenant in the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, one of the most famous and efficient regiments of the service. He early gained distinction as a capable regimental officer and was early in his career appointed to the important position of adjutant. He took the staff course at Camberley, passed with high marks, and since then has been engaged on various staff duties. He has seen much active service for so young a soldier, and has distinguished himself upon many occasions. He received the medal and clasp for service in the Hazara expedition, and received a brevet-majority in special recognition of services with his regiment in connection with the occupation of Crete.

He was adjutant of the second battalion of the Welsh Fusiliers during the operations in China, and took part in the relief of Pekin, being specially mentioned for his personal coolness and pluck and for the splendid discipline of the Fusiliers and the exemplary manner in which all duties falling to that regiment were discharged. From China he proceeded direct to South Africa, where he was given command of a regiment of mounted infantry. Brig.-Gen. Dobell received the Queen's medal and six clasps, mentioned in despatches and received the D. S. O. He served also in Northern Nigeria, was mentioned in despatches and received the brevet of lieutenant-colonel. Brig.-Gen. Dobell was born at Quebec forty-five years ago and received his elementary education at Charterhouse School, England. He married his cousin, Elsye, daughter of the late Lt.-Col. Meyrick Bankes of the Highland Light Infantry and widow of Capt. F. L. Campbell, R.N.—Family Herald and Weekly Star.

Much Unclaimed Money.

Sums lying in Canadian banks to the credit of individuals who have not claimed them amount to well over three quarters of a million dollars. The statement to the end of the year 1912, as made to the Government by Canadian banks, was issued in Ottawa recently, and shows the following unclaimed sums: Unpaid dividends $2,921, unclaimed balances $775,164, unpaid drafts or bills of exchange $53,184.

The largest unclaimed balances are in the hands of the Montreal City and District Savings Bank, which is credited with $134,313. The Bank of Montreal comes next with $112,642. Others are: Bank of British North America, $84,837; Union Bank, $71,228; Bank of Hamilton, $55,971; Canadian Bank of Commerce, $50,440; Royal Bank, $47,501; Bank of Nova Scotia, $25,243; Banque Nationale, $25,298; Quebec Bank, $20,057; Merchants Bank, $19,125; Imperial Bank, $18,431; Bank of Ottawa, $16,930; Caisse D'Economic, $13,794; Molsoms Bank, $12,800; Bank of New Brunswick, $9,672; Banque d'Hochelaga, $8,640; Home Bank, $8,689; Dominion Bank, $7,163; Bank of Toronto, $4,669; Standard Bank, $4,345; Banque Provinciale, $4,004; Northern Crown, $3,043.

Clark's Earthquake.

Up on Parliament Hill, Ottawa, by reason of the rock foundation to the massive legislative buildings, the shock of the recent earthquakes was most severely felt. And they blamed it all on Dr. Michael Clark, the apostle of British Liberalism from Red Deer. The Alberta farmer-physician had just marched out of the Railway Committee Room and was discussing with characteristic vigor the lethargic inaction of the Borden Administration.

"It would take an earthquake to arouse this Government," he exclaimed. "What is needed is an earthquake."

Scarcely thirty seconds had elapsed before alarmed and excited members were rushing into the corridors, while the buildings throbbed, shook and trembled.

"It's an earthquake!" cried Mr. Cockshutt, as he hurried out, hat in hand.

"And yet scoffers say that Providence doesn't answer prayers," grimly observed Red Michael.

ROMANCE OF RAINY RIVER

How a Young Minister Led His Flock Into a New Country.

It is now several years since the Minister of the Crown Lands Department of Ontario saw standing before him in his office at Toronto one day a young clergyman, who gave the name of Burriss—Rufus A. Burriss. He laid before the astonished minister of crown lands a most amazing proposition: He had settlers who wanted to migrate to the Rainy River district, and he wanted land for them.

The official laughed. "Why, my dear sir," he exclaimed, "I have been connected with the Government for twenty years and this is the first time anyone ever asked for land in that country. I guess you don't know what the Rainy River region is like, do you?"

But the young minister insisted and in the winter an advance party started along Lake Superior to spy out the country.

Leaving the lake and driving over the ice of the Rainy River, the party at length reached, after many days, the region which the Government agreed to give to the settlers.

There was not much promise of a fertile farming country, a wooded region, a forest primeval, a virgin growth, and all shrouded in snow; but the minister located his claim, his 20,000 acres of wilderness, and figuratively drove his stakes. The Minister of Crown Lands sent his surveyors in and by May 10 the land was all lined out and soon the first consignment of poor men, land hungry, reached Rat Portage. The crowd had now increased far beyond the original 15. There was a steamer ride the 200 miles on the lake and river that lately the Minister had traversed on the ice, a wonderful week's journey and then — Back to the Land!

There were no dilletantes, those prospectors, those hardy settlers. They were used to work. The only difference was that theretofore they had toiled for their landlords, to pay off mortgages on farms they hope to own. Now each man received his land free. Everything he did was for himself. When he had his farm cleared, it was his. Log huts went up; men and women set to work.

The 20,000 acres was allotted quickly. Followed more settlers. The Minister of Crown Lands gave another 20,000 acres, then another, then another, until 80,000 acres of Rainy River lands were under tillage.

That was the beginning. The end is not yet. The land brought forth abundantly. Nature smiled on the efforts of the settlers. The virgin soil yielded its increase.

To-day, when you enter the Rainy River country you see the log cabins, the settlers' first homes and by them modern houses, their present abodes, constructed on the lines of the houses back home. You see a farm that cost a man 50 cents and a cabin that cost 40 cents, in which a man sheltered himself, his wife and four children in the early days. Think of it! A farm and a home for less than a dollar, ye who are paying rent in the cities or trying to lift mortgages on land in the thickly settled, much tilled regions!

Human interest is high in a new country. It is a land of real men and women. It is the great testing ground of character. He who lacks it, he who has a yellow streak, he who is a quitter is soon found out here. There is no room for the idle, for the man who seeks support at the hands of others. There is the helping hand for the man who helps himself, but scant sympathy for him who sits back.

The region is called the Christian Colony. The young clergyman who deemed one pulpit too narrow a field, here has his hands full. His is the satisfaction of having started hundreds on the way to prosperity. Three thousand poor families are thrifty and well-to-do by reason of his efforts. The log church and the log school house followed quickly in the wake of the first cabins. Now there are more than 75 rural school houses and many churches. In lands and chattels the once penniless people who were fostered by this good man are now worth millions of dollars in newly-created wealth.

Boy Shoots Huge Eagle.

Master John Fleming, 13 years old, son of Mr. Peter Fleming, Larkins, Ont., proved himself a hero recently by coming to the rescue of one of his father's geese which was doing battle in the barnyard with a giant eagle. The young lad was attracted to the scene by the squaking of the geese, and seeing the peril of one of them held firmly in the talons of a monster bird, he hurriedly made for the house and returning with a musket shot the intruder before it had time to make away with its prey. Several farmers in the district had seen the eagle at times throughout the winter, but never at close range. From tip to tip of wings it measured 5 feet 9 inches.

Can You Believe This?

E. Cardinal, a Port Arthur, Ont., chicken farmer, reports that from his Buff Orpington pen recently he procured an egg which was about the size of an ordinary goose egg and somewhat irregular in shape. On being broken the large egg was found to contain a white and two yellows or yolks. There was inside, also, a smaller egg, perfectly formed, and with a hard shell.

A Lucky Fisherman.

The most successful fishermen of Trout Cove, Nova Scotia, is Reuben Raymond, boat fisherman, who in one set of his net off the Nova Scotia coast caught $80 worth of fish, and earned $400 in two weeks.

Has Valuable Fiddle.

An old violin purchased by Charles Rundle of Tempo, Ont., many years ago for a nominal sum and now believed to be a Stradivarius was submitted recently to the judgment of Jan Kubelik, the violinist, who was giving a recital in London, Ont., and the latter, after playing on it, declared it was one of the finest he had ever handled. While he would not put a value on it, he thought it possibly might be worth as high a figure as $3,500. The owner of the instrument was advised to send it for examination to Hill of London, Eng., whose judgment in such matters is considered to be unequaled.

Bursary For Bible Reading.

J. A. Culverwell, of Port Hope, has provided funds for a nine-year bursary at Trinity College School for "the study and practice of reading in public." The principal object is the promotion of expressive, intelligent and effective reading of a chapter of the New Testament.

HERR FRANCIS KOSSUTH WEDS

Romantic Marriage Crowns Adventurous Career of Patriot.

The adventurous life of Herr Francis Kossuth, the Hungarian patriot, who for the last fifty years has been one of the most notable men in European politics, has been crowned by a romantic marriage on a bed of sickness.

His bride is the Countess Benyorsky, the widow of an old friend. It was on November 24 that the betrothal of Herr Kossuth to the Countess was announced.

Herr Kossuth has been seriously ill for some time, and for some days his condition gave rise to grave anxiety. Realizing this, the aged stateman summoned the Burgomaster, and his civil marriage to the Countess was celebrated at his bedside.

Patriotism has been the keynote of the bridegroom's life, which, following the lead of his father, the great Louis Kossuth, he has devoted to the service of his country.

From his childhood he has lived in an atmosphere of excitement and romance. In 1849, when Francis was eight years of age, his heroic father led the Hungarian rising against the rule of Austria. The boy was taken prisoner by the Austrians, and for some time was kept in the fortress of Presburg. When he was liberated he was still a child, but was exiled from Austria. First he went to his father, who was ill in Asia Minor. From there his father took him to England, where he was given a good education, studying engineering at London University. For two years he worked as a practical engineer on the Forest of Dean Railway. Then he went to Italy, and rose to distinction as a civil engineer, and he had some part in the building of the Mont Cenis Tunnel. On the death of his father in 1894 he was asked by his countrymen to bring the dead man's body back to Hungary, and he granted the request.

Herr Kossuth was shortly after elected to Parliament, where by his eloquence and ability as an organizer he earned the position of leader of the party of Independence and spokesman of the revolutionary movement in Hungary.

His single-minded and whole-hearted fight for the Hungarians gained him great popularity in the country, and when the Hungarian Parliament resisted the encroachment on constitutional rights, Kossuth was elected leader of the coalesced parties forming the majority of the House.

In 1896 he was appointed, by the monarch who had exiled him when a child, to a position in the Cabinet, and in a little while he was leader of the House. He was invited by the Austrian Emperor whom he had opposed so bitterly, to come to Vienna and discuss with him possible means of settling differences between Austria and Hungary. His wide travels in Europe earned for him the title of "The European." He writes six languages fluently, and is an author of distinction. His first wife was an Englishwoman.

A PLUCKY WOMAN.

Mlle. Marvingt Displayed Marvellous Courage In Accident.

A Paris paper has asked certain prominent women whether or not a woman possesses the physical and moral aptitude necessary to run an automobile. The Dowager Duchess d'Uzes has no doubt in the matter. She thinks a woman can fulfil every requirement, and she herself was the first woman to obtain a chauffeur's license. Mme. Lesueur, the authoress, is of the opposite opinion. She has ridden and driven horses, but says that "between women and horses there exists sympathy, comprehension or understanding, which, of course, cannot be created between woman and machines."

But no better illustration of what a woman is capable of doing can be found than the case of Mlle. Marie Marvingt, the woman aviator. She is just recovering from an aeroplane accident which happened on Dec. 12.

She had been taking her daily flight from Rheims when a fog came on. Choosing a suitable field, she landed safely, but her aeroplane had already run a few yards along the ground when the front part stuck in the soft ground. The machine turned a complete somersault and buried her beneath the frame. After a few attempts to get free she had to resign herself to waiting for help. Her aviation helmet was completely driven into the ground and her face was dripping with blood.

The plucky aviator could hardly breathe but was able with her left hand to scrape away the earth from about her mouth. After what seemed interminable moments she heard a voice say:

"Oh! Poor fellow, he's dead!"

She cried as loud as she could:

"She is not dead, but hurry up and, above all, don't smoke!"

She was drenched with petrol and a light brought near would have meant being burned to death. An automobile carried her to the nearest village, where, in the absence of a doctor, she directed the bandaging operations herself. It was her first aeroplane accident in the two years she has been a pilot.

But Mlle. Marvingt is an exception. She has studied law and medicine, singing, painting, and sculpturing, besides which she has also appeared on the stage.

In 1907 she swam through Paris, seven and a half miles, in 4 hours 8 minutes, beating Miss Annette Kellerman's time by an hour. She has climbed all the heights of the Alps, has won innumerable prizes for skiing and bobsleighing. She shoots and fishes and has won a shooting prize at 300 yards under army rules. As a cyclist, she has ridden in the Nancy-Milan, Nancy-Toulouse, Nancy-Bordeaux races.

This accomplished sportswoman rides both astride and sidesaddle, and holds a pilot's license for spherical ballooning and for aeroplanes. She was one of the first women aviators, being a pupil of Latham. Her license dates from 1909, which makes her a veteran in flying.

She has crossed the North Sea in a balloon, taking with her a passenger, M. Garnier, who was making his first ascent. They left the Nancy exhibition at 11 o'clock in the morning on October 26, 1909, and had an excellent trip until night came. At 11.30 in the evening they reached the Zuyder Zee. Mlle. Marvingt continued and passed the North Sea, with only five sacks of ballast remaining. At 9.30 in the evening the rain came on and the balloon, weighed down by moisture, touched the water.

Lt.-Col. H. C. Rogers, is Decendant of Major Rogers.

Lieut.-Col. Henry Cassady Rogers, formerly postmaster here, now of Victoria, B.C., who is one of the leaders in the movement to organize a fitting celebration of the hundredth and thirtieth anniversary of the arrival in Canada of the United Empire Loyalists, is a descendant of one of the most famous of the United Empire Loyalists. His grandfather was David McGregor Rogers who was a United Empire Loyalist, and came to this country from New England with the first loyalists after the termination of the revolutionary war in 1778. He settled first on the Bay of Quinte, afterwards moving to Presque 'Isle, and finally to the township of Haldimand (now the village of Grafton), where he opened the first postoffice between Kingston and York (now Toronto), and where three generations of the family have been born. The father of David McGregor Rogers was the famous Col. James Rogers of "Rogers Rangers," who was a man of note during the eighteenth century—best known as Major Rogers. He first became famous as a scout in the Indian troubles. His exploits furnished Fenimore Cooper with the ground-work of his tales of the "Leather-Stocking," "The Last of the Mohicans," and "Horrors of the Backwoods." He was commissioned to raise and organize a regiment of scouts during the French war. This corps rendered valuable service at the taking of Canada from the French, particularly in the Lake Champlain campaigns and with Amherst's army.

After the capitulation of Canada at Montreal, Major Rogers was entrusted by the commander-in-chief with the arduous task of proceeding west from Montreal, and taking possession in the name of the King of Great Britain of the western country including Forts Frontenac (Kingston), Niagara, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Sault Ste. Marie, etc., as far as the Mississippi in the west and Lake Superior in the north. The Rangers were re-organised on the breaking out of the rebellion of 1775, as "The Queen's Rangers," but many of the leading spirits of the old corps joined the rebels.

The present Lieutenant-Colonel Rogers is a son of the late Lieut.-Col. James C. R. and Maria Rogers, the latter a daughter of the late Senator Burnham. His wife was the eldest daughter of Dr. W. H. Burritt, of Smith's Falls, Ont., and is also of U. E. loyalist descent. Lieut.-Col. Rogers for some years carried on an extensive lumbering, mining and general mercantile business at Peterboro, with his brother-in-law, Harry Strickland, and has been postmaster of Peterboro. He has the military taste of his family and has been in the militia since his sixteenth year. He commanded the Peterboro Rifles during the Fenian Raids, and later was a major in the 57th Regiment. He organised an independent troop of cavalry which now forms "C" squadron of the 3rd Regiment, Prince of Wales' Canadian Dragoons. He retired in 1899, but was recalled two years later to command a cavalry brigade. He is much interested in Canadian history and some years ago was elected president of the Peterboro Historical Society and of the Toronto Historical Society.—Family Herald and Weekly Star.

Repartee In Marquette.

Hon. Dr. Roche (one of the two medical men in the Borden Government, Hon. Dr. Reid being the other), in addition to being one of the best platform speakers on the Conservative side, has a fund of stories with which he invariably regales his audiences. A past master himself of the gentle art of dealing with hecklers, Dr. Roche tells of one meeting in his constituency of Marquette, presided over by a chairman who had a long silvery shock of hair. The chairman made a very long speech, introducing the guest of the evening, and the audience got rather weary. Finally a heckler at the rear of the hall persisted in calling out to the speaker "Get your hair cut." The persistency of this interruption threw the meeting into confusion, and at length singling out his tormentor, who was a rough-looking customer, the chairman silenced him by remarking: "My friend at the rear of the hall wants me to get my hair cut. All I can say is that if I had a face like his I would get my throat cut."

Nothing more was heard of that particular interrupter.—Toronto Saturday Night.

Wind Caused Duck's Death.

The wind was directly responsible for drowning a wild duck at the eastern gap in Toronto harbor during the heavy storm of the first of March. The bird, fighting manfully in the water to get to a sheltered place, was blown up on a cake of ice, and lashed there so firmly by the wind that it was unable to move. Every wind that came heaped water on to the poor bird, and it died. The keeper of the storm signal station said it was the first time he had ever seen a duck helpless in water, and that the wind had so overpowered it that it was absolutely helpless.

Points Out the Advantages of Being Philosophical.

By M. Quad.

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

My neighbor ranted against Dame Fortune when some thief stole the pig from his pen, but in ten minutes I had shown him that had he kept and fed the animal another six months his bacon would have cost him 88 cents per pound.

---

I had beaten the street car conductor out of my fare when conscience upbraided me, and I went to headquarters to turn in the nickel and promise honesty the rest of my days. When I arrived they had just bounced the conductor for knocking down $7 in one day! It is as bad to be too honest as too dishonest.

I have made a great many friends during my life. Each and every one of those friends has borrowed money of me and found it more convenient to drop the friendship than to return the loan. Moral.—Always be dead broke.

Medical men say that laughter should always go with a meal, especially breakfast, as it is an aid to quick digestion. I have tried to put their advice in practice, but made a lamentable failure. If there is a husband that can make his wife laugh at the breakfast table by telling her that if he could have filled his four flushes the evening previous he would have been $50 ahead of the game instead of that much out I ask him to communicate with me by telegraph and be sure to mark his telegram "Rush!"

My friend Jones remarked to me the other day that grafting had almost ceased to be a profession. I looked into the matter rather closely and discovered that Jones was wrong. It isn't that grafting is becoming a lost art, but that the grafters are covering their tracks with more care than formerly.

"Mr. Doe," I said somewhat sternly to my neighbor the other morning, "the crying of your baby last night kept me awake for hours."

"Yes, it had the colic," he replied.

"But couldn't you have stopped it before you did?"

"Sure, Uncle, but had I done so my wife would have at once begun playing the piano!"

Few of us know when we are well off.

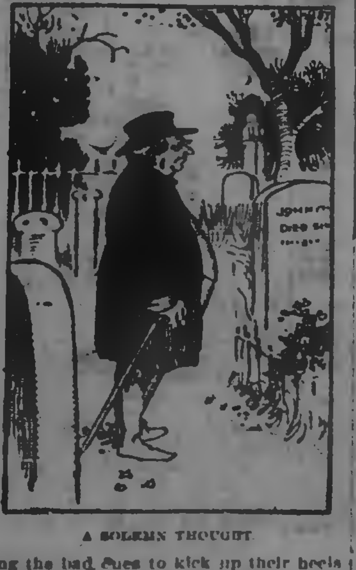
A solemn thought connected with a stroll through a cemetery is that all the honest and upright and noble minded men seem to have died off, leaving the bad ones to kick up their heels and live on. An epitaph, like the weather prediction in a family almanac, cannot go wrong.



A SOLEMN THOUGHT.

---

"Lisha," said my good wife as she dug me in the ribs the other night, "I hear a noise!"

"So do I. It is a rooster crowing."

"But this is right downstairs!"

"Then we haven't got to get up in the cold to search the back yard."

"But it's a burglar, I tell you!"

"It may be a cat."

"Do you want to be murdered in your bed?" she demanded.

"No, but I object to going down cellar to be murdered."

"If you don't get up I will!"

She tumbled out of bed, and after listening at the head of the stairs for a moment she whispered:

"I thought I heard a burglar cough!"

"And he surely heard you jump out of bed. He having given himself away by a cough and you having jumped, he will follow the rule of two and skin out. Come back to bed."

In the morning we found that it was simply the cat eating the canary that had caused the commotion. Half our troubles would be nothing if we understood them.

Mechanism of the Ear.

The human ear is a delicate piece of mechanism. That which we ordinarily designate as the "ear" is, after all, only the mere outer porch of a series of winding passages which lead from the world without to the world within. Certain of these passages are filled with liquid, besides having membranes stretched like parchment curtains across the corridor at different points. When a sound wave strikes these they are turned into vibrations and made to tremble like the head of a drum does when struck with a stick or with the fingers. Between two of these parchment-like curtains a chain of minute bones extends, which serves to tighten or relax the membranes and communicate vibrations to them. In the innermost place of all a row of white threads called nerves stretch like the strings of a piano from the last point from which the tremblings reach, passing thence inward to the brain.

Made a Bad Break.

"I think I must have made a bad break last Sunday," mused the fellow who seldom goes to church.

"You see, I got an alumni catalogue of my old school, and in looking through it I found that one of my classmates was the pastor of a Cleveland church. So I called him up, and he said that he was still preaching and that if I wanted to meet him I should come to church on the following Sunday morning, which I did.

"He introduced me to his wife, and she took me into the pew with her. Well, during the sermon I got very drowsy. I was nodding in the middle of the sermon, and the parson's wife touched me on the elbow.

"'You seem sleepy,' she whispered. 'Try some of my smelling salts.'

"'No; thank you,' says I; 'I'd rather sleep!'"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Three Ages of Crime.

"There are three ages of criminals," said Lecoq, the detective.

"The first age, from seventeen to thirty, is the daring and desperate one. Highway robbery, bludgeonings and holdups, murder for a few dollars—this is the worst age, a cruel, wicked and supremely foolish age.

"The second age, from thirty to forty-five, is the cautious middle one. Burglaries that are safe and easy, forgery, counterfeiting—in a word, crimes demanding neither violence nor pluck—that is the second age.

"The third age, from forty-five to seventy, is the executive one. The criminal is now a gang leader. He does not act himself, but he plans and commands crimes of magnitude, train robberies, bank robberies, kidnapings and the like."—New York Tribune.

Why She Believed.

"What sort of a chap is that fellow that has been calling upon you?"

"He's the luckiest fellow in the world."

"How do you know?"

"He told me so."

"And do you believe all he tells you?"

"I believe that, for he told me it just after I had promised to become his wife."—Houston Post.

WORK CHEERFULLY.

Then Even Wash Day Will Lose Its Terrors For You.

If we take an interested mind and a brave heart with us to work there is nothing about the household round that should worry or dismay us. The stairs that are so much grumbled at give a much needed series of strengthening movements, for as we journey up and down so many times a day the hip muscles are exercised and the calf and thigh muscles made strong and trustworthy. Bedmaking and turning mattresses will improve the housewife's figure, exercising the muscles of the abdomen as well as those of the arms and shoulders. These are movements specially helpful to the woman afraid of growing uncomfortably and unbecomingly stout.

The homely washtub is not to be despised. Washing is real good exercise and enjoyable, too, but if you mean to aim for health and beauty be very sure that your washing bench and your ironing board are at exactly the right height. They must be high enough to insure that the greatest muscular exertion is brought to bear upon the shoulders and upper part of the back rather than across the small of the back.

Turning the wringer will give yet another exercise, and if a machine of good make is chosen mangling clothes should not be too heavy a task for the normally healthy woman. It should, indeed, be beneficial in strengthening the muscles of the forearm.

Standing all day long at an ironing table would in time make crooked the straightest young back, but here again we are to use a sane moderation. Finish off a reasonable number of garments each week rather than plunge into a "big wash" every fortnight, toiling and moiling over ironing till more than half the week is gone. Never attempt too much, and if your back begins to feel weary do not scorn to sit down at your ironing board while you press some of the smaller things, such as handkerchiefs or lace bows.

Even cooking may be found to be a useful exercise. Stooping to look in the oven, reaching down a plate from a shelf, carrying things to and from the pantry, manipulating the rolling pin and potato masher, turning the meat or vegetable chopper, beating eggs, stooping to take things out of the refrigerator and the many other movements required all have a value in developing the muscles.

All these tasks we have been enumerating are good for nerves if you would but believe it. See that your home is well ventilated, and always lift your mind above any thought or hint of drudgery. Keep the work in its right proportion to the rest of life, and it can have no power to make a drudge of you. Never let housework usurp the place of higher things.

COMFORTABLE FOOTWEAR.

Common Sense Should Be Used In the Selection of Shoes and Stockings.

Stockings should be half a size large to accommodate the foot as it spreads with the weight upon it, and for the same reason the shoe should be of pliable material. Black in both hosiery and shoes gives the best effect, but since colors are in vogue it is wise to compromise on plain colors and plain weaves.

For those whose feet are irritated by silk there are cotton footed silk stockings. White footed hose are preferable to either. All cheaper grades of hosiery should be washed in soda and water before being worn.

Shoes properly fitted will hold the feet in a firm grasp with the pressure uniformly distributed. The sole will be just broad enought to serve as a foundation. The heel will be of moderate height and placed beneath the end, not the middle, of the foot. A run down heel is unpardonable—and unsafe.

It is a mistake to buy shoes longer and narrower than the foot in order to make the latter appear slender, for the ball of the foot, where there is greatest breadth, is forced out of place and into the narrowing toe. It is equally a mistake to wear shoes too large, for the shifting about of the foot will cause callouses and blisters. Shoes, like other apparel, should fit so perfectly that the wearer is not reminded of their presence.

For Elderly Women.

The middle aged woman who would still look youthful must keep her heart merry and young. She must refrain from indulgence in imaginary ills, woes and wrongs and a fondness for too much self analysis and introspection.

Look at life in its true proportions, face troubles bravely, allow nothing to dim your courage, and you will find that beauty remains far into old age and that there is no regret for vanished youth.

Found In the Ice

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.

On the 7th day of October, 1852, the ship Princess left Australia with a cargo of wool and other articles valued at $250,000. She had in her treasure room gold in dust, bars and coin aggregating $1,200,000. She was never heard from.

In June, 1868, eighteen years after the loss of the Princess, I was one of the crew of the Boston whaler Talisman, which was trying the cruising ground on the south of Cape Horn. We had had a fair run of luck when we got a gale from the north which lasted for four days and nights without a break. This drove us away south among the ice, and on a dozen different occasions the ship was within a hair's breadth of being cast away or overwhelmed. After the fourth day of the gale there was a calm lasting thirty hours. During this interval the Talisman lay between two monster icebergs, with her boats down and ready to tow her out of the way should they close in on her. Then we got a strong breeze from the east.

Sometimes we lay moored to a berg for several hours; again we were pounding among the great cakes of ice, which threatened every moment to crush in her sides. We had been drifting to the southeast for three days when the breeze fell and left us on a heaving sea, with a monster iceberg about two miles away to the south.

The ship had thus far sustained little damage, but the crew were exhausted with the hard work and constant vigilance. The men were given an all day's rest, and no incident occurred until late in the afternoon. The mass of ice had a front a mile long on our side, with an average height of 300 feet. What its width was we could not say. We were astonished to see smoke rising from the far side of it. No one doubted that it came from a fire lighted by shipwrecked sailors, who had caught sight of the Talisman and were making her a signal.

The third mate and three men were ordered off in one of the whaleboats to investigate, and I was one of the three selected. We took with us a breaker of fresh water, a bottle of rum, bread, meat, blankets, a boat compass and a lantern, and darkness fell as we pulled away from the ship.

We pulled to pass the western face of the berg and found it to be about half a mile long. As we reached its southern limit and turned to the east we caught sight of a small fire on a ledge about 100 feet above the water. As soon as we got up to it the mate hailed and was promptly answered that there were two men on the ledge, one of whom had a broken leg. Thereupon I was ordered to remain by the boat and hold on, while the mate and the two men landed on the berg and began making their way up to the ledge.

Twenty minutes later the berg split, a fog settled down, and with it came a breeze. I did not know what to do, and so I laid in my oar, wrapped myself in a blanket and sat down in the bottom of the boat. You will think it queer that I fell asleep under the circumstances, but that is exactly what happened, nor did I wake until daylight came again. Then I found myself in an ice floe which was drifting to the south at the rate of about three miles an hour.

I am not at all sure how long I drifted, but the general direction was south, and the time was at least four days and nights. On the morning of what was probably the fifth day I awoke to find that the floe had ceased drifting, and a quarter of a mile to the east of the boat was a mass of ice.

It was a mile or more in length and not over thirty feet high and looked more like a wall resting on the water. The ice was yellow and dirty, with rocks embedded in it here and there, and I have no doubt that a good portion of it was the lower part of an iceberg which had turned turtle. Between me and the wall was a jumble of ice, over which it seemed impossible to make my way, but as soon as I had broken my fast I set out to try it. It took me a full hour to make that quarter of a mile, but at length I reached the wall and found that I could easily get up its rough side. When I reached the top it was to discover that the mass of ice was almost a cube, with a great hollow in its surface to remind one of the crater of a volcano.

In the center of this hollow lay a mass of wreckage, and after a long stare, half believing my eyes deceived me, I slid down and began investigation. No one will ever see a more curious sight. A space several hundred feet square was covered with broken masts, yards, beams, planks, boards, ropes, blocks and sails. A large ship had here suffered destruction. Just how I could not determine, but it seemed to me as if a great body of ice had fallen on it as she rested in the crater. No other force unless gunpowder could have so wrecked and scattered her about. Some of the wreckage bore the name Princess.

Late in the afternoon the floe began to break up, and I got back to my boat. By night there were lanes of water in every direction, and a strong breeze set in from the south. I drifted to the north all that night and all the next day, but as the second night came on I was picked up by the Scotch whaler Jeannette, which had captured and was cutting in a whale, and months later was landed at her home port.

OLD NIAGARA.

Its History Is the History of Early Upper Canada.

"It has been said that to know the history of Niagara is to know much of the history of Upper Canada. Niagara was at different times a legislative, military, literary, commercial, naval, educational and social centre; the centre, too, of the Indian trade and the refuge of escaped slaves. A town that has been the scene of a battle, that had the first Parliament, two of the first churches, the first library, the first newspaper, the first agricultural society in Ontario, may lay claim to the interest of the historian, says Miss Janet Carmochan in her new book, "The History of Niagara." Here lived for a time two Governors—Simcoe and Brock—who, if not possessed of the eloquence or literary skill of a Dufferin or a Lorne, showed much zeal, wisdom, courage and ability in the trying hour of need. A town that has been in the hands of the enemy, and again a heap of smoking ruins, and phoenix-like rising from its own ashes, and now—the quiet beauty of lake and river, forest and plain, rich vineyards and orchards of luscious fruit, may surely justify us, like St. Paul, who boasted that he was an inhabitant of "no mean city," in rejoicing that we have a goodly heritage of which we may justly feel proud.

Generations to come will flock to Niagara as one of the shrines of Canada. It is inseparably connected with the political, military and social history of the country. Its seed of settlement was sown by the Loyalist in 1777. It was the first capital of Upper Canada and a considerable hamlet before Toronto was founded. Under its elms and in its rude Navy Hall the first Legislature of the Province gathered and made laws for a very crude pioneer territory. A little later it was constantly, for three years, in the danger zone during the war of 1812. Its streets resounded to the tread of Simcoe, law-maker, and of Brock, administrator and soldier. Out of its barracks rode Brock on his last and lone, but spectacular, dash to Queenston Heights and death.

Nearly a century and a half earlier La Salle, an adventurer of high and romantic courage, passed this way en route to the centre of the continent. As early as 1725 old Fort Niagara, on the American side, was founded by the French, and at different periods flew the same flag as the defences on what is now the Canadian side. At times the two towns have engaged in deadly conflict, as during the battle of Queenston Heights, and in 1813, when the Canadian town was under American occupation for seven months. During the war it suffered severely, its principal buildings being nearly all burned. Here have tarried likewise men of peace, such as the poet, Thomas Moore, and Addison, the first missionary, for 37 years the rector of St. Mark's. The Duke of Kent, Joseph Brant, Col. Butler and other men of action with important niches in history have also lived for a time at Niagara. William Kirby, the author of "The Golden Dog," an imperishable story of French Canada, also made Niagara his home, dying there a few years ago.

It will not do to speak of Niagara as being celebrated solely for history-making in the past nor peach culture in the present. Many of its early residents were men and women of culture and refinement, as well as patriotism and daring. Miss Carnochan relates with pride the vicissitudes of the lamp of knowledge during the war of 1812, when the flickering flame was all but extinguished by the gusts of passion and revenge that swept the land. An old yellow book which the patient author has unearthed is a record of the Niagara Library from 1800 to 1820. Here is revealed the fine taste of these early settlers for good reading, and here may be found an echo of the gusto with which they greeted each new volume from the pen of Sir Walter Scott, fresh from the press.

Closed for Good.

In the Province of Nova Scotia the right of cattle to run at large depends on whether the district is an "open" or "closed" one, which is determined by a vote of the inhabitants.

A few years ago a rather trivial case was tried in that province where the claim was for damages by trespassing cattle, and the question was whether Smith's Point was an "open" or "closed" district.

Although the damages amounted to only $8 the case was carried to the Supreme Court of the province, where the judgment was delivered by Judge Graham, who closed his decision with the following words:

"The appeal must be allowed. The defendant will have to pay the female plaintiff the damages assessed contingently by the judge, viz., eight dollars, and I suppose all the costs. The appeal book contains thirty pages, and I fear that the costs will make Smith's Point to him, as in Swiveller's case, a 'closed district,' as it was never closed before."—Saturday Night.

Lord Kitchener's Way.

Lack of funds was upon one occasion the excuse brought forward by a head of department as the reason for not proceeding with certain public works at Cairo. Lord Kitchener, with characteristic terseness, scrawled across the official document in blue pencil, "Find the money." Needless to say, the money was found.

Another time when the question of making a roadway from Cairo to Helouan, a distance of fourteen miles, was broached Kitchener asked the responsible engineer if the road could be completed by a certain date—May 1. He was told it could scarcely be done.

"But is it possible?" asked Kitchener.

"It's possible, but"—

"Very well, then," came the Napoleonic reply, "I shall drive my car from Cairo to Helouan over that road on May 1." And he did.

Flanagan's Boy

Story of St. Patrick's Day

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"Larry will never be coming home," sighed Dennis Flanagan as he looked out into the March twilight. "It's five years since he went away to seek his fortune, Molly, and do you never wonder what he's found?"

Molly Delaney looked at her uncle through unshed tears.

"I am always wondering that, Uncle Dennis," she answered.

"Light the lamp, Molly, and read his latest letter," requested Dennis.

When the lamp was lighted it disclosed a comfortable sitting room, clean and cozy and warm. It showed Dennis in his big rocking chair, his helpless rheumatic feet propped on a stool. Lovely Molly Delaney, with her misty black hair and her Irish blue eyes, sat down at the table and opened the worn envelope that contained Larry Flanagan's letter and read:

Dear Father—Although it's five years since I left you with high hopes in my heart that my returning would be soon, I fear that I must wait a little longer before seeing your dear face again and feeling the hearty clasp of your hand. Gold is an alluring jade. She has led me a pretty chase in this bleak, cold country, and now she is only just in sight. Please God, when next I write it will be to tell you that I have struck it rich, that I am coming home to buy a grand house for you and Molly, and we will all be happy together. Remember that I promised Molly that when I came home I'd bring her a bunch of emerald shamrocks, the real jewels, and now they are just within my reach. A boy from Hazenville is due here tomorrow, and with his coming I expect to hear direct news from you both. With love from your dutiful son, LARRY.

Molly lifted her eyes and looked across the table at Dennis Flanagan.

"Uncle Dennis, I'm afraid that Larry will never come home," she whispered.

The old man lifted a tremulous hand.

"Hush, child; I've a feeling that Larry will come back to us. I had a dream last night. I thought there came a knocking at the door and I opened it to see our Larry. Instead of wearing fine clothes and a silk hat, poor Larry was in rags. And instead of pinning a bunch of emerald shamrocks on your bosom, where they'd be out of place on that flimsy cotton gown, my dear, our poor Larry carried a little pot of the living green plant from old Ireland. And then I woke up."

Molly was sobbing softly.

"I don't care how poor he is, Uncle Dennis, if he will only come home to us."

"No more do I, childie," whimpered Dennis.

"Don't sorrow, Uncle Dennis," comforted the girl, slipping to her knees beside him. "Larry will soon come home. If this last quest for gold should prove useless, I can see him turning about and coming back to us. Between the lines of his letter I could read that he was hungering for the ones he had left behind."

"God bless you, daughter," smiled Dennis more cheerfully.

* * * * * * *

The Alaska twilight had fallen swiftly like a dull gray blanket tossed over the frozen world; then a ghostly moon appeared over the eastern mountains and revealed bleak expanses of glistening snow and the dark masses of pine trees.

Under the shoulder of the hill crouched a little cabin, and before the blazing fire on its hearth two young men were sitting. The "boy from Hazenville" had arrived, and Larry Flanagan was listening to his story of home and the home folks.

"And my old father helpless with the rheumatism?" repeated Larry incredulously. "Why, Mike Dolan, the old scout never wrote a word of it to me! But, thank heaven, the railroad stocks will keep him comfortable, but"—

Mike Dolan looked at the big framed man, whose brown hair was graying on the temples and whose handsome face had taken on new lines of doggedness during the past five years. Was it possible that Larry did not know that the little western railroad had blown up and that old Dennis Flanagan's stock was worthless?

"Larry," he interrupted soberly, "didn't you know that the railroad busted and your father lost every penny?"

"You lie!" cried Larry savagely, for he was struck to the heart by the news.

Mike Dolan smiled pityingly.

"It's all true, Larry, and what's more true is that your little cousin Molly is a wonderful girl. When the bad news came the lass opened a millinery shop, and with her clever fingers she certainly has made money hand over fist. She's taken good care of your father, and"—

"Whisht, man," cried Larry in an agonized tone, "I cannot bear to hear any more! Look at me, Mike Dolan! Laugh at me! I came away to make my fortune. I said when I returned I would bring Molly a bunch of shamrock made from emeralds, with diamond dewdrops on 'em, and look at this!" He swept his arm in a gesture that included the four corners of the rough cabin. "Me, still striving to make good that promise, and Molly—sweet little Molly Delaney—not bothering her dear head about emeralds or diamonds, but doing her duty day by day! Laugh at me, Mike Dolan, for I am a blind fool!"

But Mike Dolan did not laugh.

* * * * * * *

On the 17th of March Dennis Flanagan and his niece sat down to supper.

All day long Dennis had listened for the postman's ring at the doorbell, but in vain. There came a newspaper from his old home in County Antrim, Ireland, but beyond that there was nothing. Always before they had received some word from Larry in his faraway home, and, though the delay might be attributed to the mails and the heavy snowstorms reported in the northwest, Dennis was heavy hearted.

"May the blessed saint whose day it is protect him wherever he is!" sighed Dennis as he took a cup of tea from Molly's hand.

"I'm sure we will hear from Larry in the morning," cried Molly hopefully. "Look, Uncle Dennis, at the sweet pot of shamrock I brought home."

Dennis looked at her keenly.

"Molly, lass, and do you not pine for the real emeralds, the jewels that Larry promised?" he asked.

Molly laughed scornfully. Her cheeks flushed rosily, and her blue eyes shone with love for the absent lover-cousin.

"Uncle Dennis, you make me ashamed! Don't you believe I'd rather see a lad who has two green eyes—eyes the color of that bunch of shamrock—than all the jewels in the world? Those emerald eyes of Larry Flanagan's are the only jewels I would wear against my heart!" She hung her head in sudden sweet shame.

Dennis' wrinkled hand was stretched across the table toward her.

"Then, Molly, lass," he whispered, "maybe it'll come all right, for again I dreamed the dream of Larry coming home, poor and needy instead of rich and"—

"Who wanted him rich, Uncle Dennis?" cried the girl hotly. "We were satisfied, you and I. We pleaded with him not to go away and leave us. But there; perhaps it was for the best, but there is an ache behind it all."

"What is that?" Dennis lifted his head.

"The music of the band. The knights o' green are parading. Shall we go down to the corner of the street and watch them, Uncle Dennis?"

"Yes. 'Twasn't so many years ago that I marched with 'em meself on St. Patrick's day, and Larry—I hoped by this time he would be back among them, brave in a green and gold uniform. Help me on with my overcoat, dearie."

So the old man, leaning on the arm of the slender, upright girl, went down to the corner and with swelling heart watched the passing of the gallant knights who marched in honor of the good St. Patrick.

As the tail of the procession passed out of sight Dennis Flanagan and his niece turned toward home.

Molly knew that the old man's heart was far away in Alaska with the beloved son, who was vainly seeking the will o' the wisp, gold.

Tonight gold and the luxuries it brings seemed a tiny thing to the girl with the aching heart.

Again they were seated about the glowing little stove in the sitting room when there came a soft knocking at the door to the porch.

Molly crossed the room and opened the door only to fall back against the lintel white lipped and staring.

"Uncle Dennis, Uncle Dennis, I'm seeing visions!" she sobbed, pointing to the snow covered porch.

Dennis hobbled to her side and saw the form of a man huddled on the door mat.

"Poor soul!" he muttered, turning the face toward the light, and then he fell back, with a startled cry.

"Heavens, Molly, it's our own Larry! 'Tis my dream come true!" he moaned.

Molly recovered her courage when she realized that she was actually needed to allay suffering. She rubbed the cold face with snow and poured a strong stimulant through the white lips. After awhile Larry opened his eyes, smiled, shook himself and slowly staggered to his feet.

When he was safely inside, supported on either side by father and sweetheart, he looked down at them from tender green eyes that were rarely beautiful.

Dennis and Molly looked at him hungrily.

Larry, who had gone forth so gallantly to seek his fortune, who had promised to bring back emerald shamrocks to deck his sweetheart's breast—Larry was shabby and obviously poor and undeniably hungry, for he was thin and pale and worn.

But he was Larry, come home to them once more!

Clasped in his father's trembling arms, Larry soothed the old man's excitement, while Molly hurried to and fro making a pot of strong coffee and broiling a piece of beefsteak.

When she had set the table with the meal Larry's eyes beckoned her across the room, and she came and stood before him.

"Molly, darling," said Larry in a low tone, "my fine promises are for nothing. I come home poorer than when I went away, and the emeralds I was to bring home, lassie"—his voice shook—"are missing. I find you have been as a daughter to my father. My heart is broken with the shame of it all, and"—

Molly's soft hand closed his lips.

"Be still," she smiled at him, while Dennis chuckled in his corner. "Be still, Larry. You have brought home jewels to me worth more than emeralds. Your true eyes of emerald green are my jewels, and your love and constancy shall always grow green in my heart, and the little bit of living green yonder"—she pointed to the shamrock on the table—"is more to me than lifeless gems or cold gold."

While Larry held her close to him Dennis nodded his head at his son.

"'Tis true, lad. A good woman is above rubies, but our little Molly is far above rubies and gold and emeralds."

Slides Blocking Sockeye.

In consequence of construction work of the C.N.R. along the side of Hell's Gate canyon on the Fraser River, slides of rock and gravel have gone into the river at three different places, forming obstructions which have seriously interfered with the ascent of salmon to the spawning beds. In fact at one of the places sockeye salmon cannot negotiate the fall of 15 feet which has been created by the slide.

Unless the obstruction is cleared away the sockeye, the most valuable species of salmon, would not this year reach the spawning beds, with the result that the run of 1918 would be largely wiped out as well as beds for the succeeding four year period thereafter.

Hon. Mr. Hazen has decided to place a sum in the estimates to clear away the obstructions.

Wild Sheep Died of Cold.

Among the wild creatures that suffered most during the recent cold weather were the hardy sheep that swarm on the coasts in the eastern part of Nova Scotia on the archipelago of the thousand islands upon which these inhabitants of the sea coast live. Hundreds of the wild sheep were found upon the shores of the rocky and wooded coasts where they had perished in their attempts to obtain their daily food of seaweed, dulce, eel grass and kelp, their shaggy coats [illegible] mass of solid ice from the spray [illegible] had dashed over them from the sea.

MISS' SPRING GOWN.

This Smart Model Is Designed In Serviceable Whipcord.

RED WHIPCORD DRESS

For the maiden who is spending her first season at high school or boarding school, the charming gown illustrated here will have a strong appeal. It is bright in tint and new in design. The color is tango red, the chemisette, sleeve frills and collar being in fine white embroidery. The wide girdle is of silk. The width of the girdle is noticeable on new gowns. The material used for the gown was whipcord.

Sleeves are of many varieties. Some are set on a very long shoulder line coming well down on the arm; some are of the kimono variety; more recent ones are cut raglan style, and the latter admits of many variations of "set in" forms.

Many of the new sleeves start from the waist line and many are of the bat wing variety.

Modish yokes are to be seen either in the front or the back of the new coats, and the skirts, too, show the same idea in the yoke effect, for many of the tunics are set on the skirt four or five inches below the waist line. These skirt tunics are circular in shape, fitting where they are applied to the skirts.

Revolutionizing Dishwashing.

A household expert says that it is not the time spent in washing dishes, but the time spent in drying them, that makes long the period of every dishwashing.

The same expert tells us that it is not sanitary to rub each piece of china with a dish towel of doubtful cleanliness. For many years hotels have been using the steam drying method with dishes, which unfortunately is not yet available to the modern housewife. A good and inexpensive substitute is to be found in a dish drainer, which consists of a twenty inch square galvanized drain pan and a removable wire rack into which the dishes are placed and which allows them to stand upright. The rack is of various sizes—large for plates, smaller for saucers, with "loops" on which to hang each cup.

When the dishes are washed they are to be placed in the drainer and scalded by pouring over them boiling water. They will then dry of themselves and thus save the housekeeper twelve or fifteen minutes' time on every dishwashing.

New Dustless Broom Covers.

Many housewives do not possess the so called "string" long handled mops for hardwood floors and still cling to the old fashioned method of fastening a more or less disreputable duster over the broom when they use it on the floor, or they may use the broom for cleaning walls in the same fashion. For such women the new broom cover would be of especial interest. It is made of heavy unbleached muslin, while the lower part is made of a good firm quality of cotton plush. The bag is shaped to exactly fit the broom, tied with tapes and slips on and off very easily, and tests have proved that it is much more efficient than the use of the ordinary dustless bag of the common one of canton flannel, especially for cleaning wall surfaces.

Violets For the Table.

Of the value of violets for table decoration on certain occasions nothing need be said, but with all their charm they must be used with great discretion, else the effect is likely to be strangely disappointing. It must never be forgotten that the electric light is extremely trying to all purple flowers, so much so that some of the finest and most expensive violets take on a dull, inky appearance when exposed to it and require very special and difficult combinations to make the best of them. On the other hand, with the right choice of colors and forms, most beautiful and artistic results can be obtained by means of the simplest designs.

Some people tell the truth because they can't think of a suitable lie.

ABOUT LOUIS BOTHA

SOUTH AFRICAN PREMIER IS DOMINANT FIGURE IN UNION.

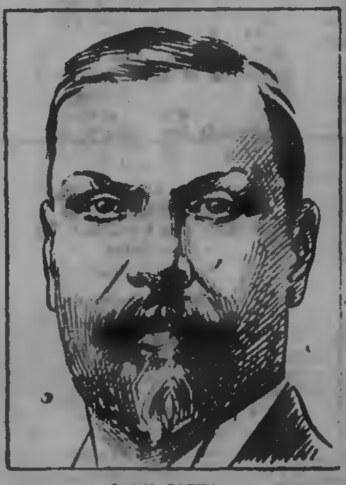
He Is a Much Smaller Man Than One Would Expect and Anything Rather Than a Soldier at First Glance, But His Warlike and Vigorous Personality Soon Makes Itself Apparent, Says Writer.

I first saw Gen. Botha at Stafford House — that noblest of London houses of which the social splendor is in eclipse, says G. W. Smalley, the well-known London correspondent in a recent article. He was standing by the side of his hostess, the Duchess of Sutherland. The first impression was one of disappointment. The duchess is a woman of unusual height, and she towered above him. Her presence and personality would be remarkable anywhere, and at Stafford House on the night of a great party she was a picture set in a suitable frame. Gen. Botha as her companion seemed insignificant. Not only in stature but in manner, in authority, he was her inferior. The duchess had the air of command and her guest had not.

You saw a compact little person with a neat figure and a neat bearing; who looked like anything but the soldier who had beaten Gen. Sir Redvers Buller to his knees at Colenso, and at whose hands upon the British forces in South Africa.

. . . Disaster
Followed fast and followed faster.

His appearance was to me the more disappointing because I remembered Gen. Joubert, whom Gen. Botha succeeded as commander-in-chief of the Boer forces. Gen. Joubert was head of the Transvaal delegation who went to England to settle the convention by which the relations of Great Britain and the Transvaal were finally determined; after Majuba Hill in 1881 and the negotiations which followed. I met these gentlemen at a private dinner. Gen. Joubert was tall, masterful to behold, with a manner of some restraint though in friendly company; well set up, soldierly; whom you could not but think a strong man in all senses of the word. A square forehead, piercing black eyes beneath, strong features, a thick, full, black beard—an appearance altogether patriarchal if not primitive, and primitively dressed in a black frock coat buttoned to the chin. To talk to him was impossible except through one of the secretaries as interpreter; never a satisfactory way. He had, for conversational purposes, no English, no French, no German, not even Dutch; unless the Taal be deemed Dutch. But he was a personage, and the memory of him is vivid after thirty years.



LOUIS BOTHA.

Gen. Botha, without these physical advantages, presently revealed himself to you as a man of whom you had to judge otherwise than by his inches. The soul of the man was in his eyes. The expression of the face was to be sought there; or rather you did not have to seek for it; you could not escape from it. The rest did not much matter. There is no rule of six for great men. Napoleon was a little over five feet and Bismarck a little over six feet. Our Japanese friends think shortness a clear advantage. The heart has not much work to do in pumping blood to the brain. It certainly has not with Gen. Botha, and when you looked into his eyes you forgot the rather disconcerting first impression from a distance and recognized the soldier, the ruler, the warlike leader, of a warlike people; whom you had expected to meet.

A man rather disposed to silence. Even to his hostess, a woman of conversational gifts, he seemed to have just then little to say. They stood silent together; perhaps not caring to talk in the midst of a listening group. He could be fluent enough when he chose, and of English he had a mastery. His sentences were crisp, direct, luminous. He had the power of stating a case which a man versed in action usually has. He used words for the sake of what they expressed. There was something which soon convinced you that here was an incarnate will-power. And that is what they say of him at the Cape; that it is he who is in his Government and in this crisis the driving force. Gen. Smuts, his Defence Minister, is the organizer, but it is Gen. Botha who decides, who takes responsibilities, who governs.

The Composition of Air.

Lord Avebury used to tell a good story of the small child at an East-end school. The class had been having some instruction in elementary science, such as that air is composed of oxygen and nitrogen, and so on. The examiner put this question:

"What is the air composed of?"

"Please, sir," replied the child, "oxygen and cambrigen!"

If a man is truly great he lives to forget about it.

This Cat Roosts.

The unusual sight of a cat "roosting" with poultry at night is daily seen on the farm of J. E. Merrikin, near Wawato, Sask. Brought up from a kitten with the hens it took to "mothering" a brood of young chickens last summer. Every night it used to sleep in the middle of the brood and was much concerned when "her family" began to roost. During the winter, however, pussy was nightly missed until recently, when she was discovered snugly perched between two young hens in the centre of the flock.

The Black Opal

It Brought Good Luck After All.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"So you are going to marry Craveth?" asked Robert Delmore with a note of pain in his voice.

Ina Standish turned her beautiful gray eyes upon the young man and spoke coolly enough, although her heart was wildly beating.

"Yes," she said deliberately. "I am engaged to marry Anthony Craveth. Won't you wish me happiness, Bob?"

"Of course I will, Ina, although you may not need my good wishes. You have attained your ambition—you have made a brilliant match."

"You are unfair—you have no right!" flared the girl hotly. Then, as if reading something in his frank eyes, she drooped her head and murmured: "Forgive me, Bob. You are right, as usual. I am horrid, but I've been poor all my life, and you don't know how I hunger for the good things of the world."

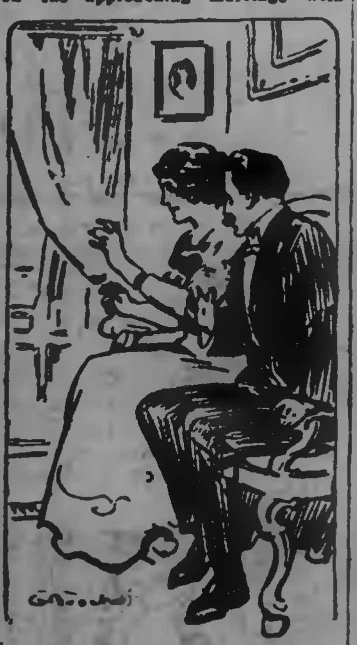
"The luxuries you sigh for are not the really good things of the world," said Delmore gravely. "I know that, for I am a rich man, yet I am supremely unhappy."

"Yet"— She was beginning swiftly when the door opened and a servant announced Anthony Craveth.

He entered, a tall, dark man, with a long, sallow face ornamented by a jetty black mustache and imperial. His shining black hair was brushed smoothly down over his high, narrow forehead in a deep curve.

Anthony Craveth was of French parentage, and he was called fabulously rich.

Now, as he came into the room he darted a sharp glance at Robert Delmore and gave him a cool greeting. Delmore tendered his congratulations on the approaching marriage with Miss Standish, bent low over Ina's white hand and then took his departure.



"I'M AFRAID OF IT!" SHE SHUDDERED.

Ina was very white when she was left alone with her betrothed. Craveth was an ideal lover, and even Ina, who cared little for him, felt the romantic charm of his ardent wooing.

At last he brought from his pocket a small tortoise shell ring case and, opening it, took out a beautiful black opal ring, the stone surrounded with small diamonds.

"This," he said tenderly, taking her left hand in his own, "is the traditional betrothal ring of the Craveths. It was brought from Australia many years ago by an ancestor of mine, and since then it has always been worn by the brides of my house. It is said to bring happiness and good luck to all true lovers."

He slipped the beautiful ring on her slender finger and then kissed her rosy finger tip and the black opal.

"Until you permit me to touch your lips," he murmured reprovingly.

Ina did not appear to hear him. She was staring at the ring with horrified eyes.

"I am afraid of it, I am afraid of it!" she shuddered as she held her hand toward him. "Take it off, Anthony. I cannot wear it."

"Nonsense," laughed the lover, patting her hand. "You are superstitious, as most people are where opals are concerned and especially black opals. They bring good luck to our family."

So, finding that Anthony was so bent upon her wearing the black opal ring, Ina stifled her prejudices and said no more, but that evening when she sat alone in her room she looked at the opal for a long time.

"I am afraid—afraid—afraid!" was her last thought as she went to sleep.

That night Ina had a vivid dream. She thought that she was walking in the fields and that she wore the opal ring on her finger. A shadow darkened the sky, and she looked up to see a great eagle descending in sweeping circles.

She dreamed that he attacked the opal ring on her finger and carried it away with him, leaving her finger torn and bleeding.

Ina awoke, with a little scream, to find that the early morning sunlight was breaking through her east window and that part of her dream had come true, for the opal ring was gone from her finger and the finger was cut slightly, as though the jewel had been roughly torn away.

It was a moment of intense excitement when Ina faced Anthony Craveth and told him about the loss of the black opal ring.

The incredulous smile on his countenance when she described her dream and told of her awakening to discover that the ring had really disappeared brought a strange terror to her heart.

"What is it, Anthony?" she cried sharply. "Why do you look at me like that?"

"Because I am interested in your story," he replied dryly.

"But—but you look as though you scarcely believed me," persisted Ina nervously. "Of course I know that some one must have entered my room and stolen the ring from my finger, but—but you must understand that the entire transaction appeared as a dream to me and nothing more!"

"Of course I never doubt a lady's word," said the man, with a mocking smile. "But, mademoiselle, you understand that as the black opal engagement ring has vanished, so our betrothal is dissolved!" With a deep bow he vanished from the room, leaving Ina heartbroken over his cowardly insinuations.

Ina's father instituted a close inquiry into the matter of the vanished opal ring, and, unknown to the girl, he consulted Robert Delmore, who had long been a friend of the family. Robert had long loved Ina and wanted to marry her, but the girl's ambitious nature had chafed against his slow wooing, and she had accepted the more brilliant Craveth, whose courtship had been as brilliant as it was brief.

Both Mr. Standish and Delmore agreed that it would be an easy matter for a thief to steal the ring from Ina's finger, for her bed was drawn close to an open window, which, although heavily barred, was always open at night. It would have been easy for an interloper to have stood on the little balcony outside the window, thrust his arms between the iron bars, taken Ina's hand and removed the ring.

They decided that that had been the course pursued, for they found muddy footprints on the floor of the balcony and deep indentations on the flower beds beneath, where some one had jumped to the ground.

A few days afterward Ina sat listlessly regarding the advertisements in the daily newspaper. Suddenly a familiar name caught her eye:

> LOST.—Stolen from the residence of Anthony Craveth of Sydney, Australia, a valuable ring set with a large black opal surrounded by diamonds. Large reward and no questions asked for information concerning jewel. Address
>
> MESSRS. LINN & HODDY,
> Counselors, Wharf Street, Sydney.

"How strange!" cried Ina. "Why, the ring was stolen from my hand! What does Anthony mean? Has the loss of the ring driven him out of his senses?"

She put all these questions to her father, who confessed himself bewildered. In turn he showed the clipping to Robert Delmore.

"I'll take this home with me and study it out," said Delmore gravely, and his first visit was to the nearest cable office, where he sent off a long message to Linn & Hoddy at Sydney. While he waited for a reply he made what investigations he could concerning Anthony Craveth and his family history.

To his surprise, he found that the only Anthony Craveth who was known to be living was a native of Australia and had never visited America. The New York Craveths repudiated any acquaintance with the man who had engaged himself to Ina Standish.

Inquiry at Craveth's hotel revealed the fact that the man had paid his bill and departed four days before. No one knew where he was or the reason for his sudden departure. Robert Delmore asked permission to examine the rooms he had vacated, and there he found a pair of mud stained shoes which proved to fit exactly the footprints around the Standish residence.

Two days after he sent the cable message to Sydney Robert Delmore called upon Ina Standish and her father.

"At last I have uncovered the mystery surrounding the disappearance of the black opal ring," he said gravely, "and I must say, Ina, that the ring certainly brought ill luck to you as well as to its real owner."

"Its real owner!" echoed the girl. "Didn't it belong to Anthony Craveth after all?"

"Yes, it belonged to him safe enough, and the tradition concerning it was authentic, but it happens that the man you knew as Anthony Craveth was not that gentleman at all, but a thief who stole the ring from Craveth's home in Australia. The real Anthony Craveth is married and has a family."

Ina shuddered. "I was afraid of it," she sobbed. "But it served me right for being such an ambitious wretch! I didn't really care for Craveth, and"—

Delmore's arms went around her. "I know you didn't, Ina. I knew you loved only one man in the world, and if you had waited another day he would have asked you! But it's all right now, and I'm sorry, dear, that Craveth's black opal brought you such ill luck"—

"Ill luck!" cried Ina, with shining eyes, as she drew away and looked at him adoringly. "To find out my mistake, to be prevented from making a lifetime blunder, to find out that you love me—why, Robert, that's the best luck in the world!"

"So the black opal brought us good luck after all," laughed Delmore tenderly.

Hungarian Road to Slimness.

This is a method for reducing that is practiced in Hungary:

At night just before retiring fill the bathtub with hot water and in this dissolve three pounds of epsom salts. Get into the tub and lie with the body as flat as possible. Keep the hot water faucet open all the time, so that the water never cools. Remain in this bath for fifteen minutes; then take a cold shower or spray.

At first the baths may be enervating. If so, take one every second day. The oftener they are taken the quicker the reduction will be. They are said to be quite harmless, though a bit strenuous at first.

Practically the same method is used for curing a severe cold in the head or chest, except that only two pounds of epsom salts are used, and a very hot drink, preferably a toddy, is drunk before getting into the bath, as it aids in inducing perspiration. After the bath go directly to bed and put on all the covers possible. In two hours the bed will be quite damp from the perspiration, or should be. — New York Sun.

Siberia's Growth.

Omsk, Siberia, has become the outfitting point for an extraordinary migration, estimated at 2,000,000 people annually, which pours into the country bordering on Mongolia. Nothing in Europe or Asia has ever been quite so like the springing up of the great cities of the American middle west as is the growth today of new towns in Siberia. Except that the tide is moving east instead of west, the movement has many parallels to the wonderful migration which won the west for America. There are, however, two striking differences. The first is that the pioneering is comparatively luxurious compared to the American movement, while the natives instead of being swept aside are being absorbed by intermarriage with the settlers. The ten day journey up the Irtish river from Omsk into the promised land is made by steamboats which are the last word in the luxury and convenience of river traffic.—Chicago News.

War and a Window.

In the days when Louis XIV., "Le Grand Monarque," was dazzling Europe his minister, Louvois, was superintending on the king's behalf the building of the palace of the Trianon in the park at Versailles. Louis inspected the buildings one afternoon and declared one of the windows to be out of shape and smaller than the rest. This Louvois denied, and the king had the window measured, with the result that he was proved to be right, and he openly before all the court ridiculed Louvois.

But the minister had his revenge, for, with the angry ejaculation that he would find better employment for a monarch than that of insulting his favorites, he embroiled France by his insolence in a quarrel with the powers, which only ended years later in the peace of Ryswick after a war which entailed the loss of many lives and the expenditure of large sums of money.

English Prizefighters.

There was a time when nearly every prominent prizefighter had a nickname more generally used by admirers than his real name, and some of these were picturesque. William Perry, a famous fighter of early Victorian days, was "the Tipton Slasher." William Thompson, who won the championship in 1835, was known as Bendigo. The Australian mining town was named after him, and, although some of the inhabitants managed to have it rechristened Sandhurst, the new name never caught on. Other nicknames borne by heroes of the ring were "the Gasman," "the Sailor Boy," "the Chelsea Snob," "the Bold Smuggler," "the Great Gun of Windsor" and "the Pride of Westminster."

When Kelvin Slipped.

Great scientist though he was, the late Lord Kelvin sometimes failed to do simple addition or subtraction sums correctly. Once on a blackboard at Glasgow university he made two and two five and, hearing the delighted laughter of the class, hastily altered the five to a three. On another occasion he said "Seven times nine, Mr. Macfarlane, are a hundred and what?" (Pause.) "But, no," continued the scientist; "seven times nine cannot be a hundred and anything, for the square root of a hundred is ten."

Master Bill Astor and His Rather Queer Ambition.

HE WOULD BE A CARPENTER.

Bright Little English Lad Who Is Very Much of an American—Story of a Sparrow's Warning—Riddles to Puzzle the Little People.

Not long ago there arrived in this country a little boy of six who attracted a great deal of attention because of his smiling face and quick wit. He is William Waldorf Astor 2d, and he was born in England. He is the son of Waldorf Astor, a member of the British parliament. His grandfather, William Waldorf Astor, was formerly an American citizen, but some years ago removed to England and became naturalized in that country. The boy's mother was Miss Nannie Langhorne, and she was born in Virginia. So it seems natural enough that the young lad should have American ideas. Just before he sailed back to his English home Bill, as he likes to be called, said that he hoped to be a carpenter when he grew up. "My son," said his mother, "is a real American boy. He is Bill to every one. Nobody calls him anything else, and he doesn't like other names." Last Christmas the boy received a box of tools and since then he has used them at every opportunity. He took them back to England with him, and as all the Astors have been workers, he may yet be a carpenter. But it will be merely play for him. He won't have to earn his living in that way. On his way across the Atlantic Bill passed the time drawing pictures. He explained that he intended to sell them. Bill seems to be a real American, sure enough.

The Messenger Sparrow.

It was one of those summer days in the middle west when, the heat becoming unbearable, the farmer was compelled to retreat from his fields and take refuge from the scorching sun.

He had been resting for some little time when he became conscious of a persistent twittering about his ears. Looking up, he saw a little sparrow, which had evidently come in through the open window.

The farmer tried to drive the bird away, but each time it returned, immediately darting off again and constantly chirping as though in an effort to attract his attention.

At last, his curiosity aroused, he followed the little bird to the doorway. When he looked out he saw, to his astonishment, that a fierce storm was rapidly approaching.

Immediately the farmer drove the cattle under cover. As is their wont, they were apparently enjoying the intense heat that precedes such a storm and were grazing far from shelter.

In the violent storm that followed hail of immense size descended with such great velocity that all the cattle would undoubtedly have perished had they not been sheltered.

You can imagine how thankful the farmer was to the little sparrow for his timely warning.

The Magnet.

Generally speaking, the word magnet is thought to be derived from the word Magnesia, a city of Lydia, in Asia Minor, where the peculiar magnetic properties of the ore of iron known as lodestone were first discovered.

Another authority, however, declares that the word can be traced back to Magnes, the name of a shepherd who was detained on Mount Ida by the iron in his shoes and found himself unable to move.

EASY TRADE.

WHAT profit is in prophesying
And giving timid ones a fit
About the world's impending ending
And all the frills that go with it?
A man could never get the credit
Though into space the world might blow.
There would be no one round to listen
Were he to say, "I told you so."

It's just the very rankest guessing.
There are no schedules for the end,
No printed charts nor tables showing
The dates on which he may depend.
That doesn't feaze the yellow fellow
Who's working at it as a trade.
He doesn't need the book directions.
His prophecies are all homemade.

The truth is that the profit cometh
Not in fulfillment of the claim,
But in the weeks before the smashup
He gets a bit of fleeting fame,
And this enables him to gather
A small, perhaps, but faithful band
Who pay him tithes and give him presents
That cause his fortunes to expand.

It seems an easy way of living,
Requiring neither strength nor skill,
To say that sixteen weeks from Tuesday
We'll get the grand and final thrill.
So many gentlemen are looking
For easy money it is strange
More people are not in the business
And that way picking up their change.

Wanted It Forgotten.

"How much will it cost?" asked the young man.

"Just a dollar."

"All right. Here are two if you will say nothing of the past."

Knew by Experience.

"What's Ezra doing for his rheumatis?" asked Colonel Haystack solicitously as he bit the end of a rye straw.

"He is trying baths."

"Pshaw! I hate to see him wastin' his money. I don't have no faith in them. I tried one onst and couldn't see no results."

The Heated Season.

I long to write a line or two
Of admiration deep.
I've tried to spring a mine or two,
But had to go to sleep.

It's hard to run a rhyme machine
And spin the muse ahead
When summer primes the time machine
And torrid days are sped.

Lofty Reading.

The stars were all the books they had,
A very meager store.
No wonder then the ancient men
Were prone to read them more.
There were no midnight oil compellers

Opportunity.

In one of the old Greek cities there stood long ago a statue. Every trace of it has vanished now. But there is still in existence an epigram which gives us an excellent description of it, and as we read the words we can surely discover the lesson which those wise old Greeks meant that the statue should teach to every passerby.

The epigram is in the form of a conversation between a traveler and the statue:

"What is thy name, O Statue?"

"I am called Opportunity."

"Who made thee?"

"Lysippus."

"Why art thou upon thy toes?"

"To show that I stay but a moment."

"Why hast thou wings upon thy feet?"

"To show how quickly I pass by."

"But why is thy hair so long on thy forehead?"

"That men may seize me as they meet me."

"Why, then, is thy head so bald behind?"

"To show that when I have once passed I cannot be caught."

How They Manage.

APPLICATIONS FOR LICENSES

Commissioners Will Have to Pass on License for Maple Leaf Hotel.

The Board of Liquor License Commissioners will meet Monday night to pass on the applications for renewals of licenses. The only new application is that of Geo. Lipsett, proprietor of the Maple Leaf Hotel in East City.

This license was cut off at the general reduction of licenses and since then the Commissioners have not seen fit to grant a new one.

The Commissioners for East Peterboro met in Havelock today to deal with the application for renewal from Wm. Thompson of the Mount Julian Hotel. This is the only license in the county.

UNCLE OF LOCAL LADY PASSES AWAY AT VANCOUVER

Mr. J. W. Elliott, 53 Olive Avenue, received word yesterday of the death of her uncle Mr. Jas. H. McCall of Vancouver, B.C., which occurred on Thursday. Deceased was a son of the late J. ## LAKEFIELD WILL NOT GIVE PERMISSION

For Extension of G.T.R. Tracks To the Wharf.

It would appear from the results of investigations into the question, the wishes of the Stoney Lake cottagers for a continuation of the G. T. R. line to the Lakefield wharf to facilitate the transportation of campers' effects, cannot be granted through no fault of the Government, although Mr. Dumble was inclined to blame the Government, when he spoke at the meeting of the Board of Trade.

Mr. Dumble was supplied with a copy of the report of the railway commission.

Until the village of Lakefield consents to the extension, nothing can be done.

FIFTH ENGLISH CHURCH IS BORN IN BROWNTON

The English Churchmen of the city are to be congratulated on the successful opening of the fifth Church of England in Peterboro.

The first steps in this direction were taken by Rev. Jas. Price, of St. George's, some weeks ago, and last evening the first service was held.

The attendance was so encouraging that it was decided to establish a permanent mission on Western Avenue, Brownton, and steps will be taken at once to conduct services.

There are many Church of England people in Brownton, and the number is bound to become larger. It is quite a long walk to St. George's Church, and more so to All Saints' or St. John's, and it has been felt for some time that arrangements should be made to provide services near at home.

SPECIAL MEETING FOR BOARD OF TRADE

A special meeting of the executive council of the Board of Trade is called for Tuesday evening, when further arrangements as to the local Board having a booth at the Toronto Ad. Club convention will be completed.

The members evidently realize the importance of having an advertising booth in Toronto during the convention and are putting forth a big effort to make it a success.

In all probability Mr. J. McNabb, who is president of the local Ad. Club here and a hard worker of the Board of Trade, accompanied by President Hall and Secretary Allison, will attend the convention.

DUKE'S VISIT TO ELECTRIC CITY

Probabilities Are That His Stay In City Will be Short

No further word has been received from Ottawa in regard to the visit of the Duke of Connaught to Peterborough on Friday, June 1.

Other cities and towns where His Royal Highness will visit during the month of June are arranging for celebrations and receptions, but in most places the royal representative of King George will remain only for a short time.

It is not expected that the Duke of Connaught will extend his trip to the Electric City more than a couple of hours.

The Reception Committee of the City Council will meet on Tuesday night and will probably make some recommendations for a reception. It is not known whether or not the Duchess and Princess will come.

THE CAUSE OF EARTHQUAKES

Subject for Astronomical Society Meeting Next Thursday.

The April meeting of the Royal Astronomical Society will be held on Thursday evening, April 21st.

There will be a lecture and discussion on the phenomena of earthquakes.

The cause of the recent earthquake that was felt so generally throughout Canada will be explained.

There are many causes of earthquakes, one is, the percolation of water to the lower depths, its disintegration into its original gases, which are combustible. The theory of isostacy precludes the possibility of an earthquake ever extending over any great extent of the globe. About seventy miles beneath the surface of the earth, owing to the great pressure, the interior behaves like a fluid, thus constantly maintaining its equilibrium. The upper layer owing partly to the shifting of the aluvial and other matter on the outer crust of the earth, by tides, rivers and also the erosion of the elements, the equilibrium becomes disarranged. Gravitation adjusts this disarrangement, thus causing an earthquake.

This will all be explained in the course of the lecture. Discussion of the lecture is invited. Everybody welcome, admission free.

The lecture will be delivered by Mr. F. H. Dobbin and the following gentlemen it is expected will discuss it: Messrs. J. H. Harvey, F. J. Voaden, John Edgar, Rev. Father McColl, A. Mowat, A. G. Carruthers and S. J. Keyes.

MR. W. C. BOURNE'S BIBLE WAS PRINTED IN THE YEAR 1661

Mr. W. C. Bourne, McDonnel St., also has an old Bible. His ancient copy of Holy Writ was printed in England in the year 1661, five years before the great London fire.

The Bible was presented to him by his aunt in England when he visited her in 1868. On the occasion of the 400th anniversary in connection with the translation of the Scriptures held in St. Paul's Church three years ago, Rev. R. Pogue read from Mr. Bourne's Bible.

Another Bible printed in 1500, is owned by Rev. A. G. E. Westmacott, a retired clergyman, who is residing at Millbrook, or was living there when Mr. Bourne last heard of him.

HINDUS COMING

Four Hundred On the Way to Test Exclusion Order.

OTTAWA, April 18. — When Parliament met yesterday afternoon Mr. H. H. Stevens (Vancouver) directed the attention of the Minister of the Interior to a press despatch stating that 400 Hindus were en route from Shanghai and Hong Kong to Vancouver, with a view to testing the Government regulation respecting Oriental immigration.

"The Deputy Minister received a telegram to that effect this morning," replied Hon. Dr. Roche, "and the officers at Vancouver have been instructed to prohibit these people coming in contrary to our regulations."

It will be recalled that several months ago several Hindus tested in the courts the validity of the orders in council which said that Asiatics could not enter Canada unless coming by direct steamship from their native land.

Judge Hunter upset the orders on the ground that they did not conform with the act. The Government then repealed the orders and new ones were passed which it was believed would meet the technical objections raised by Judge Hunter.

However, outside of these orders, there is at present an order in council, passed March 31, and to be in force for six months, which prohibits the entrance of all artisans and laborers into British Columbia. It is believed that this order, at least, will effectually bar the entrance of the coming Hindus.

RAILWAY CO. TO START WORK ON MONDAY

Will Put in New Rails, to Allow of Paving Operations

TURNOUTS COME NEXT.

Service for North Western Part Of City Impossible This Year.

Work will be commenced on Monday on the construction of new rails of the Street Railway in preparation for the laying of the pavement. The work from Brock Street north will be the first executed. After the new work is completed, that is the new turnouts, the work on the extension of the Charlotte Street line to the Boundary and south to Patterson Street will be commenced.

The contract is soon to be awarded for the laying of the pavement on streets, other than Foley and Gleason's contract calls for, but before any work is started, there will have to be over a mile of gas main laid. This coupled with the railway work means that abundance of employment will be obtainable in this city during the summer months.

When asked if the company would grant the request of the citizens of the north west part of the city for car service, as stated in their recent petition, Mr. Munro remarked that, owing to the great expenditure of the company this summer on other lines, it will be impossible to give them the service.

CURFEW TO TOLL IN GODERICH

Goderich, April 18.—The curfew is to be immediately enforced down here. At the meeting of the Town Council here to-night, Mayor C. A. Reid brought up the question of children walking on the streets after 9 o'clock, and asked the Council to endorse the enforcing of the curfew by-law passed here in 1899, which provides that all children under 15 years of age be kept off the streets after 9 o'clock. The Council was unanimous in supporting the mayor, and the chief of police will be instructed accordingly.

LUMBERMEN NEED RAIN TO GET OUT THEIR LOGS

The reports that the prices of lumber will drop this season, do not fit in very well with conditions such as local companies and others are facing at the present time.

While the winter was an excellent one for the men in the woods, there is a scarcity of water, due to the fact of the great volume getting away this spring with a rush, thus leaving the smaller channels on which the lumbermen depend so much, with very little water. Then again, the fires in the north country last fall destroyed some important dams, in consequence of which reservoirs are almost entirely dry.

The outlook at the present time is decidedly blue and the only hope is copious falls of rain, which alone will save the situation. If the rain falls, the lumbermen will be unable to get their logs to the lakes.

FRATERNALLY YOURS

The Knights of Columbus will receive Holy Communion in a body at St. Peter's Cathedral at the eight o'clock Mass on Sunday, April 26th.

A very important meeting of the Woodmen of the World is called for Monday night. Mr. D. Cinnamon of Lindsay will be in attendance to deliver an address on the work of the order and its future. Dr. W. S. Harrison of London, the Head Council Commander, and Mr. W. Mann of Toronto will also be present and will explain matters on the rate question. The increase of the rates of the order members has caused quite a bit of discussion so the members are urgently requested to be on hand Monday evening.

The Golden Link Lodge, Daughters of Rebekah are holding an entertainment and supper in the Oddfellows Hall on Tuesday evening.

The Sacred Heart Branch of the C.M.B.A. will receive Holy Communion in a body to-morrow morning at the eight-thirty Mass at the Church of the Sacred Heart. They will also hold an "At Home" in St. Alphonsus Lyceum on Monday evening.

The members of Lansdowne Lodge are requested to meet at the S. O. E. Hall on Monday, April 20 at 7.30 p.m. The regular meeting will not be held but the members will attend the St. George's Day Service to be held at St. John's Church at 8 p.m. The members are asked to wear badges and white gloves. The regular meeting will be held on Wednesday, April 22nd, at 8 p.m.

The C. O. O. F. of Bridgenorth No. 315, held their 23rd annual concert on Thursday evening, in their hall. Mr. J. A. Jobe occupied the chair. Dr. U. M. Stanley, of the Medical Board, of Brantford, was present, and delivered an address, as did Mr. J. Metheral and Mr. H. Nesbitt, of this city, Rev. Mr. Ireland, Rev. Mr. McLaren, and Chief Ranger W. Elliott, of Selwyn Court.

The very enjoyable programme was rendered by the following: Ennismore Orchestra, Bridgenorth Glee Club, Mr. Asa Huycke, Mr. Chandler, Miss Flowers and Mrs. C. Telford. The duet of Mrs. Telford and Mr. Chandler was very well received.

The Bridgenorth C. O. F. are in a very flourishing condition, and besides having an exceedingly fine quarters they are in a good financial standing.

WHAT THEY SAY AT LINDSAY COUNCIL

Ald. Chambers—"I favor putting oil on the streets."

Ald. Warren—"It would injure the automobiles."

Ald. Chambers—"What do we care for automobiles. That which benefits the town is what we are after."

Henceforth, all streets where the petition is not duly signed will be denied the use of the street sprinkler.—Lindsay Warder.

NEW MINISTER TO BE INDUCTED AT SPRINGVILLE

Rev. George I. Craw, the new minister for Springville Presbyterian Church, will be inducted on Thursday, April 30th, when the Moderator of Session, Rev. R. Pogue, will be in charge of the ceremony.

Rev. Mr. Brown, of Warsaw, Moderator of Presbytery, will induct Rev. Mr. Craw, Rev. Mr. Keith will address the minister, and Rev. Mr. Alp, of Harwood, will preach the sermon.

THE MAN ON THE STREET TO THE RESCUE

The presence of mind and action of three bystanders at the corner of Hunter and George Streets about 3.15 this afternoon were the means of a bad accident being averted. A farmer's rig coming west on Hunter turned on to George Street. The horses were evidently causing considerable trouble, and the result was that the pole became unfastened and fell. The horses made a bad break to get away but three men jumped from the sidewalk and managed to check them. Even this did not set the matter at rights and considerable difficulty was met before the horses became manageable. Had they broken loose, in all probability the rig would have been smashed by the southbound street car which was approaching not twenty feet away from the mix-up.

DROWNING IS AVERTED

Cobourg, April 18.—Eric Roberts, the young son of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Roberts, nearly met with a drowning accident while playing near the C. P. R. Station. He fell into a pond there, and had it not been for Giles Nichols' quickness would have been drowned.

OVERCROWDING IN ANOTHER HOUSE

Too Many Boarders to Suit the Sanitary Inspector

Sanitary Inspector Spence last evening investigated two more cases of overcrowding houses, occupied by Italians, and found conditions nearly as bad as one reported a few days ago. The one place was fairly clean but far too many inmates slept there. The other presented a sordid aspect and hardly 100 cubic feet of space supplied the needs of the sleepers.

The inmates of the Italian Boarding House on Stewart Street, have been notified to clean up, and also decrease the number of boarders. Other sanitary improvements must also be placed in the house.

RECKLESS RIDERS ON THE SIDEWALKS

Prospects Good for Contributions to Civic Treasury.

Numerous complaints are being received by the Police Department of bicyclists riding on the sidewalks. Already this season several people, some of them elderly, have been knocked down by the speed artists, who smoke up the sidewalks with their reckless riding. There will be some heavy fines one of these days.

HAVELOCK JURY SAY DULOFF WAS MURDERED

N. DULOFF.
The young Bulgarian who was murdered at Havelock.

Suspicions Points to Kalo Volicoff, Who Worked With the Party

"That N. Duloff came to his death at the hands of some party or parties unknown, pointing with strong suspicion to Kalo Volicoff, now in Bulgaria," was the verdict rendered by the jury in connection with the inquest into the death of N. Duloff, a Bulgarian, whose body was found in a pond above the dam at Havelock.

Dr. Kindred, coroner, conducted the inquest at Havelock yesterday, while the Crown was represented by Assistant Crown Attorney Wearing, M.A., of this city.

Evidence by five Bulgarian fellow-workers of the murdered man, N. Duloff, and also of the alleged murderer, Kalo Volicoff, was to the effect that they commenced working on the night of the 6th of December unloading coal cars. Duloff left the car shortly before 3 o'clock. Shortly after this Volicoff disappeared from the car. Duloff came back and asked for Volicoff, and then again left. This was the last time he was seen alive. The next morning Volicoff was found sleeping in his bunk.

Examined by Assistant Crown Attorney Wearing, M.A., the witnesses claimed their suspicions were not aroused over the proceedings and actions of the two men. They were, however, at a loss to account for the disappearance of Volicoff a day or so after Duloff left. They were not suspicious of his departure, owing to the fact he had remarked to them of his intention of going to Toronto in a few days. Shortly afterward the blood stained hat of the missing man Duloff was found in a car. This aroused their suspicions, and they informed the police.

Timekeeper Snyder, of the C. P. R., failed to identify his handwriting in connection with some exhibits shown. He told of Volicoff cashing the check for Duloff and a few other minor details.

DRIVING THE FARMERS FROM THE MARKET

Reforms Are Too Much for the Tillers of Land

"I have quit the market because of the insults of the buyers and the Council," said Mr. J. J. Herron, of Springville, to the Review today.

Mr. Herron's complaint was against the mandate of City Council which after May 1st will compel the farmer folks to decorate their baskets, etc., with their names, and also make it compulsory for all fowl to be sold by weight.

Mr. Herron said the farmers were being driven away from the market by the action of the City Council in it's quest for reforms. There were many others who held the same opinion.

MEN, ATTENTION.

Rev. Dr. G. W. Henderson, of St. Catharines, will address the Brotherhood of Charlotte Street Methodist Church at 2.30 to-morrow afternoon. Every man welcome. Come and bring a friend with you.

"LEWIE" LE GRENDRE APPLIES THE BRAKES AND SAVES LITTLE GIRL FROM FATAL INJURIES

Detroit, Mich., April 17. — Highland Park was the scene Wednesday morning of two street car accidents, one of which will probably prove fatal to Durastus Tarem, 175 Gerald Avenue. The other victim was four-year-old Frances Groves, Bereford Avenue. Motorman LeGrendre stopped his car within a few seconds after the child was struck, saving her life.

Taren, who is an auto worker, was on the tracks in front of the Maxwell Motor Co., Oakland Avenue, when struck by the Victor Avenue car. He received a fractured skull and was badly lacerated about the arms and face. He was rushed to Grace hospital. Little hope is held out for his recovery.

Little Frances Groves undoubtedly owes her life to Motorman LeGrendre of the Woodward Avenue line. The child stepped off a northbound car directly in the path of a southbound car, and would have been instantly killed had not the wheels been brought to a standstill immediately. She escaped with minor injuries.

Mr. Louis LeGrendre, who executed the heroic act as mentioned above, is an old Peterboro boy, and first learned the art of driving a car in the employ of the Peterboro Street Railway Co. While here he averted several accidents by his quick work, and his many friends will be glad to learn that he is still "boss of the car."

FEAR NURSE HAS BEEN MURDERED

Relatives Ask Police to Find Miss Annie Noll

Berlin, Ont., April 18. — Local relatives of Miss Annie Noll, a graduate nurse, are greatly worried about her strange disappearance in Vancouver, the young lady not having been heard from since last September Miss Noll, who was a stenograbper, here, left Berlin seven years ago for Detroit, and after graduating from St. Mary's Hospital, left for Vancouver to engage in private nursing. Not hearing from her for some time, Mrs. T. H. Callaghan and Mrs. E. Lippert, sisters here, requested the authorities of Vancouver to investigate her whereabouts. It was learned that Miss Noll had decided to leave Vancouver for Saskatchewan on September 24th, prior to a visit to sisters in San Francisco and Seattle. The C. P. R. baggage officials have notified the relatives that they still have her trunk, delivered to the station on September 24th. A room mate of the young lady, Miss Mix, identified the clothing in the trunk and also learned that she had drawn her money from the bank on that date to leave the city, but had disappeared between the bank and the station.

Her relatives are fearful that she was murdered, as she never reached the station to check her baggage.

FARMER FINDS IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

Mr. J. J. Herron, of Springville, is a staunch believer in advertising. Recently he advertised for sale a number of colts, and he called at The Review office to-day to report a very successful sale, all the animals being sold at very satisfactory prices.

ONE FINED $5.75 OTHER GETS $10

Two Blacklisters Appear Before Magistrate Dumble.

The enjoyment of being released from the blacklist proved too much for Robert Irwin, and he appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning on the charge of being drunk and disorderly. He was fined $5.75, to be paid forthwith or fifteen days in jail.

"Give me a few minutes to get the money," he pleaded.

"Not a minute," remarked his worship, who further said they were not running the court for his accommodation.

Irwin has appeared before the court on numerous occasions on the same charge, while on the list. His last appearance resulted in a two months' term at the county jail for refusing to tell where he got his booze. He was discharged the other day.

Thos. Sarginson, a local blacklister, pleaded not guilty to the charge of being drunk while on the prohibited list. Evidence by P. C. Reid was to the effect that he had found the man in company with another hack driver at the C.P.R. station at 1.58 this morning. He had to use various methods to awaken the man, such as pulling his hair and nose and shaking him to wake him up in time to catch his passengers. Both men were drunk. At the time he did not know Sarginson was on the list.

P. C. Burnham, who made the arrest, said he was under the influence of liquor. The accused was fined $10.

KILLED BY TRAIN.

North Bay, April 17.—John Crynan, aged about 40, a steamboat engineer from Atherly Junction, was struck by a train at White Fish Station, on the C.P.R. "Soo" branch. The body was taken to Orillia.

VETERAN COPY OF SCRIPTURES OWNED BY LINDSAY MAN

The item of news in last night's Daily Warder in reference to Mr. W. C. Mikel, K.C., of Belleville, having in his possession the oldest Bible in Canada, attracted the notice of a large number of Lindsay citizens, including Mr. J. H. Sootheran, Clerk of the Surrogate Court.

This morning Mr. Sootheran called at The Warder office and stated that he had a Bible in his possession 301 years old, while that owned by the Belleville lawyer is only 314 years old. The holy volume in the care of Mr. Sootheran is one of the King James' edition, and is in an excellent state of preservation, except that three front pages are missing. It is not quite as large as that owned in Belleville, the Lindsay volume being 9 inches long, 6 inches wide and 3 inches deep, as compared with Mr. Mikel's, which is 14 inches long, 9 inches wide and 5 inches thick.

Needless to say, Mr. Sootheran places a high value on the sacred volume, which is a relict of the ancient days. However, he believes there is still an older edition in Lindsay, and besides states that Chancellor Burwash, of the Toronto University, is able to give information in regard to Bibles very much older than even the one in his possession.—Lindsay Warder.

MR. BOB SHAW AND THE GANNON'S BRIDGE

Robert Shaw, the Reeve of Harvey and Warden of the County of Peterborough is understood to have been willing to back down from his position in this affair, bat Mr. Burnham says that he will not overlook the action of Mr. Shaw in this matter. Mr. Shaw ignored all but the the County Council and proposed to saddle it with $2,000 expense. Mr. Shaw refused to ask others besides the County Council to help in building a new Gannon's Bridge. Mr. Peck, M.L.A., has written announcing that he will do what he can with the Ontario Government if the Dominion Government and the County Council will help. Mr. Burnham, M.P., has declined, it is said, to have anything further to do with Mr. Shaw, who widely repudiated the deputation from Harvey which visited the minister and Mr. Burnham last summer and which for the first time secured consideration of the proposition. The deputation consisted of Mr. Clarkson, M.D., Mr. J. Weir and Mr. W. T. Elliott.

What the County Council will do in the matter is not known. Mr. Burnham has nothing but good to say of the County Council. It is Mr. Shaw who it at fault in trying to introduce sharp political practice into public affairs.

APPLE BLOSSOMS

W. T. Cullen of Bridgenorth Finds Them.

Mr. W. T. Cullen, of Bridgenorth, exhibited several apple blossoms today to The Review. This is exceptional for this time of the year, as the apple tree generally arrays herself in white about the 15th of May. Mr. Cullen stated that they were off an Early Transparent Tree.

THE FALL OF SIEGEL-COOPER.

WHAT IS SIEGEL-COOPER? It is the name of one of the largest and best known merchandising firms in the United States, a firm that was once in possession of almost unlimited credit, vast capital and immense earnings, but which is now bankrupt. The genius behind the growth of this great commercial enterprise, and who was also responsible for its fall, was Henry Siegel, a German Jew who went to the United States in 1867 and began work in Washington at $3.50 a week. Industry, frugality and honesty were important characteristics of the young man. Being enterprising he saw that education was necessary for his success, so he attended night school, and at the end of four years, was fairly well educated and was earning a salary of $15.00 a week.

In company with his brother, he started a store which succeeded well, and having sold out at a good profit, they went to Chicago where they repeated their success on a larger scale. Henry travelled all over the United States in the interest of his firm, and wherever he went, he spent his spare time, studying the important points of, and noting the defects in, the great retail stores. At the end of ten years, he had acquired a vast amount of information on the operation of departmental stores.

The first Siegel-Cooper store was launched in Peoria. Next came the big store in Chicago, the greatest that had ever been erected, and this was followed by an even greater store in New York. Had Henry Siegel been content with the phenomenal success he had attained in building up his immense stores, perhaps the whole structure would not have fallen in a crash. As it was, success blinded the man to his own limitations. He over-reached himself and became money mad. On one occasion he paid $350,000 cash for a tiny block of land, that was of no use to him, merely to keep another store from rounding out its building on the corner. He started a private bank, and began selling stock in his own enterprises. He and his associates received fabulous salaries. Soon money became scarce, not because it was not being earned, but because it was being squandered. Then came the assignment, and to-day, Henry Siegel is worth less than nothing. He earned prodigiously and spent prodigally. Some time ago his wife left him, and he had to pay her $25,000 a year alimony. Now that he is bankrupt, he will not be able to pay this sum, and regards it as a bright spot on his horizon. He considered the savings of his clerks his money, to do with as he saw fit. The result of this man's business ethics is, that all the enterprises he founded, stores, banks, factories are involved in ruin.

There was one important thing that was lacking in the career of Henry Siegel. It was not business acumen, for no man put a truer estimate on the commercial value of things. Business capacity he had in a most remarkable degree. He had all the qualities necessary to achieve business success, yet he lacked one essential factor, that is perspective. In his desire to achieve business success, to build up a great business, to acquire vast wealth, he saw only money, goods, securities ahead of him, as if these things were "the be all and the end all" of life. Lacking perspective when he reached a certain degree of success he was unable to make a proper use of it, or to understand the highest purposes of wealth. When he had won wealth, he acted as if he had achieved completeness. His inability to put a proper estimate on what wealth stands for and means, is perhaps the reason for the crash of the enterprises, in the erection of which he had spent his life.

RURAL EDUCATION IN ONTARIO.

THE ADDRESS of Dr. Merchant at the Ontario Educational Association gave two reasons for the decadence of rural schools, the irregularity of attendance and a too small amount of the teacher's time and attention to the lower grades. These two weaknesses are only too true. There are a great many school registers in prosperous, long settled districts that would reveal a startling condition were they made public. Children are taken out of school to help with "seeding" or assist with "threshing" for half the time they should be at school. Imperfect as the present system is, they do not get half the benefit of it because the parents put too high a value on saving the wages of a hired man. The inspector can see each year who are responsible for this evil, yet seldom if ever has a prosecution been made.

As the law stands, it is not strict enough in its intention to keep children at school until they are fourteen years of age. It allows ignorant or selfish parents to take advantage of their children, with the result that the whole school is retarded by trying to bring those who have been away up to the position of those who have regularly attended. Unnecessary work is thrown on the teacher, with the result that, in many cases, lower grades have to be neglected. Before these children who are kept out of school, reach the highest forms, they are too big and too self-conscious of their backwardness to finish, with the result that, in spite of all the efforts and large appropriations made to maintain a high standard of rural education, there is growing up a very improperly educated farming class, lacking in ideals, and incapable of realizing the highest ends of citizenship. The fathers pitchfork their lives away and leave the family all the capital necessary to maintain them in comfort but which is often lost or squandered because the children have not been properly educated in handling money, in using wealth, or in economy. The law should be altered and enforced, in order to secure all the benefits that can be derived from the present system.

Canada cannot afford to have its farmers so poorly educated that they will be nothing more than good wheat-growers, good drawers of water or good hewers of wood and stone. Canada wants a highly trained citizenship, men who will be efficient in business but with a vision embracing ideals and traditions, non-essential things if you will in some respects, but as necessary to a high standard of citizenship as rain to a thirsty field of grain.

HISTORY IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

AT THE MEETING in Toronto of the Ontario Educational Association, the subject of History received a good deal of discussion. Some contended that the removal of the history examination from the High School Entrance had practically killed History as a study in the Public Schools. The Superintendent of Education, Dr. John Seath, wrote to the Association asking for an opinion on this question, and consequently it produced considerable debate. The Association, however, passed a resolution in favor of keeping History off the Entrance Examination, as it now is. Many of the teachers claimed that there was too much History on the Matriculation and Teachers' examinations, and that this subject should be more equalized from the entrance to these examinations. It is to be hoped that the discussion of the Association, will be productive of improved methods in handling History, for as it is done at present, it certainly is not taught as well as it should be. Particularly in rural schools, the subject is much neglected.

Some teachers said that this criticism was largely unfounded, because the teachers throughout the province were anxious to educate the pupils, and not merely to get them through examinations. Admitting this to be true, a knowledge of History is acquired not only from the instruction given by the teacher, but also from the application by the pupils, and in our system of examinations from public schools to Universities, where the examination in a subject is removed, it tends to be neglected by the pupils. As a matter of fact, if this subject is taught as it should be, together with other subjects that do not receive sufficient attention, the whole system of primary education will have to be re-organized. Such a task is beyond the work of one session of the Educational Association, but continued discussion of Ontario's Educational problems by such a body, will likely educate the people and authorities in time, to the need of reorganization, and will also help to open the way to the best kind of reconstruction.

SEED TIME.

IN DUE COURSE, seed-time comes as regularly as death and taxes. It is optimism in real form. Seed-time is hope in a form more real than a merely mental conception. The seed is committed to the ground not to die (for a seed that grows does not die) but to grow into the hoped-for harvest. It is a time of renovating, of stirring up all kinds of trouble with the menfolks. The boys are asked to rake the lawn clean of old dry grass, to put the backyard in shape; the girls are required to tidy-up, or to help clean house. Painting is done, flowers planted and everything in the hope of keeping the house or farm in good condition and attractive in appearance during the long sunny days of summer. Everybody should plant flowers around the house and clean up their yards. The health of the city is much improved but the beauty of the streets is increased a hundred-fold. Seed time is one of buoyancy and gladness not in itself so much as in what it promises. If the people of Peterborough want a clean, healthy, beautiful city, they should make spring a real seed-time—plant, paint and clean.

THE EARLY FLY

By Walt Mason

The early fly is here; you see him buzzing near; so take your stand with club in hand, and soak him in the ear. The early flies are worst of all the breed accursed; for they'll give rise to countless flies which cannot be dispersed. One active April fly, unless you make it die, will bring a slew, your meat to chew, and spoil the milk and pie. So, like the Maid of Arc, arise in helm and sark, and swat the flies between the eyes, from daylight until dark. Thus serve your native land, a swatter in your hand, and then your name in Hall of Fame, on sculptured stone will stand. There is no better plan to help your fellow man; a peril dies with dying flies, so swat them while you can. Just so you kill the brutes, the method little boots; one takes an axe and breaks their backs, one takes his gun and shoots. I know one earnest gink who drowns his flies in ink; some fellows boil their flies in oil—a first rate scheme, I think. But any plan will do, just so you kill a few, each passing day, so slay and slay, with purpose high and true.

Birthdays & Notes

SATURDAY, APRIL EIGHTEENTH

HIS HONOR JOSIAH WOOD, Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, whose seventy-first birthday occurs to-day, has been a prominent figure politically for a good many years. He first entered the House of Commons as member for Westmoreland in 1882 and sat there until 1895, when he was elevated to the Senate. Two years ago he was chosen by Premier Borden to succeed the Hon. L. J. Tweedie as lieutenant-governor of New Brunswick. A rather interesting story is told of the way in which, when an M.P., he opposed raising the sessional indemnity from $1,000 to $1,500. He was unable to get any support for his side of the case and was a good deal ridiculed for his action but nevertheless he was consistent enough not to accept the increase for himself and it is said that the unpaid balance of his indemnity still stands to his credit in the books of the Treasury Department.

SUNDAY, APRIL NINETEENTH

TO-DAY marks the fifty-ninth anniversary of the birth of an English scholar, whose interest in Canada has been neither short-lived nor perfunctory—HUGH EDWARD EGERTON, Beit Professor of Colonial History in Oxford University. Professor Egerton has not only spent his time but his money in assisting research into colonial history and out of his own pocket has paid for the editing of the Acts of the Privy Council. Personally he is an interesting mixture of kindliness, shrewdness, humor and shyness, with the latter characteristic probably most conspicuous. Of so reserved an individual it is difficult to give any striking anecdote.

TO STAND TRIAL

Former Russell Township Clerk Is Committed

SOUTH INDIAN, Ont., April 18.—W. J. W. Lowrie, former clerk of the Township of Russell, was yesterday committed to stand his trial on a charge of embezzling $300 from the township. It is alleged Lowrie retained a check for $300 received while clerk for his personal use. The accused maintains that the matter was a personal one between himself and J. Winstanley, of Morrisburg, who, preliminary evidence showed, had given the check as a deposit on a contract, making it out in favor of Lowrie. Restitution has since been made, but the three magistrates hearing the case decided to send Lowrie to trial at the L'Orignal Assizes.

Mellen Willing To Take It.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 18.—Charles S. Mellen, former president of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., would be highly honored, he said yesterday, if chosen to head the federated railway employes.

The organization, which will have a membership of 2,000,000 railway employes, will be formed at a meeting in Boston on April 26. It will be known as the Federated Council of Railroad Brotherhoods.

"I would rather hold that position than be President of the United States," said Mr. Mellen.

BODIES ARE BOUND.

Corpses In Fire Ruins Bear Signs of Foul Play.

GEDDES, S.D., April 18.—What appears to be a double murder was disclosed here yesterday, when the bodies of W. H. Menzie, manager of the Farmers' Lumber Yard here, which was burned Thursday night, and his bookkeeper, Miss Blanche Signal, were found in the debris of the lumber office. Both bodies were badly charred.

The feet of Miss Signal were tied with a wire and her hands wired behind her. Her skull had been crushed with a hammer, found nearby. Mr. Menzie's feet also were wired together and a wire was found on one wrist, the other end was broken. His skull also had been fractured.

Dr. Sunel Must Go.

NORTH BAY, Ont., April 18.—Dr. Karl Sunel of Sudbury, who has been held in the district court at Sudbury since the mysterious death of his wife two months ago, is to be deported to the United States, from which country he came, although a native of Finland. There is doubt expressed as to the sanity of the man, who gained considerable notoriety through the investigation into his wife's death recently. Should he refuse to leave the country immediately he will be arrested.

Canada Has Thirteen Appeals.

LONDON, April 18.—The Privy Council resumes the hearing of appeals on Monday next. Canada contributes thirteen out of the twenty colonial appeals listed. The case of Despatie versus Tremblay, which has been several times adjourned, and which raises important issues respecting the marriage of Catholics in Quebec, is down for hearing.

J. A. M. AIKENS SUGGESTS AN ALTERNATIVE FOR FREE WHEAT

Brandon Conservative Contributes Speech to Budget Debate, Proposing Aid For Western Mill Men—Laurier Government Did Little For the West.

OTTAWA, April 18.—The budget debate was continued in the House of Commons yesterday with six speakers taking part. J. A. M. Aikins, Conservative member for Brandon, a stronghold of the Grain Growers, expressed himself in favor of free wheat or as an alternative to that, aid for the western millers. Mr. Morris of Chateauguay had little sympathy for the demands of the western farmers who were, he said, soil exploiters and must sooner or later be replaced by real farmers.

Mr. Robb (Lib., Huntingdon) in resuming the budget debate, said that the Borden Government had no remedy for hard times except to build drillsheds and give away Dreadnoughts. The Finance Minister had stated that the Government could not hope to borrow money for years to come at less than 4 per cent. If that were the case why did it not pay 4 per cent. to depositors in the postal savings and Government savings banks? If money was worth 4 per cent. why pay our own people less? The Conservatives believed in taxing everything. The Liberals favored giving the farmers a wider market.

Mr. Aikins (Con., Brandon) said there was no effective argument, in his opinion, against the demand of the western farmers for free wheat.

"If the interest of the west," Mr. Aikins continued, "are to be sacrificed to the interests of the eastern millers and the railways, then it is the duty of the Government to bonus the flour milling industry in the western provinces. For this purpose milling machinery should be admitted free of duty, and power be furnished the millers at reduced rates by the Dominion Government.

The Laurier Government, the member for Brandon continued, had neglected the west, while endeavoring to make the eastern people believe that they were making great sacrifices for the benefit of the country west of Lake Superior. That Government had only expended about $1,000,000 all told in railway construction in western Canada, including the few miles of the National Transcontinental which ran through the Province of Manitoba. True, it had loaned ten million dollars to the Grand Trunk Pacific, but that money would be repaid.

Mr. Buchanan (Lib., Medicine Hat) spoke earnestly in favor of free wheat. He said the population of Southern Alberta had become stationery and that settlers were leaving the land and returning to Ontario and the United States.

Mr. Buchanan declared himself against any further aid to the Canadian Northern. Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, he said, should sell out their interests in street car companies and other enterprises at home and abroad and complete the Canadian Northern with their own money. If they could not or would not do this, the road should be taken over by the Dominion Government.

Mr. Webster (Con., Brockville) ridiculed the statement made by Liberal speakers that the western farmers were not getting fair treatment from the Government. He pointed out that pioneer conditions in the west to-day were not as half so strenuous as pioneer conditions in Ontario and Quebec fifty years ago. The west up until a short time ago had been given the pick of the immigrants, while Ontario farmers had a hard time to get farm help.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson said the impending contest between the two political parties in Canada would be a contest between the big interests and the plain people. Protection he denounced as the breeder of corruption. Its votaries, like the heathen of old, made idols of gold and silver, the works of the hands of men. Protectionism was frankly materialistic and held up material success as the national ideal, with demoralizing effect upon the social, moral and intellectual conditions of the people.

Mr. Morris (Con., Cateauguay) opposed free wheat and believed too much attention was being given to complaints from the west. Many of the wheat growers in the prairie provinces were not farmers at all, but were exploiters of the soil. Before long real farmers would have to go into that part of Canada and build up the soil.

GEN. HUERT TRIES AGAIN

HIS LATEST PROPOSAL IS FLATLY REJECTED BY PRESIDENT WILSON

WASHINGTON, April 18.—President Wilson yesterday flatly rejected Gen. Huerta's suggestion for a simultaneous salute to the American and Mexican flags.

The Washington Government informed Huerta that his wish for simultaneous firing of the salutes was untenable, and that as demanded by Rear Admiral Mayo a salute of 21 guns would be insisted upon, the manner of returning the salute to be left to the American admiral, who agreed to fire one to the Mexican flag. Naval precedents showed no "simultaneous salute" had ever been fired in apology for an offence.

No reply to the last American note transmitted through Charge O Shaughnessy had been received up to late yesterday and no orders to the American warships to slow down or turn back had been issued. Administration officials consider, however, the main point at issue — the exchange of salutes—had been settled, and they regarded Huerta's "haggling over details," as one official expressed it, as not likely to prevent an adjustment of the controversy. They believed the crisis was over, but on the other hand, in view of the kaleidoscopic changes of the last three days, said they would not be surprised if the hitch over details became serious again.

The American Government has taken the position that when a salute of 21 guns is fired to the Stars and Stripes the salute in acknowledgment would be fired to the flag of the Mexican people—and not to the Huerta administration or any Government or individual.

Commenting on the original demand for a salute to the flag, Secretary Daniels said a few days ago Rear Admiral Mayo himself modified his demand somewhat, saying he would not insist on having the salute fired while the American flag was hoisted on Mexican territory, and would be satisfied if the salute was to the flag "in a conspicuous place," either on the mast of the Dolphin or a Mexican gunboat.

There was much discussion in official circles not only about the propriety of returning Huerta's salute in view of the peculiar diplomatic relations between the Mexico City administration and the Washington Government, but because of a navy regulation, No. 1194, which reads:

"No salute shall be fired in honor of any nation, or of any official of any nation not formally recognized by the Government of the United States."

QUEBEC, March 18.—From May 1 next the bars will be compelled to keep closed until 7.30 o'clock in the morning, instead of opening at 7 a.m. as at present.

DOCTORS DID NOT HELP HER

But Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Mrs. Bradley's Health—Her Own Statement.

Winnipeg, Canada.—"Eleven years ago I went to the Victoria Hospital, Montreal, suffering with a growth. The doctors said it was a tumor and could not be removed as it would cause instant death. They found that my organs were affected, and said I could not live more than six months in the condition I was in.

"After I came home I saw your advertisement in the paper, and commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it constantly for two years, and still take it at times, and both my husband and myself claim that it was the means of saving my life. I highly recommend it to suffering women."—Mrs. ORILLA BRADLEY, 284 Johnson Ave., Winnipeg, Manitoba, Can.

Why will women take chances or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

CONDITIONS IN NORTH DAKOTA

Many Farmers Were Forced to Sell Out.

The Review is in receipt of a letter from North Dakota which leads to the belief that the "hard times" are being felt in that section of the great country to the south. The writer is an old experienced farmer and has grown up with the country, his theories then, should be acceptable. In referring to the large numbers out of employment the writer goes to the source of the trouble. For the past two years a great deal of grain has been grown with the result that the markets have become more or less crowded and naturally the prices slumped. The last two years the farmers of the western section of the continent have sold their grain for half what they should have received. When one considers the price of land, machinery, horses and labor the farmer should not sell wheat short of $1.50 per bushel, oats, 50 cents, and barley 75 cents. It is easily understood that the farmers lost money in 1912 when the prices were about half of that and likewise in 1913 when they were a shade over half. Instead of making money the farmer, that is the average farmer for there are exceptions to every rule, went behind and it is needless to state that when the farmer ceases to purchase machinery the city folks will be affected.

In 1912 in Bottineau County, one of the leading counties of North Dakota, wheat averaged 30 bushels to the acre, oats 75, and barley 50. In 1913 in the same section wheat went 15, oats 30, and barley 25. The latter is recognized as a fair crop yet a large number of the farmers growing grain became financially embarrassed and were forced to sell out. A sheriff's sale has become a common occurrence and the prices prevailing are exceedingly low. Fine young mares weighing 1400 or 1500 bring $100 and geldings are plentiful at $75 and $80. When the farmer who has his head above water can buy horses, excellent second hand machinery at these sales he will not patronize the cities and naturally money will be scarce. Looking at it from every angle our friend from the west claims that the big farmer in the west has got to cut down on growing grain. If he doesn't then the sheriff will make him.

CLOTHING FOR THE MOTOR USER

A new fad is the taking of the Indian poncho, grass pillow and Navajo Coats on the outing trip.

Water tight army canteens and pails of brown canvas fold flat when not in use.

The shepherdess hat, for limousine wear with the white Cortez crepe tailored suit, is quite a dainty confection of white chip faced with cell blue velvet. It is tilted to one side of the head and trimmed with two bunches of Dresden china pink roses.

Rompers of Scotch linen in dark tan will be worn by litle girl travellers up to six year old. Over them the linen beach coats are worn, so when the luncheon halt is made they may play in the woods without fear of tearing or soiling dainty dresses.

Folding army tables are gaining favor for out of doors use. They take but little room and may be opened out to accommodate six persons.

Orange colored Angora sweaters with wide white borders and white pearl buttons are new. They come with caps and tango sashes to match and are worn under the fashionable capes, which may be thrown aside in the limousine.

The rainproof rubberised black satin hat has a stitched brim that may be turned at a becoming angle and it is trimmed with rubber roses and leaves of pink, red, white or yellow as the case may be. The rain coat is of the satin to match.

UNKINDEST CUT.

"I understand you had to undergo a surgical operation?"

"Yep, some operation."

"Doctors cut everything out."

"Yep, cut out the auto I had planned to get."—Houston Post.

Scene from "The Red Widow," the big Astor Theatre musical comedy at The Grand next Tuesday. Seats now on sale.

EARLY BUILDER OF BASSWOOD RIB CANOE

We have gone on for many years crediting the origination of the basswood built, the rib and bottom canoe to the inventive genius of Mr. John Stephenson, of Ashburnham. He was the first, or one of the first to construct this form of boat, but as to that he invented it, there may be serious doubt. In this regard, Mr. Stephenson or his friends may be heard from.

At a meeting of the Peterborough Historical Society held on February 4th, 1897, much interest was taken in a paper read by Mr. George Dunsford. Many of our older citizens will recollect him. Mr. Dunsford read the paper, having at his side a canoe built by himself in 1846. It was of fine model and lines and 20 feet in length. Now 1846 is a date about 23 years before the first basswood canoe was built in Peterborough, and if Mr. Dunsford's statements are correct, and there is no reason to doubt, we have the very beginning of the rib and bottom canoe.

This canoe was in possession of the Historical Society until the exhibits and properties of Victoria Museum were removed to the new Public Library building, when Mr. W. H. Dunsford had the boat taken over to his residence, where it now is housed in the barn. He would no doubt be pleased to show it to anyone interested in this work of the early days.

Suggests His Resignation.

WINNIPEG, April 18.—The Winnipeg Tribune yesterday editorially commends Lieut.-Governor Cameron for his refusal to attend the Catholic banquet where the Pope was to be toasted before the King, and suggests that the Lieutenant-Governor might almost be justified in asking for the resignation of Hon. Joseph Bernier, Provincial Secretary, who spoke to one toast.

CONSPIRACY IS BEING PROBED

Hearing of Charges of Thefts From Cars at North Bay

NORTH BAY, April 18.—Preliminary hearing of the charges of theft of merchandise from freight cars in transit by employes of the C.P.R. began in Sudbury yesterday before Magistrate Bredie. Five men are charged, but only one case was taken up yesterday, that preferred against Martin, a brakeman of North Bay, who is being tried on five counts. He was committed for trial on each of four counts, and the fifth charge was held over to await the arrival of a witness from Vancouver. Fifty-five witnesses are already on hand for the trials, representing shipping firms of Fredericton, Point Levis, Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, London and Winnieg, and consignees from Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Crown Attorney McKessock of Sudbury is prosecuting and C. P. R. interests are represented by W. Williams, of Pembroke. Martin is defended by G. L. T. Bull of North Bay.

Should Know Better.

TORONTO, April 18—Past seventy years of age, William A. Douglass entered the morality department offices yesterday and said he wished to surrender himself to the authorities. The old man stated he was a bigamist, and as he had just got converted he wanted to clear his conscience of his crime and pay the penalty.

The old man's story was to the effect that 30 years ago he married a woman in Oakville. Seventeen years ago he went to England and there married another woman. As the crime was committed in England the officers could not hold him here.

I have guided many others who are now very happy in their own homes, and I am ready and willing to treat any sober, honest industrious man in like manner. Come in and fully understand my offer, if satisfactory, prepare to build and plant garden. My low prices, easy terms and special offers are made to close up my business quickly. # READING AND ITS PLEASURS?

By F. M. Dela Fosse.

Many people think that all poetry should be written in such a way as to be intelligent to the meanest order of intellect and that all that is not written in such a vein must necessarily belong to a lower stratum of literature. The real truth of the matter is, however, that perfection is to be found alike in polysyllabic and monosyllabic verse and that where the latter may and does appeal to the less educated reader, the former has a strong following amongst the more cultured lovers of literature.

As instances of the great power of short words, both in prose and verse might be cited, some of the finest passages in Shakespeare, notably Hamlet's soliloquy, "To be or not to be"; the most impressive portions of the Bible, such as the Book of Job and Revelation, or the denunciations of Jeremiah against Jehoiachim, King of Judah; Tennyson's "Tears, Idle Tears"; Pope's Universal Prayer; Gray's Elegy; and Scott's description of the Battle of Flodden Field. All these might be searched and searched in vain for words that would prove stumbling-blocks at a country spelling-bee. Dr. Johnson, on the other hand, delighted in polysyllabic words, as did Gibbon, the author of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, and DeQuincey and many others. But there is no doubt that the wast bulk of readers prefer the simpler forms of poetry to those of the higher philosophical writers, whose works call for deep contemplation and the aid of a dictionary to gather the meaning of some of their sesquipedalian terms. A very clever piece of versifying by Dr. J. Addison Alexander appeared several years ago in the Princeton Review. It is in the form of two sonnets and sets forth the facts I have been expounding in a nutshell.

It is entitled:

THE POWER OF SHORT WORDS.

Think not that strength lies in the big round word
Or that the brief and plain must needs be weak.
To whom can this be true who once has heard
The cry for help, the tongue that all men speak,
When want or woe or fear is in the throat,
So that each word gasped out is like a shriek
Pressed from the sore throat, or a strange wild note
Sung by some fay or fiend? There is a strength
Which dies if stretched too far or spun too fine,
Which has more height than breadth, more depth than length.
Let but this force of thought and speech be mine,
And he that will may take the sleek, fat phrase
Which glows and burns not, though it gleam and shine,—
Light, but no heat,—a flash, but not a blaze!

Nor is it mere strength that the short word boasts:
It serves of more than fight or storm to tell,
The roar of waves that dash on rock-bound coasts,
The crash of tall trees when the wild winds swell,
The roar of guns, the groans of men that die
On blood-stained fields. It has a voice as well
For them that far off on their sick-beds lie;
For them that weep, for them that mourn the dead;
For them that laugh and dance and clap the hand;
To joy's quick step, as well as grief's slow tread,
The sweet, plain words we learnt at first keep time,
And though the theme be sad, or gay, or grand,
With each, with all, these may be made to chime,
In thought, or speech, or song, in prose or rhyme.

People read poetry for two reasons, some, for the purely sensuous enjoyment of the music of the lines and some for the exercise of their intellects in attempting to discover the pearls of thought embodied in the works of the great poets. For, it is an undoubted fact that in no more palatable form can home truths be imparted than by the sugar coated medium of poetry. We can obtain philosophy from many books; plain truths are levelled at us every Sunday and holy day from hundreds of pulpits, but for the most part they are so much good seed flung on barren ground for the simple reason that the sowers do not know enough to tickle the sod properly. As a matter of simple fact all the philosophy that there is in the world or is likely to be was produced hundreds upon hundreds of years ago by pagan and Christian thinkers and all that sophists and sages have been engaged in ever since has been in smashing the older images and remoulding the clay into all sorts of grotesque and beautiful forms to present them to a world always on the watch for something startling. If it were not for this constant variation of teaching it would get into a very hum-drum way of looking at things. It has to be kept alive by innovation upon innovation. Just as trade has to be kept alive by variations in fashions. Modern philosophy either in poetry or prose simply keeps mankind up to the mark and mindful of those higher ideals which were set by Plato and other Pagan writers and brought out and amplified to their fullest extent in the Christian dispensation.

It is quite an enjoyable study when, one is in a reflective mood, to sit down quietly and attempt to grasp the full meaning of just one short poem in any anthology. When people talk glibly as some do, of having read the works of most of our great poets and of how they dote on Browning or Byron or Tennyson or Morris or Swinburne I wonder how much they have gained in the course of their voluminous reading. It is a practical impossibility to gather in the full beauty of a poem at one perusal. Take, for instance, that beautiful hymn by Cardinal Newman "Lead, kindly Light." As a poem it is a gem of the first water and one of the greatest witnesses to its beauty lies in the fact that it loses nothing of its wonderful charm when divorced from its musical setting. How many are there who take the trouble to get at the true significance of the words? Not many. Most of us are so enthralled by the fascinating cadence of the lines that we give ourselves up entirely to the enjoyment of listening to their rendering by the choir and turn a deaf ear to the appeal which they present to the spiritual side of our nature.

TO BRUSH DUST FROM BIBLES

"Christ's Second Coming"

Subject of Second Lecture of Bible Course

"Christ's Second Coming: Why? How? When?" is the subject of the free public lecture to be delivered by Jos. Frappy, of Stirling,

Sunday at 3 p.m. in the Royal Theatre

The doors will be opened free to all, and no collection taken.

Much interest is centering in the I.B.S.A. public lecture being given here. It is said that the purpose of these Bible lectures is to reawaken interest in the study of the Scriptures on the part of the masses. Those who never brush the dust from their Bibles except when the census man calls, will do well to sit up and take notice. The Association claims that many hitherto dark and perplexing Scriptures are now due to be understood. A hearty invitation is extended to all. Since the work is wholly philanthropic in its nature, no charge is made for admission, and no donations solicited.

W.C.T.U. COLUMN

THE PARAMOUNT SOCIAL QUESTION.

I want to urge upon you that this temperance question must not be deferred. It is a matter of urgency. No reform, political or social, will avail unless you precede it with temperance reform. Temperance reform must precede every social reform that has been invented. Unless you have Temperance reform going before every reform, you simply make them of no value, and a curse to any country. Alcohol in itself is the conversion of Providence's most luscious blessings into curses, and it is the nature of alcohol, that whatever it comes in contact with it converts into a curse. There is a great movement at the present moment, and one which daily increases, namely, a movement to shorten the hours of labor.

I believe there is a general agreement over this point, that the hours of labor must be shortened. But what does that mean? It means that increased leisure will be given to the working classes. And what does that mean? Unless you precede it by prohibition it means this: Increased leisure will simply mean increased facilities, increased opportunities, increased temptations, that will lead to intemperance, and the great movement designed for the elevation of man's moral nature, for the development of his mental faculties, will simply land the working-classes in their own degredation and destruction. Can you name any social reform that intemperance will not ruin and convert into a curse. In face of all these facts, it is not a cry to temperance workers to be up and doing and drive this vile thing from our borders now and forever.

Women are Waking Up.

Everywhere women are waking up to see that organized vice is at the bottom of all the opposition to put in women's own hands the weapon men find essential to their own safety—the ballot. Do Canadian women realize that along the whole Pacific Coast, from Mexico to the Pole, the only state in which women are still reckoned with "children, Indians and idiots" is British Columbia?' The indications are that our Pacific Province will not be long behind. Just a few words to show how women's vote improved conditions in California. On October 10th, 1911, six hundred thousand women were enfranchised in California. The Legislature of 1913 was the first in which they had a voice, but already the following measures have been passed, constituting houses of ill-fame a nuisance and dealing with them as such; making the father responsible for support of an illegitimate child; fixing a minimum wage for women and children, and limiting their hours to eight a day and six days a week and many others just as important as these.

Judge Williams, of the United States Court of Appeals, says the power of the saloon in politics is passing, largely because of the influence of the women voters.

An Artistic Gum Wood Dining Room Set at $49.50

Furniture at Department Store Prices

The illustration shows the Buffet of a Dining Room Set, which consists of the Buffet, China Cabinet, and Round Extension Table.

It is made of Gum or Satin Walnut, which is a reddish brown wood, stained in this instance a little deeper shade and finished in wax.

The set being made in Early Dutch style, this dark finish and the fittings of dull brass are beautifully appropriate, giving the three pieces a genuine artistic appearance. On examining these, you will agree with us that the prices we quote on such a well-made and handsome set are extremely low.

How the Meat Supply Is Kept Safe in One Alaskan Town.

"Very patriotic lot of people live here, I see," is the remark made by almost every newcomer to the frontier town of Kuik, Alaska, at the head of Cook's inlet, when they see that almost every house is supplied with a flagpole.

And they are right about the patriotism, but it just happens that the poles are not for flags, but for meat.

Kuik is on the trail to Iditarod and the Kuskokwim valley, and in the summer the sled dogs and the flies are so thick that it is impossible to keep meat in ordinary caches near the ground.

There is no butcher shop in Kuik and the only fresh meat is moose or Alaska sheep brought in by the hunters. It's very handy for the housewives of Kuik to have the meat supply of the town up in the air. If hubby has poor luck with his gun and the supply runs out, all she has to do is to go to the door, pick out her neighbor who has the largest supply on hand and go borrow a steak or two.

The meat is fastened securely to a rope and it is run up to the top of the pole very much the same as a flag would be.—Milwaukee Journal.

Bullets That Come Back.

Speaking about a purchase of a large quantity of zinc instead of sheet lead for the manufacture of coffins, two men interested in metals joined in the following discussion:

"That is a final consumption," said one. "That metal never comes back into the market." "There are others," replied his friend, "shot and bullets, for example." "You are only partially correct," replied the first. "Some of the bullets come back. They are so economical and so well organized in Germany that after military target practice the soldiers have to pick up and account for all the lead they have fired. They are no theorists about conservation over there. They are practitioners."—Engineering and Mining Journal.

LONDON, April 18.—Premier Asquith told the House of Commons yesterday that the Government hoped to pass the bill for the abolition of plural voting before dissolution, but this cannot be done until 1915.

It is probable that the third reading of the Irish Home Rule Bill will be taken on either May 11 or 18, and the suggestion is made that in order to facilitate its passage, one of the stages in the Commons shall be eliminated.

Gin Pills

for the Kidneys

Will Cure Your Aching Back

Because Gin Pills cure the CAUSE of Backache. . . . . . . . . . . . .

That biting pain in the back—those bearing down pains—those constant headaches—that dragged-out feeling of tiredness—and weakness—mean Kidney Trouble—mean that you should take Gin Pills at once.

They Give Instant Relief

They stop the Backaches because they cure the Kidneys

As Mrs. Ripley, of Williamsdale East, says:—"Before I had taken Gin Pills, I suffered dreadfully with my back and had suffered for twenty years. I have tried everything but got no relief until I took Gin Pills. I am now 48 and feel as well as I ever did in my life. There is nothing that can hold a place with Gin Pills for Pain In The Back, to which women are subject".

Don't risk Bright's Disease, Diabetes, or Dropsy, by neglecting your Kidneys. That pain in the back, dizzy spells, trouble with the bladder or urine, show that the Kidneys are not strong and healthy. Take Gin Pills now—while there is time to effect a complete and lasting cure.

Mrs. T. Harris, of Tyneside, tells her experience. "I received your sample of Gin Pills and afterwards got a box from our druggist and am now on my third box. The Pain Across my Back and Kidneys has almost entirely gone, and I am better than I have been for years. I was a great sufferer from Rheumatism but it has all left me".

Now don't say "I have just a touch of Rheumatism"—or "I must have strained my back"—or "I caught cold". Backache is a sure sign of Kidney Trouble. Gin Pills neutralize Uric Acid—prevent the formation of an excess of Uric Acid in the Blood, thus curing inflammed nerves, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Pain In The Back—and so strengthen and invigorate the Kidneys, that every trace of Kidney Irritation disappears.

You can get Gin Pills at any drug or general store at 50c. a box—6 boxes for $2.50—and every box is sold with our guarantee of satisfaction or money back. We will gladly send you a free sample of GIN PILLS. - - - - - - Write for It.

CONFERENCES ON CITY PLANNING AT TORONTO

During the last five years National Conferences on City Planning have been held annually in various cities of the United States, and have aroused such widespread interest that many American communities are now anxious to have the Conference held in their city and are willing to contribute funds for that purpose. The city of Toronto, therefore, is to be congratulated on being the first place on this side of the International boundary to entertain the Conference, which this year will become international in scope and character. The financial difficulties have been overcome by a generous grant from the Dominion Government, which has appointed the Commission of Conservation to act as hosts. The Ontario Government and the City of Toronto are also contributing. The question of city planning is thus recognized to be of national, provincial and municipal concern, and Field-Marshal the Duke of Connaught, the Governor-General, has graciously consented to open the conference and to give an address.

The substantial assistance given by the Dominion Government is evidence that the town-dweller, equally with the agriculturist, is receiving attention, and that not only the Federal capital, but all our Canadian cities are receiving from the Federal authorities such advice and assistance as the Congress will afford them. Invitations have been sent to all the cities and towns in the Dominion, and it is hoped that many will take advantage of the opportunity. Money could be spent to no greater advantage than in giving some of our city councillors the opportunity to come into touch with experts in civic problems from all over the continent. The aldermen will carry home ideas that, put into practice, will save their towns-people millions of dollars, besides acquiring a new sense of the responsibilities of their office and higher ideals of civic administration.

The scope of the conference may be gauged by a glance at some of the topics which will form the main themes of discussion. Among these may be cited: The Relative Importance of City Planning as Compared with all other Functions of City Government, by Andrew Wright Crawford, editor of the City-Planning Section of the "Public Ledger"; Provision for Future Rapid Transit, by J. V. Davies, Consulting Engineer for the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company; Rapid Transit and the Auto Bus, by John A. McCollum, Assistant Engineer, Board of Estimate and Apportionment, New York City; Protecting Residential Districts, by Lawrence Veiller, Secretary and Director of the National Housing Association, New York City; Toronto's Water Front Development, by R. S. Gourlay, of the Toronto Harbour Board; A Consideration of the Principles and Procedure of a Canadian Town-Planning Act, a draft of which is now being prepared by a special committee appointed by the Commission of Conservation; and Recreation Facilities in the City Plan, by Henry V. Hubbard, Professor of Landscape Architecture in Harvard University.

Additional interesting features will be a tour of the city and harbour of Toronto, luncheon topics, and an open session for the discussion of subjects to be submitted by members of the Conference.

PROVINCE WILL AID IN THE WAR AGAINST CATERPILLARS

Farmers Associations Purchasing Sprayers Will Receive Subsidy Equal to One Half the Price

A statement from Jos. E. Caron, Provincial Minister of Agriculture, to the press says :—

"The entire farming population of this Province, fruit growers especially, are aware of the damage done to trees by caterpillars, insects and fungous diseases. Spraying is one of the best means of preventing these diseases, and arresting their spread.

"In order to encourage fruit-growing, the Government offers to all agricultural associations consisting of at least ten members, such as farmers' clubs and co-operative associations, purchasing sprayers, a subsidy equal to one-half the price paid in cash for the purchase of one or more of such machines, provided such half does not exceed $15 for each sprayer with fittings.

"The Department of Agriculture has made arrangements with two companies manufacturing sprayers, which will give a discount of from 10 per cent. to 25 per cent. on the current price of sprayers sold by them to agricultural associations of the Province of Quebec.

"To be entitled to this subsidy, application therefore must be made to the Department of Agriculture."

PETES' RANKS FILLING UP JOE BYRNE LATEST ARRIVAL

Blount's Men Are Getting Down to Hard Work ---Tracey and Sterling Are Expected To-day---"Bones" Creswell is Learning The Art of Batting

Special to The Review.

Youngstown, April 18.—Manager Curley Blount of the Peterborough club of the Canadian League, called his recruits together this morning at Wright field for practice. On account of the wet weather, the men have so far been unable to do anything but toss the ball. They have arranged for a practice game with the Goodlow team for Sunday afternoon at the local yard. Blount will keep his men here until May 6.

Although too early to make any predictions, Blount declares he will give the Canucks a great team. With Schlettler as his mainstay in the box, and with Mully Miller of last year's Steelmen outfit on the receiving end, Curley figures on having a strong hurling staff. Several others of his flingers have been showing something in preliminary work at home, according to report, so that the battery will cause the boss little worry.

The men now present for practice are: Belting, Creswell, Flanagan, Fox, Gafney, Kelly, McClure, O'Hearn, Ryberg, Schrage, Terrell, Nan, Dawson, Schlettler, Miller and Byrne.

Much interest is being manifested in the game Sunday. Local fans are pulling hard for Curley to cop the flag in the Canadian League, and it is a foregone conclusion that the diminutive one will be right on the job when the curtain is rung up.

Youngstown, April 18.—The first real live day was put in yesterday. The weather has been against the Petes for the first few days, but June never produced a more delightful, ideal baseball day than yesterday, and Curly Blount's aggregation were put through a couple of hard workouts. In the morning an hour and a half was put in mostly in tossing the ball around and batting flies to the out field. In the afternoon things took a baseball aspect. Batting practice was the order for over an hour, and the boys leaned on an occasional slant just for the pleasure of seeing it travel. Blount had them running the hits out and the Petes' speed was demonstrated for the first time. The boys tore around the circuit with mid-season pep, and if they keep it up the White Caps will be a team of Cobbs.

Pitchers Worked.

All the pitchers were out tossing them over, but it's a trifle too early to pick out the men who will be retained. Cresswell is in perfect condition, and the lanky boy's extra weight which he annexed during the winter should help him wonderfully. Under Blount's eye, "Bones" is also learning how to bat.

Last year his value to the club was lessened by his inability to come through with an occasional hit, but if he improves a little along that line it will take a good man to keep him off the team. Schettler, Belting and Tirril are also getting in shape fast. The pitching section will be completed with the arrival of Tracey and Sterling. They are expected today.

Fight for Infield.

The final part of yesterday's practice was given solely to a work-out for the infield. It looked quite natural to see Joe Byrne, who reported that morning, covering the difficult corner. He is in great shape, having been playing for a couple of weeks. Joe seemed to put life in the gang and when he started that familiar yell of "Let's go old boy, let's go," the infield tore around with the speed of Eddie Collins. O'Hearne is covering the initial sack and shows considerable class. Price and Schrage worked at second and short, and the fair-haired boy is eating everything up. Price is also very fast and has shown up prominently with the willow. Frank Fox is trying out for third, while Miller and King will also make a bid for an infield berth. Miller drifted in yesterday.

Two Catchers Report.

Up till yesterday McClure and Kelly have been holding the big mitt, but Chapdelaine and Mully Miller, who reported at noon and were out for the afternoon session. "Chapple" was a trifle weary after the journey from New Bedford, and didn't go hard, but Miller, who hails from Massilon, Ohio, dug right in. Miller is an experienced catcher, and Blount intends using him with the young pitchers for a few days, he and Schettler are the "old men" of the crowd.

No Game To-day.

The game with a local team, which was billed for to-day, has been called off, and if the weather doesn't go bad two more strenuous work-outs will be held. Sunday may produce a game. The grounds were a little damp when the players first arrived, but they are drying up fine and will soon be in perfect shape. The Norfolk coats have arrived and look "pretty smooth."

Youngstown Excited.

The boys have drawn considerable attention, and the sporting circle is surprised to see the speed of what they thought an inferior team. Every fellow in the burg that ever threw a ball has turned out, and yesterday some thirty players were on the job, among them being about fifteen local boys. Manager Blount is a general favorite, and the fans are watching his crew with a friendly interest.

BIG RED FISHER JOINS THE HAMS

Dr. Yates' Squad is Now Seventeen Players Strong.

Hamilton, Apr. 18.—Two more additions, in fact three, were made to the Hamilton baseball squad yesterday. Fred (Red) Fisher, the big and popular cather, made his appearance early in the afternoon, bringing with him a chap named Schmidt, a young outfielder, who has been going pretty good in semi-pro circles in the Bison city. Tyson, the lanky lad, who held down the initial sack last year for the Kolts, also arrived in the city yesterday and made his appearance at the ball park when the players trotted out for their morning exercises. Tyson has not been included in the local squad, but he is a free agent and there is a possibility that he will be given a chance. It will be remembered that he went along pretty good towards the end of the season last year, giving indications that experience was all that he needed to make a pretty fair kind of an initial sacker. The arrival of this trio brings the squad up to seventeen players, with Corns, Durborow, Morris, Dolan, Dwyer, Evans, Walmsley and White yet to report with the result that some twenty-five players will be on the job before the first of the week. Red Fisher is in the best of shape and is looking forward to a good season. He thinks a lot of Schmidt, who is a protege of his. Schmidt is a likely looking youngster and will be given a thorough trial.

TINKER BEGAN BIG LEAGUE CAREER TWELVE YEARS AGO

Joseph Bert Tinker, whose varied activties during the last few months have made him the chief joy of baseball writers and hot stove league fans, will celebrate to-day the twelfth anniversary of his big leauge debut. Tinker is a native of Kansas, and is now in his thirty-fourth year. After some experience with a Kansas City semi-"pro." club, Tinker played with Parsons and Coffeyville, Kan., in the Missouri Valley League, in 1899, with Denver in the Western in 1900, and with Portland, Ore., the following year. At the close of the 1901 season he was grabbed off by the Chicago Nationals, and on April 17, 1902, he played his first regular game in a Cub uniform. It didn't take Joseph very long to prove that he was one of the niftiest shortstop in the business, and he quickly earned a right to a place in that glorious trinity of the Chicago infield, Evers, Tinker and Chance. In 1906, 1907, 1908 and 1910 the Cub machine tore through the field to the pennant goal. Then it began to disintegrate, and when, last year, the Peerless Leader was dropped, Tinker went to Cincinnati as manager. He was unable to make the Reds finish better than seventh, but be scored a personal triumph by becoming the league's leading shortstop, ousting Hans Wagner from his pedestal. After the close of the season a lot of things happened in baseball, and most of them happened to Tinker, as a perusal of the sporting pages of that period will prove. In November Joe was released as manager of the Reds. Early in December Cincinnati declined to trade Tinker and Grob for Doolan and Knabe of the Phillies. Later in the month it was announced that the services of Tinker had been transferred to Brooklyn for a cash consideration of $25,000, of which $10,000 was to go to Joe. Tinker waited until that sensation had subsided and then pulled off his big stunt by accepting the management of the Chicago Federal League club at a salary of umpty thousand dollars a year. Since then no newspaper has gone to press without some few items relating and pertaining to the activities of the valiant Joseph. Twelve years is a long time to spend playing big league ball, but Tinker has taken good care of himself and he is likely to stick around the diamond for many years to come.

What's the matter with the local School League, Mercantile League and City League? Every other town has these leagues organized. A little of that old pep. would work in fine.

St. Thomas, April 17.—Word was received yesterday by Mayor Johnson, from the Governor-General's private secretary, stating that the duke will reach St. Thomas at 3 o'clock and depart at 5 o'clock on the 6th. The baseball officials are endeavoring to get President Fitzgerald to consent to open the season here one day ahead of the schedule, in the event of their succeeding in this, his Highness will be asked to open the championship season by pitching the first ball.

Heinie Smith at Erie, Curley Blount at Peterboro, and Eddie Holly at Toronto, are doing less articulating than any of the leaders, but they are all gathering hefty teams together.—London Advertiser.

It is likely the London Club will carry four pitchers outside of Manager Reisling. "Doc" expects to take his regular turn in the box with the rest of them, and his arm is in great condition right now. Heck is sure of his job as is also Beebe. There is so little choice between Hammond, Houseman and Riley, that right now it is impossible to say who will be kept and who let go.

The Red Sox report at Brantford on Monday.

Manager Eddie Hollys crew will be in Toronto on Monday to start their training. The Leaflets will have the advantage on the other teams, as several of their men have had a couple of weeks' work with Kelley's outfit down south. The general dope says that Schwab, Bradshaw, Kirley and Sullivan will be turned over to the Canucks. Trout will undoubtedly do the biggest share of the receiving.

This time next month and the old gag of Grandma cashing in will be worked overtime.

Pitcher Harry Donovan of the Ottawa squad, but formerly of Brantford, is a holdout. So was Swartz and Byrne.

Cosy Dolan's brother Art, who is trying for the first base job with Hamilton, is just 21 years old, and is about the same build as the Ottawa player.

The Cockneys' reputation in Brantford doesn't seem to be very high. Listen to the Courier: "Cy Reidy, Deneau's old side-kick, is starring for London in the field and at bat. That's pretty good for last year's utility man."

Rube Deneau will give Biddy Burns, formerly with Berlin, a chance for a place on the Red Sox outfield.

Eight members of the Erie team have reported.

George Ort, former Saint manager, leaves Sunday to join the Torontos, for whom he will play first base. Ort has wintered in St. Thomas.

Andy Kyle, former London Canadian Leaguer, may be seen with the Brantford Red Sox or the Toronto team.

Indications are that every man who was retained by the London club from last season will secure their old jobs on the team. Although Stiger and Linneborn have not yet reported, it is thought that they will get their berths again.

President Nelson of Brantford is beginning to worry about Matty Lamond, the Red Sox Canadian League backstop. The little fellow wrote to Manager Deneau early in the spring stating that be would be back this year, but since then no word has been received from him. His signed contract has not yet arrived.

Frank Shaughnessy, of the Ottawa Club, is negotiating with owner Varnell for pitchers Shocker and Peterson, and catcher Byers. They are all good men and should figure away up in their positions in the Canadian League. Shaughnessy will probably take four men from here when he leaves. So this young man who has accused me of spying around and helping the police or telling them, has accused me wrongly. Thanking you for the use of this space,

Yours truly,

MAJOR LEONARD QUIZZED.

Opposition Seeks Irregularities In N. T. R. Contract Payments.

OTTAWA, April 18.—The public accounts committee of the Commons yesterday morning continued its enquiry into the matter of the terms of settlement arranged between the present National Transcontinental Railway Commission and J. S. McArthur & Co. for work done on contract No. 21. The total contract was for upwards of $18,000,000. The board of arbitrators, after going over the contract, decided that there was an overcharge of $983,000, and recommended a reduction of payment of that amount. Under the settlement finally made the amount deducted from the McArthur account was $150,000.

W. C. King of the Auditor-General's Department, said the settlement had been agreed to on the part of the G. T. P. by Mr. Kelliher.

Major Leonard, the present N.T.R. commissioner, was then examined by Mr. German.

Major Leonard said that he had read and understood the report of the commission relating to deductions. It was a matter which was adjudicated upon by the arbitrators and the engineers before his time.

The chief engineer of the commission, he said, is responsible for the estimates and the classification. If they change their minds from time to time, he assumed that they have a right to do so.

Mr. German proceeded to ask Major Leonard to verify various documents. The major said they related to happenings before his day, and the examination was useless.

Mr. German persisted in the examination, and was upheld by the chairman.

Chief Engineer Gordon Grant will be examined at the next sitting.

TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL

Notes by Official Scribe.

The number of delegates present on Wednesday night was fair, President Hartley declaring the meeting open at 8.30.

Musicians' Action Justified.

Owen Miller, Secretary of the American Federation of Musicians, wrote justifying the action of the musicians now engaged at the Grand Opera House. They could not quit without orders from headquarters, Mr. Miller explained.

The Nationalization of Railways.

The Single Tax Association of Ontario asked for the Council's support of its objection to further subsidizing by the Government of Canada, of the Canadian Northern. This new line had already been largely assisted by the people of Canada through its cabinet, and now that Company had made an Oliver Twist stunt and asked for more. Let the Government take the whole system over, and the public money thus be used in the public service. That the national funds be used for private enjoyment is detestable in the Single Taxers' idea of the greatest number. Needless to add that the local Trades and Labor men supported the request of the Association.

Old Countrymen and Europeans Should Keep Away.

Hamilton District Trades and Labor Council have become busy on a very important question. The ambitious city "men that know," ask endorsation of their action in requesting influential British papers to show up the real state of things in this country. To gain the bounty granted them shipping agents wrongfully represent working conditions to the toiling masses, ever on the alert naturally, to better their condition, and the result is the painful spectacle of thousands of emigrants looking for work in a country where already there are not enough jobs to go around. The local Council saw no argument whatever that could be brought against this most excellent idea. They back up Hamilton.

Building Inspector Should be Vigilant.

Representatives fo the Bricklayers' and Masons' spoke on the disgraceful way that houses are being put up around the city. Technical terms were indulged in by the professors in bricks and mortar, plus cement, and the scribe, who can only boast a building knowledge of an elementary nature, found it difficult to follow. It could be understood, however, that in some of the non-inspected houses now being put up, it would be dangerous to place anything heavier on the secondfloor than an empty clothes basket. Rome was not built in a day, but whole rows of houses can be put up in Peterboro in less time than that, and the buyers of some modern residences would be lucky if their purchases did not collapse during their lifetime, leaving nothing but debris for the generations that are to come. The Municipal Committee will wait on the Board of Works and explain matters.

Next Meeting, May 6th.

Controller James Simpson is expected to address the meeting on May 6th, particulars of which will be advertised later.

"THE HARP OF GOD"

Mr. Frappy, who lectures in the Royal Theatre, Sunday, 3 p.m., will also speak in the same place at 8 p.m. on the foregoing subject. In a marvellous manner this lecture shows that the ten great Truths of the Bible harmonize with the Plan of God. Bible students, thinkers, musicians and all truth-seekers will be deeply interested in this address. Illustrated with a beautiful chart.

MISS MARSHALL SAUNDERS NOW RESIDENT OF TORONTO

Famous Nova Scotia Woman Who Wrote "Beautiful Joe" May Stay In Ontario — Has Written Many Stories for Children and at One Time Kept a Large Aviary Which Has Dwindled to a Single Pigeon.

Miss Marshall Saunders, authoress of "Beautiful Joe," the classic of the love of animals, is one of the newest residents of the City of Toronto. A daughter of the venerable Rev. E. M. Saunders, D.D., a Nova Scotian writer of more than provincial reputation, and has only recently left the Maritime Province, in company with her father and sister, Miss Grace Saunders, to take up residence in Toronto possibly permanently. The Queen City has a decided acquisition in this family. Said a Halifax paper, lamenting their departure:

"The Saunders' home at the corner of Carleton street and Spring Garden road has for years been a rendezvous of people interested in the best things, who found in the charming family group, stimulons to fresh zeal and the enjoyment which comes of contact with fine minds and gentle hearts."

If the saying of S. T. Coleridge be true:

"He liveth best who loveth best
All creatures great and small."

then Miss Marshall Saunders has lived and lives most wisely. For, besides writing, animals and children have been among her interests, primarily. Most of her books, as is recalled by their titles: "Beautiful Joe," "'Tilda Jane," "Daisy," "Charles and His Lamb," "The King of the Park," "The House of Armour," "For the Other Boy's Sake," "Rose a Charlitte," "Deficient Saints," "My Pets," "For His Country," "Princess Sukey," "Beautiful Joe's Paradise," "Pussy Black-Face,"

MISS MARSHALL SAUNDERS.

—have been written about animals, for children. Of course, the most famous is "Beautiful Joe," that "beautiful tale of an ugly dog," which twenty years since was the prize story in the Boston Humane Society's competition, the prize being offered for a book to mate "Black Beauty." Thousands of manuscripts were received, and the judges who pronounced in Miss Saunders' favor, were Hezekiah Butterworth and Edward Everett Hale. Translations of this favorite book have been made into Swedish, Japanese, and German; the estimate was given out last year that its boy and girl readers approximate a million.

Contrary to the general supposition, "Beautiful Joe" was not the first venture of this author into the traditionally "hard" world of literature. She began—she says herself—with a burglary story! She had taught for a while in her native Nova Scotia, having completed terms of schooling in France and Scotland, and had found teaching hardly to her liking. "Why don't you write?" said Dr. Theodore H. Rand, a great friend of the family and at that time chancellor of McMaster University, Toronto. "Why don't you write up the winter beauty of the Nova Scotian woods—the rabbit tracks in the snow"—he worded a picture.

Miss Saunders was charmed with the picture, of course, for Dr. Rand was a poet, but she thought she would leave it to Dr. Rand to write it. She took the writing idea, however, and did a burglar story in the next three weeks. It brought her promptly the sum of forty dollars The girl was enchanted. She had only to scribble a little, she thought, and her way would be carpeted with cheques. It was with—checks That is to say, her next story was returned and brought her "nothink," as say the Cockneys.

Miss Saunders had, once, in her home in Halifax, two hundred birds—Australian parakeets, a purple gallinule, a Japanese robin, several ring doves, fantail pigeons, homers, canaries, and other birds too numerous to mention. They have all been given away except one pigeon—Sukey.

Wants Modern Methods.

The interest of the Province of Saskatchewan in the welfare of its schools is indicated by the fact that the Department of Education gives all teachers the right to attend the annual convention, and makes provision for the payment of the grants for the day on which school is necessarily closed. A large number of boards encourage their teachers to attend by giving them an allowance for expenses.

MRS. GLADSTONE WHISTLED.

The G. O. M. Could Tell the Story — All But the Finish.

Apparently the powers of Mr. Gladstone as a siffleur were somewhat limited, judging by the amusing story told by Rev. T. Selby Henrey in "Attic Salt." Mr. Gladstone and Dean Wellesley were schoolfellows at Eton, and the friendship there commenced continued throughout life. When they were both in the 'sixties they met at a little dinner-party at the Deanery at Windsor, and the great statesman jocularly said across the table to the dean:—

"I say, old friend, I have got a good story for you about Harry Phillpotts, Bishop of Exeter."

Upon which Mrs. Gladstone hastily interfered:—

"William, you must not tell that story until the servants have left the room."

When the psychological moment arrived the Premier said:—

"You know, Wellesley, that Bishop Phillpotts, during his old age, acquired the habit of sitting up late at night with his chaplain. Well, one night he was comfortably ensconced in his study chair, with feet against the mantelpiece, dreamily looking into the fire, when he heard footsteps at the door and the noise of a dress behind him.

"Without looking up he said, in a very endearing voice (thinking the intruder to be his wife): 'What can I do for you, my little darling?' To his great astonishment the trespasser proved to be, not his wife, but his wife's maid. And the only way in which the poor bishop could give expression to his feelings was by a long-drawn-out, subdued whistle."

Mr. Gladstone at this juncture said, "I cannot manage the whistle, so I will ask Catherine to give it," and Mrs. Gladstone finished the story by giving the long-drawn-out whistle, to the delight not only of the dean, but also of all the guests.

Land of Long Livers.

If race suicide and race degeneration applies to the more settled centers of the North American continent, its effects do not seem to have penetrated across the Straits of Northumberland to Prince Edward Island, where, according to a recent census, it is shown that the largest per thousand of people over seventy years of age are to be found than in any other province of Canada.

In most countries a fourth generation is rare, but Prince Edward Island can boast of a fifth, in the Poirier family, of Tignish, the men of which are fishermen, and men of robust health. The head of the family, great-great-grandfather Poirier, has 202 living descendants, and at 99 years of age gets up at daybreak, turns his fish on the "flakes" to dry and chops his wood.

Railroad Fatalities.

A contemporary has estimated that since the average length of a railroad journey in this country is thirty-four miles, and a passenger may take 2,275,122 such journeys with only one chance of being killed, it would take him, at two trips a day, 3,792 years to run the full gamut of risk. That is to say, if the one fatal accident happened to him in the present year it would have been necessary for him to start his railroad traveling, at two trips a day, in the year 1879 B. C. It must be borne in mind, however, that he might be killed on his first trip.

Schoolboy Blunders.

These mistakes by British schoolboys are reported by the London Times:

"When the last French attack at Waterloo proved a failure Napoleon turned very pale and rode at full gallop to St. Helena."

"A problem is a figure which you do things with which are absurd, and then you prove it."

"When Chaucer describes the prioress as 'amiable of port' he means that she was fond of wine."

"The mineral wealth of a country is ginger beer and lemonade."

A Giant Redwood.

The largest tree in the United States is said to be the mother of the forest, a giant redwood in the Calaveras big tree grove in California. It is supposed to contain 140,619 board feet of lumber. There are, however, many claimants for the honor of being the "largest tree" and the "oldest tree," and these claims, according to foresters, cannot always be verified.—Indianapolis News.

"He seems quite appreciative."

We must be careful to have our principles and be ready to die for them. But we must be careful not to label our prejudices "principles" and proceed to die for them.

Mr. Aemilius Jarvis, one of the best known yachtsmen in Canada is retiring April 25th from the Commodoreship of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club, after holding the position for eleven different years. The club's flagship, Zahra, shown in the above group is typical of the fast cruising type of yacht. She combines very fair speed with the maximum amount of accommodation. She is handsomely finished inside in butternut and mahogany, has four independent staterooms, and one main saloon, 12 x 14 feet floor space. Splendid galley accommodation and accommodation forward for 6 hands. This yacht has cruised down the Atlantic coast as far as Philadelphia. Mr. Jarvis is also known widely as a horseman. The four horses shown in the illustration are the property of Mr. Jarvis and are the hunter class. Fifteen hundred dollars would not buy any one of them. Note the immense forearm and short cannon bone of the horse nearest the camera. This is an imported horse. He stands 17 hands, weighs over 1,275 pounds. Note the difference in the cannon bone of this horse and the right centre which is a Canadian bred horse. It shows plainly the effect or non-effect of breeding to bone. Whilst he is a handsome horse and has won many prizes he lacks the strength of the one to the left.

READE'S ADOPTED DAUGHTER

Great Novelist Rarely Saw Her After Her Marriage.

A pathetic little figure of a woman, still young, sitting up in her bed at the Sundridge Infirmary, Kent, Eng., a red flannel shawl over her shoulders, gave a visitor some of her recollections of the great writer of "The Cloister and the Hearth," says a London paper. She was Charles Reade's adopted daughter, Katie Reade—and she made the statement with a little nervousness, fumbling at some knitting with which she was making time pass in the quiet ward, perhaps remembering the gulf between her present inexorable circumstances and her past.

By the patient's bed was a cot where a baby lay eyeing the visitor with some alarm. "My chum," explained Miss Reade. "They've put him there so we can amuse each other." Opposite a nurse was bending in some ministration to a sick boy; in the next bed was a wonderfully old woman. "Oh, it's pleasant here," said Miss Reade, guessing the visitor's thoughts; "they're very thoughtful for us, and very kind. It's the anxiety of what will happen to one when this place is left which is the real trouble.

Miss Reade is the novelist's great-niece, and was adopted by the great man when she was very young. When only seven years of age she was the original James Annesley in the play. "The Wandering Heir," and at ten was playing Josephs in "It's Never Too Late to Mend." Miss Reade appeared over 2,000 times in that famous drama.

When only sixteen she married an actor. Charles Reade so strongly objected to her marriage that he rarely saw her afterwards. Miss Reade admits now that her foster-father was wise in his objection, for after a few years she had to divorce her husband, and was left with a little son to look after. There were other misfortunes, which finally brought her, ill and destitute, to Sundridge Workhouse Infirmary. There she now is, with nothing but the hope that some friend will remember her and find her a place in life again.

Coin Sweating By Acid.

A sensational case of coin clipping has been reported from Palghat, India, where a Railway Police Sub-Inspector, named Venkataraya Iyer and one Parchamu Iyer, a Karista, of Mr. C. S. Sivarama Pattar Kariakar have been arrested and placed in custody pending enquiry into the case. The process employed by the accused in clipping coin is alleged to be that they used to put sovereigns in a certain acid which dissolved a grain or two of gold from each coin, and the gold held in solution was precipitated by another kind of acid. The coins thus treated were circulated, the victims in a large number of cases being the South Indian Railway Co. It is stated that the alleged fraud was detected in the cashier's department and that subsequent enquiry resulted in the arrest of the accused. It is alleged that nearly fifteen thousand sovereigns thus treated have been circulated and that there are several persons behind the scene. Local enquiries go to show that Messrs. Best & Co., Calicut, have also been duped in respect of eighty sovereigns of that kind. Some of the officers of the C.I.D. are now at Palghat making vigorous enquiries into the matter.

Commanded the King.

Sir Homewood Crawford, the city solicitor, relating reminiscenses of his experiences at the London Institution the other night, told a story of King Edward.

As Prince of Wales, the late King attended the Guildhall to preside over the centenary banquet of the Iron and Metal Ware Institution. The Lord Mayor, Sir John Knill, was also an invited guest. As the prince and the Lord Mayor reached the top table, his Royal Highness made way and said,

"My Lord Mayor, there is your seat."

The Lord Mayor replied, "No, your Royal Highness."

The prince then said, "Excuse me, you are King of the City, and that is your rightful place."

His lordship's reply to this was, "Well, your Highness, if I am King of the City, then I command you, sir, to take the chair."

All Follow Same Trade.

The discovery of a carpenter whose father, grandfather and great-grandfather practiced the same craft has been commented upon in several newspapers, and at Lamberhurst, in Kent, England, there is a family who have been inn-keepers for four centuries. In countries where the caste system prevails such a record would be thought utterly insignificant. Grant Duff notes in his Diary the answer made by a punkah-puller in Madras to an English lady who suggested that he might improve his position. "Mem-sahib, my father pulled a punkah, my grandfather pulled a punkah, all my ancestors for four million ages pulled punkahs; and before that the god who founded our caste pulled a punkah for Vishu."

To South Africa In a Fortnight.

A well-known English master of staghounds has wagered the sum of £20,000 to £5 to two members of a London club "that they or either of them does not reach Cape Town within a period of fourteen days." The fastest boats from England to Cape Town take seventeen days. The two men may use any means of locomotion they please other than train. If they accept the bet they must start on or before an agreed date. The only methods of covering the distance in the allotted time are by accelerating the ordinary speed of one of the South African mail-boats, or traversing part of the route by aeroplane. Both these suggestions are being discussed by the parties concerned.

BATHROOM SHOCKS

Keep Away From Electric Fixtures While Your Skin Is Wet.

A man is in much greater danger from electric shock when taking a bath than under ordinary conditions, as the surface of the body when moist offers much less resistance to the current than when dry. Persons have been killed while bathing by current that would scarcely have affected them outside the bath, says Cosmos of Paris.

Balthazard told at the Society of Legal Medicine of the case of a lady killed by electric shock in her bathroom at the moment when she was pressing the button of an electric bell between the poles of which there was a difference of potential of not more than 110 volts.

In ordinary circumstances, owing to the great resistance of the human body, such a small electromotive force presents no great danger, but when the circuit contains, as in the case reported, a large surface of moist skin the resistance fails and more than 100 milliamperes may pass through the organism, sufficient at this tension to produce death by tetanization of the respiratory muscles.

Currents of even forty-six volts are dangerous in a bathroom. It should be remembered that currents of feeble intensity can produce a sudden rise of arterial tension capable of causing sudden death in a person with a weak heart.

High tensions, enabling currents of four to five amperes to pass, have quite a different effect. They do not generally cause death, because the modifications of the tissue produced at the point of contact at once oppose a considerable resistance to the passage of the current. The intensity within the organism is not sufficient to cause tetanization of the respiratory muscles, and the lesions are usually purely local.

Socquet also observed a case of electrocution with an electromotive force much lower than 110 volts. There was no burn at the point where the current entered, but at the autopsy the lungs showed the characteristic lesions of asphyxia and even actual laceration.—Translation For the Literary Digest.

Schoolboy Blunders.

From England come these examples of blunders in boys' school examination papers:

"The courage of the Turks is explained by the fact that a man with more than one wife is more willing to face death than if he had one."

Question—Under what conditions will a body float in water? Answer—After it has been in water three days.

"A triangle is a square with three corners."

"The minister of war is a clergyman who preaches to the soldiers in the barracks."

"Ambiguity means telling the truth when you don't mean to."

SWORDS OF PERFUMED STEEL THAT CANNOT NOW BE MADE

MARVEL OF A CRYSTAL BALL

Rubbed Into a Perfect Sphere by Hand, It Would Be Difficult to Duplicate It With Modern Machinery—Legend of the Secret of a Swordmaker.

Steel made more than 800 years ago, with a sweet odor put in so that the metal still retains the scent—that is one of the secrets of an old Japanese sword maker described by Reginald F. St. Fere Valle of London. Mr. Valle is an amateur collector and his enthusiasm for the beauty of old Japanese art has carried him far back into the centuries.

Mr. Valle actually owned a sword of scented steel one time, but it was stolen from the office of his lawyer several years ago. He regards this loss as the greatest a collector could face and feels sure that he will never get that sword back again.

"The perfume was delicate and pleasing," he said. "It is not the only sword of the kind in the world. The royal collection at Vienna has one, and there are two or three more which have retained their fragrance for all these hundreds of years.

"The scent is actually a part of the steel. The sword was incased in a wood sheath, which gave forth no odor. The handle of the sword was of wood, which was easily removed and which gave no odor. The makers' names, father and son, were on the steel of the handle.

"I entertained a group of Sheffield steel men at my home several years ago and just as a surprise for them I had the sword on the table. They were boasting about what great steelmakers they were, and then I asked them to smell the sword. They were the most surprised men you ever saw.

"'Steelmakers,' I said. 'There is some real art in making steel; let us see you equal that.' They could not, of course."

Mr. Valle said that there are hundreds of mechanical tricks of the Japanese artisans of hundreds of years ago which have been lost. These men have made many articles which cannot be duplicated with modern machinery.

"I have in my home a crystal ball six inches in diameter," he said. "It is as round as a billiard ball; it will stand any test for roundness. That was made by hand several hundred years ago. It would be difficult to make it now with machinery, if it is possible; but think of the years of toil and the special ability required for a man to rub a block of crystal into a perfect sphere."

Mr. Valle said that old Japanese princes kept hordes of men at work, paying them fairly well. These men had food and lodging assured for the rest of their lives, and they didn't have to hurry with their work.

He told of one cabinet started by one man for the prince who employed him but who failed to finish it. He died and the prince died. The son of the artisan took up the work, expecting to finish it for the son of the former prince. They both died, and the cabinet was finally finished by the grandson of the original cabinetmaker and presented to the grandson of the original prince.

"There was one swordmaker who had the trick of making a dagger with a very hard steel point, which gradually grew softer toward the handle. He did this by taking a dagger blade of uniform hardness, packing it in clay which was thicker toward the handle. In this way when he heated the pack the heat was graded, being strong at the point and soft near the handle.

"The secret lay in the temperature of the water he put it in after heating it. No one could discover how hot the water was or how long he kept the mass in the water.

"He had several young men working for him, and one of these men, a trickster, was anxious to learn the secret. The old man prepared his bath in a private tent. One day he was coming out of the tent with a newly finished sword under his arm when the young man darted past him and stuck his hand in the water.

"The old man wheeled and struck out with his sword. He cut so quickly that he severed the young man's arm before the young man's nerves could convey any idea of the temperature of the water to his brain—or so they say."

One of the old swordmakers had the peculiar knack of making swords which, of themselves, continually searched for trouble. "Blood drinkers," these swords were named. There was one of them in the Bowes collection, which was sold in England seven or eight years ago.

"One of my friends bought this sword," said Mr. Valle. "He was explaining its peculiar nature to some of us. One of the men laughed at the superstition. Just as he was in the middle of a guffaw the sword slipped out of its sheath, the handle struck the floor and the point fell against his leg. He was severely cut. I saw this, and, while I myself don't attach any supernatural power to the sword, that series of facts keeps me from laughing at it."—New York Sun.

REFORMED SPELLING.

Dean Swift Railed Against It in the Eighteenth Century.

In the eighteenth century we had Jonathan Swift, whose mastery of prose is one of our delights, writing as the very first article which appeared over his acknowledged name "A Proposal For Correcting, Improving and Ascertaining the English Tongue." He lamented that the English tongue was becoming debased, but he attributed the cause in part to the liberties which Dryden and the other poets of the restoration had taken in shortening their syllables by omitting those very "e's" which our spelling reformers would eliminate.

"These gentlemen," wrote Swift, "although they could not be insensible how much our language was already overstocked with monosyllables, yet to save time and pains introduced that barbarous custom of abbreviating words to fit them to the measure of their verses, so that most of the books we see nowadays are full of those manglings and abbreviations." "Disturb'd," "rebuk'd," are among the words he finds especially unpleasant.

Swift was further annoyed at a "foolish opinion, advanced of late years, that we ought to spell exactly as we speak, which besides the obvious inconvenience of utterly destroying our etymology, would be a thing we should never see an end of." Also he noted with impatience in 1712, "It is sometimes a difficult matter to read modern books and pamphlets where the words are so curtailed and varied from their original spelling that whoever has been used to plain English will hardly know them by sight." How many of our "new" controversies were waged centuries ago!—Harper's Weekly.

Words From Astrology.

Astrology has made lasting impression upon the language. "Disaster" means nothing but "contrary star." "Influence" appears to have come from the inflowing of planetary power upon the fortunes of men. Such words as "aspect" and "predominant," though we might possibly have had them without astrology, have probably been helped by it. Even "consider," or rather its Latin original "considerare," is believed to have been started by meaning observation of the stars (sidera). And "jovial" and "mercurial" allude to planetary influence.—Chicago News.

Electrical Displays.

The scientific explanation of electrical displays is that where there is a sufficient difference of potential in adjacent states of electricity there is a sudden flash of light and a sharp sound, caused by the struggle to attain equilibrium. The flash is lightning, the noise thunder, whether the lengths of alternating discharges are one-thousandth of an inch or three miles, as in streak lightning.—New York American.

MONUMENTS TO THE POTATO.

There Are Several Handsome Ones in England and Germany.

Although America is the original home of the potato, it is only in Europe that monuments have been erected to honor the familiar vegetable. There are several such monuments in Germany and England costing large sums of money and presenting the work of famous sculptors. The most elaborate is that at Offenburg, which honors Sir Francis Drake as the first man to introduce potatoes into Europe.

The monument consists of an excellent statue of Drake, rising from an elaborate base decorated with garlands of the potato plant, with full grown tubers. Several tablets are placed about the base stating that Drake first brought the potato to Europe, with various laudatory inscriptions as to the value of the potato to civilization. A similar monument to Drake and the potato has been erected at Mura.

As a matter of historic fact, Drake had nothing whatever to do with introducing the potato to Europe. It is generally supposed that Sir Walter Raleigh was the discoverer of the potato, and stories are told of his appearing on the streets of London wearing a buttonhole bouquet of potato blossoms in order to attract attention to the new vegetable.

According to one version, the potatoes were first planted by Drake in Ireland. The fact is that the potato was first taken from America by the Spanish long before the exploration of either Drake or Raleigh.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Afridis Are Active.

Another raid took place recently into British territory at the bottom of the Khyber Pass and is attributed to the Afridis, who collared a number of valuable mules. Attempts have also been made during the current month by alleged Afridis to break into the guard rooms for rifles. On one occasion, a Sussex sentry fired on a party of raiders who bolted. Many cases of robbery among the bungalows have been traced to hillmen.

Yet Results Didn't Suit the Originator of the Scheme.

By EDITH BOWMAN.

"That's what I call some package," cried Hosmer proudly as he held aloft a round metal package decorated with a smiling face which was sandwiched between the legend "You can smile—if you use Dentola."

"It is pretty," conceded the head of the firm as he took the can into his hands and inspected it more carefully. "Some actress, isn't it? Her face seems familiar."

"Actress nothing," was the contemptuous retort. Hosmer could afford to be flippant when he scored a success. "That's the little typewriter over in the shipping room. I caught her smiling like that one day, and it made a hit with me. I invented the powder to go with it. It's the old 'Saponica,' with a little carmine put in to make it look different. I tell you, Mr. Powers, in a week that Dentola girl will be known all over the country, and the sales—well, I'll be around for a raise in salary in about five weeks."

Powers smiled and nodded. Hosmer had a regular scale of self praise. When he suggested that the firm owed him a hat for an idea it was only an ordinary hit. The hint that he lunched about 2 o'clock was a sign that he had greater confidence in an idea. The last time that Hosmer had announced that he was worth a raise in salary was when he had introduced "sunburn cream," which eventually had brought the cosmetic company very nearly a quarter million.

Dentola seemed destined to enjoy a more permanent success. Within two months the Dentola girl smiled upon the entire nation. Even in the tiny hamlets Dentola placards adorned the general stores.

The Dentola girl smiled life size upon the city throngs, and more than life size she beamed at train tired travelers along the trunk lines.

Vaughn, the head of the shipping department, was rather vexed over the incident. He had supposed that the picture was merely to be used to decorate the cans of powder.

It became something of a nuisance when visitors to the model factory of the cosmetic company insisted upon seeing the original of "Miss Dentola." Vaughn, resentful of the admiring glances of the masculine visitors, protested to Hosmer.

"It's all a part of the campaign," declared the sales expert, with a laugh. "Miss Dentola is the best saleswoman that ever was. We sold more than a million boxes last month, and the orders are still piling in. I tell you, Hen, it pays to advertise when you advertise right."

"Sure," assented Vaughn, "but you're overdoing it. We wanted to sell the tooth powder, not to bring people to the factory to see Miss Dentola. There was a chap in yesterday who said he had seen the pyramids and the Sphinx and the tower of Pisa and all the other show spots of Europe, but he felt he couldn't go back to Montana until he'd seen Miss Dentola. By the way he looked at her I guess he would have liked to take her back to Montana with him. He's only one. There's hundreds. It's all Miss Pryor can do to keep her work up."

"I'll take her over in my department," offered Hosmer, with suspicious readiness. Vaughn shook his head.

"She would have to learn an entirely new line of work," he objected. "She knows the shipping game now. Let her stay, even if your ads. are a nuisance and worse."

"But I think she ought to be in my department," urged Hosmer. "It is in the advertising end that people would expect to find her."

"You get out of here," demanded Vaughn, half in friendliness and half very much in earnest. He had had Minnie Pryor in his department for more than two years and had given her scarcely a look until Hosmer had made her nationally famous.

When men in Alaska began to send proposals of marriage to the girl Vaughn began to realize that his assistant was decidedly pretty, and as this knowledge came to Hosmer about the same time there ensued a pretty race for favor.

Minnie Pryor, finding herself in demand for the first time, developed into a beauty. So long as she had been merely Minnie Pryor, typist, she had gone her quiet way, but now Joseph Powers, president and practical owner of the corporation, insisted that she be given a royalty on the use of her picture, and, though this was but a fraction of a penny per box, the generous use of lithographs enabled her to dress becomingly for the first time in her narrow life.

With the purchase of better clothes she had seemed to acquire that indefinable charm which belongs to the woman who knows herself to be in demand. She did not develop what Hosmer was wont to term "big head," but she held herself well, and the apologetic little typist of the shipping room had become the belle of the cosmetic company's works.

Hosmer had his room papered with her pictures, and the more he saw them the more deeply in love with the original did he sink. Vaughn had but one of the posters in his office, for he did not need them with the girl herself bending her shapely head over the desk by the window, and he, too, was very much in love.

In the office both men made the best use of their time, but once the closing time arrived Miss Pryor disappeared. Early in the campaign Powers had suggested that the liberal use of her face had rendered the girl rather conspicuous, so the company paid for a carriage that took her to and from her work.

At first Hosmer had approved the suggestion, but now he went to the other extreme. There was no chance to walk home with Miss Pryor, and his request for permission to call was met with a polite negative.

He and Vaughn could only fight it out during office hours, and when Vaughn objected to Hosmer's continued presence in the shipping department and asked Powers to give Hosmer a hint to that effect the sales expert retaliated by again reverting to his suggestion that Miss Pryor should be transferred to the sales office.

The constant bickering could have but one effect. From surliness they passed to open warfare, and at last they brought the matter to the head of the firm.

Each pleaded his case, and then they stood waiting the decision with an anxiety that showed plainly in their faces. Each felt that a victory with the chief would aid his fight, and the moments that passed after the case had been stated were painful to them both.

Powers glanced slowly from one to the other, and his face broke into a smile.

"You both say that you have the right to Miss Pryor's services," he began slowly. "I'm afraid that you will both have to hire other typists. Miss Pryor tells me that you both are—er—rather cordial to her. It seems that you, Vaughn, have suddenly discovered that you need Miss Pryor. Only a little while before the advertising campaign was started you told me that you should have to put on another girl, as Miss Pryor was willing, but slow. I fancy that the way out of this will be to get another Dentola girl and another typist for the shipping department."

"There's no reason for such drastic action!" cried Hosmer, but Powers only smiled again.

"There is an excellent reason," he said slowly. "I am to marry Miss Pryor. She did me the honor to accept me, and as soon as the Dentola craze is forgotten we will be married. Meanwhile she has her royalty from the use of her picture, and she will not need her position. She would have told you this, Vaughn, had you waited until this afternoon."

Vaughn, too dazed to speak, turned and left the office, and Hosmer was about to follow when Powers detained him with a word.

"You said that you would win a raise on Dentola, and you have," he said kindly. "It pays to advertise, Paul."

"Yes, when you have something to sell," agreed the expert, "but I was trying to sell Dentola, not Miss Dentola. The next time I get out a good article I'm going to marry the original first and advertise afterward."

"Miss Pryor and myself are very grateful to you," said Powers, with a cordial hand clasp, "and I hope that you find another Dentola, Paul."

"And I bet I won't lose her to any other man," was Hosmer's grim reply.

A Country of Mud.

Our country is a country of mud. Our roads are no roads. They are ruts, holes, stones, sand—disgraces. Our so called, badly miscalled roads impoverish our farms, send our farmers to the city, keep our children ignorant, put our girls on the streets in search of the pleasure they cannot find in the isolation of the farm, cut off from human intercourse by reason of impassable roads. Our children cannot go to school when the roads are bad. Only when rural roads are good are rural schools well attended. We have the greatest railroad mileage, the greatest telephone mileage, the greatest telegraph mileage of any country in the world. In our roads we have the biggest opportunity—and the worst conditions—in the world.—Suburban Life.

THE GOLDEN MANIA.

Bathe In Gleaming Coins That Seemed to Soothe the Victims.

Some years ago a London journalist who had speculated in railroad stocks netted £5,000 as the result of a lucky venture. Drawing it in gold, the fortunate man repaired to a hotel, emptied the bags of gold in the bed and went to sleep literally in the sands of Pactolus. The man was so crazed by his good fortune that he found indescribable pleasure in reveling in a golden bath.

Paganini, the violinist, when he received the proceeds of his concerts—he insisted upon being paid in gold—used to wash his hands in sovereigns.

A French novelist, Soulie, wrote a book entitled "The Memoirs of the Devil." It took. The publishers paid him for the first volume $10,000 in gold. The author carried the gold to his bedroom, poured it into a footbath and enjoyed for half an hour the excitement of moving his feet to and fro in a bath of gold coins, smoking meanwhile the biggest of Havanas.

A Boston merchant of great wealth, believing certain symptoms indicated that he would become insane, consulted a specialist and, under his advice, became an inmate of a private asylum. For twelve years there his recreation was piling up gold coins and then knocking them over. At times he washed his hands in gold eagles and half eagles. At the end of the long seclusion he returned to his counting room and in twelve months confirmed the thoroughness of his recovery by amassing $500,000.—St. Louis Republic.

SPRING IMPURITIES IN THE BLOOD

A Tonic Medicine is a Necessity at This Season.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an all year round tonic, blood-builder and nerve-restorer. But they are especially valuable in the spring when the system is loaded with impurities as a result of the indoor life of the winter months. There is no other season when the blood is so much in need of purifying and enriching, and every dose of these pills helps to make new, rich, red blood. In the spring one feels weak and tired—Dr. Williams Pink' Pills develop the appetite, tone the stomach and aid digestion. It is in the spring that poisons in the blood find an outlet in disfiguring pimples, eruptions and boils — Dr. Williams' Pink Pills speedily clear the skin because they go to the root of the trouble in the blood. In the spring anaemia, rheumatism, indigestion, neuralgia, erysipelas and many other troubles are most persistent because of poor, weak blood, and it is at this time when all nature takes on new life that the blood most seriously needs attention. Some people dose themselves with purgatives at this season, but these only further weaken themselves. A purgative merely gallops through the system, emptying the bowels, but it does not cure anything. On the other hand, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood which reaches every nerve and organ in the body, bringing new strength, new health and vigor to weak, easily tired men, women and children. Try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills this spring—they will not disappoint you.

Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

GREENAWAY STYLES.

They Are Revived In Charming Designs For Little Ones.

The charming designs known as Kate Greenaway fashions are coming into vogue again. For little boys the suit illustrated here is both attractive and modish. The small trousers are of dark blue linen, and these are buttoned to his blouse of white silk. The note of blue is repeated in the collar, tie and cuffs.

GREENAWAY SUIT

Coats for the children are all important at the present moment. Many mothers are desirous of choosing a fabric that will be useful right through the coming months, one that will be warm enough for the treacherous winds that blow in March, and yet a material that will not be too heavy to wear during the following months.

Covert coating in one of the pleasing tan brown shades is ideal for a coat that is to be worn during this period. It can be made waterproof and so is impervious to the spring rains. Many women prefer its smooth surface to the more woolly fabrics that have lately been in evidence, and there are few children that fail to look neat and trim in coats made of this useful material.

BACON FOR BREAKFAST.

Bacon should be cooked in a deep iron pan which is large enough to take a rasher—not in an open frying pan. If it is cooked in an open pan it will splutter over the stove and waste the fat.

Don't try to cook it too fast. It should be cooked over a moderate heat only. Turn it with a skewer and not with a fork. Serve it on a very hot dish.

The mistake that most people make when cooking the bacon is that they put it on the fire and leave it alone, so it gets burnt in one part while it is underdone in another. You must attend to it constantly, turning it at least two or three times during the process of cooking.

LAMP AND CANDLE SHADES.

They Are Trimmed With Delicately Shaded Bead Fringes.

The smart shades for lamps and candles are made of silk and trimmed with beads. The beads are formed into a band to edge the shade, top and bottom a heavy bead fringe is used, and some ornament formed of beads decorates the sides of the shade, which is itself made of gathered silk.

One especially good shade recently shown by a famous dealer in lamps topped a lamp of dull blue porcelain mounted in dull brass.

The shade was made of old gold silk gathered neatly over a circular frame. A wide band of beads, embroidered in an irregular design, was fastened around the top and bottom of the shade. It was made up of beads in various tints of blue—brilliant, sealike blue predominated. The blue was lightened by beads of almost a greenish yellow tint and some of oyster white.

A fringe in which blue predominated hung from the bottom of the shade—a fringe about the width of the band at the top and bottom and about an eighth the height of the shade.

There were four big butterflies formed of beads—still in shades of blue—sewed on canvas. These were fastened at regular intervals around the shade. The tips of the lower wings touched the lower band of beadwork, and the long antennae almost reached the upper band of beads.

Novel Bath Luxuries.

Floating bath bowls of wood fiber are convenient and luxurious. They are filled with fine French soaps, perfumed with cologne, lavender, violet and rose. A fiber flesh brush comes with each bowl. There are also fiber shaving bowls, filled with a superior quality of soap, which make an attractive gift for the man of the household.

France has 1,800,000 families without children.

KING BREAKS PRECEDENT.

For First Time England's Royal Pair Recognizes Archbishop's Wife.

When the King and Queen recently dined at Lambeth Palace with the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Mrs. Randall Davidson, his wife, they defied a precedent in the Church of England which could almost be compared to Henry the Eighth's famous defiance of the dictates of Rome.

For never before has an English sovereign acknowledged, by the acceptance of hospitality at the hands of the wife of the Archbishop of Canterbury, that this venerable dignitary possessed a wife. In the eyes of royalty he has hitherto been officially a bachelor.

It started way back in the days of Queen Elisabeth, who became furious that her Archbishop of Canterbury took unto himself a wife without her consent. He announced it to her personally and upon his bended knees, but she pretended not to know what he was talking about and ever afterward kept up the farce of treating him as a bachelor.

From that day to this the British sovereigns have declined to know officially in the etiquette of the court that the Archbishop of Canterbury was married. It was too ludicrous to be anything but an antiquated curiosity in custom, but it has caused heartache to many pious and estimable ladies throughout the centuries.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is the most important personage in the kingdom after the sovereign and the heir to the throne, and both the King and Queen are crowned by him. In the precedence of the court he comes immediately after royalty, and he sits at the top of the dinner table even at royal dinner parties in Windsor Castle and Buckingham Palace.

But the tradition of "Good Queen Bess" have been faithfully observed by placing the Archbishop's wife at the very bottom of the table, indignant but quite helpless, as a person utterly devoid of any rank whatever, and coming in the dinner possession along with the nobodies at the very tail of the line.

Mrs. Randall Davidson, the wife of the Archbishop of Canterbury, is of distinguished family, the daughter of Archbishop Benson.

Rescued Crusoes.

Terribly exhausted after eighteen days of the direst privation and exposure, four fishermen who became storm-bound on the rocky islet of Roaninish, off the Donegal coast, have succeeded in reaching the mainland.

There had come at length some subsidence in the fury of the sea, and the men at the last desperate end of their resources resolved on the perilous attempt to make the mainland. As it was, great waves broke repeatedly over their small craft.

Originally provisioned for five days, the men each saw the necessity of husbanding their resources, and placed themselves on short rations. These were gradually reduced, and provisions had reached almost vanishing point when the Arranmore lifeboat succeeded in floating a barrel with eatables to them. They were by this time growing weak from lack of food and exposure.

A mud hut on the island sheltered them for a time, but there was practically no firewood, and they eventually demolished the roof of the hut in order to provide fuel after the peat had been exhausted. Their lobster pots went the same way, as well as every spare piece of wood discoverable. The men declare, however, that they never lost heart.

Lambeth Palace.

Lambeth Palace, where the King and Queen were recently entertained by the Archbishop of Canterbury, is now one of the only two official residences possessed by the Primate. In earlier days the Archbishops of Canterbury possessed something like a score of palaces scattered over the South of England, mostly in Kent, which vied in pomp and magnificence with the abodes of royalty itself. Portions of these, in most cases in ruins now, may still be seen at Croydon, Maidstone, Oxford, Wrotham, and elsewhere; but of them all Canterbury and Lambeth alone remain to-day. The enlargement of the domestic portion of Lambeth Palace was due to William Howley, who was Archbishop of Canterbury at the time of Queen Victoria's accession, and who, in that capacity, awakened the young princess early in the morning to inform her of William IV.'s death. He spent $250,000 in the alterations.

One For the Lawyer.

The late Lord Grimthorpe drew up the will of Dent, the great London watchmaker. He had assisted Dent in designing "Big Ben," and had advanced him money to aid him in his scientific work. This was to be repaid by will, but the technical irregularity of his drafting led to litigation on Dent's death in 1853, when the facts came out in court. A little while afterward Lord Grimthorpe was examining a well-known engineer who showed too much confidence in the witness box.

"I suppose," said the barrister sarcastically, "you can make everything."

"No," was the reply; "there are two things I can't make. One is a clock; the other is a will."—London Opinion.

Men-of-War as Merchantmen.

In the old days a government had a good chance of getting back a part of its naval expenditure. When there was practically no difference between the man-of-war and the merchantman, for the war vessel engaged in trade in times of peace, Elizabeth hired out her navy for all sorts of purposes and saw to it that she had her share of the profits. The idea might be commended to the present Government. I would willingly pay the full third-class fare to be carried to Ostend by a Dreadnought.—London Standard.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Hygiene of the Mouth.

If we neglect the hygiene of the mouth no end of serious diseases may arise, both local and general. Gastric catarrh and anaemia are now laid in many cases to an unclean condition of the mouth. Among the diseases traced to such a condition of the mouth and teeth are: In the mouth itself, dental necrosis, gingivitis and stomatitis of every degree of intensity, deposition of tartar and suppuration around the teeth; in the jaws, periostitis, alveolar abscesses, osteomyelitis, maxillary abscesses; in parts adjacent to the mouth, glandular enlargements, tonsilitis and various other troubles. Therefore it is not enough that we brush our teeth, although this is a step in the right direction and very, very important, but we must also employ more or less frequently an efficient disinfectant. The mouth must be well washed out and the throat gargled with such a solution. Keep clearly in your mind this fact—that the mouth is the main avenue for the entrance of a vast army of infections.

Very Little to Do.

These are quiet days for the "mounties" of the Medicine Hat district. Except for the regular patrol duties and the rather infrequent arrest of some petty misdemeanant, the scarlet coated guardians of the law have had little to do during the past few months, or at least little that offered much chance for excitement. And all this while the detachments in other parts of the west have had to deal with murderers, stock rustlers, yeggmen and similar desperadoes.

FOR CHEAPER DIVORCES

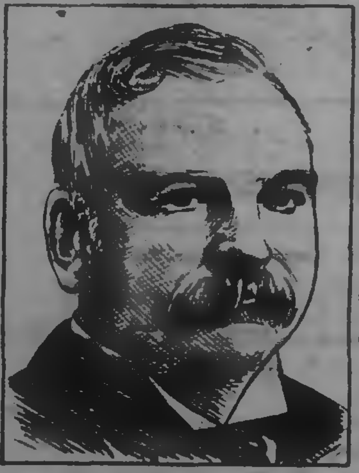
SENATOR KIRCHHOFFER HEADS MOVEMENT IN CANADA.

The Man Who Probably Knows More About the Operation of Legal Separation Than Any Other In the Dominion Has Been Head of Senate Committee For 14 Years —Poor Should Have a Chance.

The question of lessening the cost of divorces in Canada has come up again this session and along with the perennial agitation there has come into the public eye the man who has worked hardest among Canadian legislators to cheapen the untying of the marriage knot.

Senator John H. Kirchhoffer, the chairman of the Divorce Committee of the Senate, is one of the most popular members of the upper House and one of the best known men of western Canada. He was for some time a member of the Manitoba Legislature and he was called to the Senate by Earl Derby in 1892. He has been chairman of the Internal Economy Committee and was identified with the militia for many years.



SENATOR KIRCHHOFFER.

He went through the Fenian raid and the Northwest rebellion. He entertained the present King George when the latter visited Canada as Duke of York in 1901, at his hunting lodge on Lake Manitoba, when 1,000 ducks were shot in one day by the royal party. Senator Kirchhoffer is a splendid sportsman, a skilful fisherman and the champion wing shot of Manitoba.

In the discussion in the House of Commons, it was pointed out that Hon. Mr. Kirchhoffer, who has been chairman of the Senate Divorce Committee for the last 14 years, has been most unremitting in his efforts to lessen expense to the applicants and to remove as much as possible all technicalities in the procedure and that his work has been one of the redeeming features of the present system. Whatever may be the opinion of the system at Ottawa, Parliamentarians are agreed that Senator Kirchhoffer has been largely instrumental in making it as effective and as inexpensive as possible to all those who have been compelled to seek the services of Parliament in this respect.

The present system of granting divorce in Canada requires a special act of Parliament initiated by the present Divorce Committee of the upper House of the Federal Parliament and costs all the way from $500 to $5,000, depending upon the nature of the proceedings, the number of witnesses, the lawyers and the distance from the capital, so that the whole business is almost entirely a luxury for the rich or comparatively rich as far as the majority of Canadians are concerned.

Col. Northrup, who is Senator Kirchhoffer's ally in the House of Commons, has moved that the Government of the day should take the question under consideration with a view to reforming the method of procedure. He has no desire to secure easier grounds for divorce, but he insists that there should be no divorce or that the rich and poor should be treated alike and that the matter should not as at present be made simply a question of obliging the rich.

Did Not Believe In Banks.

Gold and notes to the value of $65,000 were found in the house of an elderly maiden lady who died the other day in an unpretentious dwelling in the east end of Glasgow.

The old lady had lived on a very simple plan. She was friendly with her neighbors, but never gave an indication that she was any wealthier than others in the same neighborhood, who were all of the working class.

Some of the money was found in an old-fashioned purse, but there was no miserly effort at hiding the money, which was scattered about in different parts of the house. She had often declared that she did not believe in banks.

Feathered Police.

"Our aerial police force" is the picturesque and at the same time accurate phrase that the state ornithologist of Massachusetts has applied to the birds. They concentrate rapidly on any unusual irruption of insects or of the smaller animals that we class as vermin. They guard alike the property of rich and poor, demand no salary, accept no "graft" and ask only to be protected in the performance of their beneficent work.—Youth's Companion.

Cubic Feet.

A cubic foot of water contains one and one-half gallons (1,728 cubic inches) and weighs sixty-two and one-half pounds. One cubic foot of bituminous coal weighs from forty-seven to fifty pounds. One cubic foot of anthracite coal weighs about fifty-three pounds.

PHYSICAL COURAGE.

At 2 o'Clock in the Morning Is the Time to Test It.

It is at 2 o'clock in the morning that man's vitality is at its lowest ebb; all the physical forces are then at their lowest ebb, and every military man of experience knows that the "2 o'clock courage" counts. He knows that if a soldier is really brave at that hour he need never fear of his becoming a coward, as he is really a remarkable man.

A well fed man will fight better than a half starved man, whether he be civilian or soldier. And this is the same principle as the so called "2 o'clock bravery," for the half starved man lacks vitality, just as the average man lacks vitality at 2 o'clock in the morning.

If you are anxious to know just how brave you are make the test some morning at 2, when you hear burglars in your house. If you crawl under the bedclothes you are probably quite a normal man, but if you rise boldly from your bed, grasp the nearest weapon and sally forth to meet the robbers you are indeed a brave man and should be proud of yourself.

Any veteran of some great war will tell you that the most difficult test of courage is to be aroused from his sleep by the shrill blast of bugle and long roll of drums and ordered to charge on enemy unseen or only dimly seen at 2 o'clock in the morning. Marching into battle under the bright sunlight is not so difficult, and the seasoned veteran enjoys the thrill, but even the most hardened veteran feels "creepy" and uneasy turning out at 2 o'clock in the morning to meet the enemy amid the shadows of night, and this is solely because of a natural physical weakness at that hour and has nothing whatever to do with that mental weakness called "cowardice."—New York American.

HAVE PRETTY HAIR

Soft, Fluffy, Abundant—Use Parisian Sage. It Stops Falling Hair and Itching Scalp.

If your hair is not as soft and beautiful, or as fresh and full as that of some friend, do not despair —do as she does—give it daily attention. Beautiful hair is largely the matter of a little care. If it is too thin, make it grow. If it is too dry and brittle, soften it up—lubricate it. If you have dandruff it is because the scalp is too dry and flakes off. Freshen up the scalp and dandruff will go.

Parisian Sage, sold in fifty cent bottles at drug and toilet counters, is just what you need—it softens the scalp, nourishes the hair roots, immediately removes dandruff, and makes the hair wavy, lustrous and abundant.

Parisian Sage quickly stops itching head; cleanses the hair of dust and excessive oil; takes away the dryness and brittleness, makes it seem twice as abundant, and beautifies it until it is soft and lustrous.

You cannot be disappointed in Parisian Sage. Always sold by —a —on money back if not satisfied plan. Look for the trade mark—"The Girl with the Auburn Hair." It's on every package—accept nothing else.

OLD ENGLISH FORMALITY.

When a Wife Never Called Her Husband by His First Name.

There is a curious picture of the formality of a former generation in Sir Algernon West's "One City and Many Men," wherein he states that in his youth it was considered highly improper for a wife to address her husband by his Christian name or for a son to address his parents without saying "sir" or "ma'am."

"I never heard my mother call my father by his Christian name," he writes, "and I recollect distinctly that the fame of a very fashionable and brilliant woman was seriously imperiled because after some great man's death a letter from her to him was discovered beginning with his Christian name.

"The formal 'sir' was current everywhere. At Eton we never recognized any departure from this practice, and letters between boy friends began, 'My dear sir.'

"A friend of mine dining with Lady Jersey heard her say she never recollected her father, Lord Westmoreland, though specially attached to her sister, Lady Lonsdale, calling her anything but Lady Lonsdale. And Henry Greville, who was present at the same dinner, said that he remembered his mother, Lady Charlotte, and her brother, the Duke of Portland, meeting in the morning at Welbeck abbey, when the salutations were:

"'How is your ladyship this morning?'

"'I am quite well. I am obliged to your grace.'"

Woman's World

Mrs. Henry, Manager of a Woman's Exhibition.

MRS. NELSON HERRICK HENRY.

It has been said that most women are deficient in executive ability, but this is only one of the slanders of women that are being daily disproved by able and progressive women. Certainly the subject of this sketch, Mrs. Nelson Herrick Henry, has proved herself to possess originality and executive ability of a high order. Some years ago she conceived the idea of a woman's industrial exhibition and national housewives' exposition and has carried it through several seasons of triumphant success. The affair is given annually in New York city for the benefit of charitable organizations.

The exhibition gives one a good idea of the progress women are making in the professions and in philanthropic as well as industrial work. Representatives of many arts, crafts, professions and philanthropies are present and at their various booths exhibit either specimens of their work or show otherwise what they have accomplished.

Mrs. Henry is the wife of the surveyor of the port of New York. She is a southern woman, her birthplace having been Camden, S. C. Before her marriage to Dr. Henry she was a successful and popular writer.

Those who know Mrs. Henry best esteem her most highly, which is the highest compliment one can pay to a woman who numbers her friends by hundreds. Tactful and well bred, she has yet the force of character to carry to success anything which she may undertake. She occupies a prominent place in New York's social life, and is the leading spirit in many well known philanthropies.

POTTED FERNS.

They Make Charming Plants For Indoor Decoration.

Ferns are the rivals of palms in the affections of the indoor gardener and are considered by many the more charming plants. No one can dispute the beauty of the graceful maidenhair or its more hardy sister, the Boston fern.

The former, while exceedingly difficult to raise, will fully repay all care. The chief requirement for ferns is an absence of water on the leaves, for it scorches them and dries them just as though a fire had passed over them.

Ferns, however, require an ample supply of water at their roots at all times, though during November, December and January they are resting and the amount may then be lessened. They need only a small amount of sun, but the temperature must be as even as possible, as they cannot stand violent changes.

The Boston fern belongs to the sword fern family. During the last few years it has become one of the most popular varieties, and deservedly so, for it is easily grown and unusually pretty.

For the woman who is on the lookout for oddities there are the Platyceriums, a small family of epiphytal ferns. They are pretty in baskets or shallow pans, though they may be fastened to blocks of wood with a little peat or sphagnum about their roots. They must be kept wet and they thrive in a warm room.

Smart Spring Fabrics.

Many smart looking worsted fabrics showing a crepe effect have been brought out this season and are selling readily in suits and skirts, according to the Dry Goods Economist. Gabardines are also meeting with considerable success. Black and white checks, together with novelty checks, promise to sell freely for early spring.

There seems to be a strong tendency to favor silks. Among the most desirable at present are the taffetas, moire, silk poplins, crape tussahs and novelty silks. In cotton manufacturers are using a number of the new imported velvets in corded weaves and in printed effects. These promise to grow in favor as the season advances, being well adapted for early spring wear.

As to colors, there is a tendency toward the brighter shades. Royal, copenhagen and dutch blues are particularly well favored for suits and are also being used in separate coats.

Under the Table.

It is surprising what a lot of useful space is usually allowed to go to waste under the kitchen table. Why should it not be utilized? Brass hooks screwed into the under side of the wood might be used to support pails and other cumbersome and not exactly sightly utensils, which are allowed to stand about, getting in one's way and making the kitchen look untidy.

SCREAMED WITH THE TERRIBLE PAIN

"Fruit-a-tives" Completely Cured Distressing Kidney Trouble.

ST. THOMAS, ONT., April 1st. 1913.

"In 1911, I was laid up with Kidney Trouble and not able to get out of my chair. Had tried many kidney remedies without satisfactory results. The pain was excruciating and my screams could be heard on the street. One day a friend from Ottawa came to see me, and when he found me in such poor health, said he would send me a sample of "Fruit-a-tives", which he did and I commenced taking them. The results were so apparent with the first few doses that I continued to take "Fruit-a-tives" and was completely restored to my normal state of health. I would strongly advise anyone suffering with Kidney Trouble to take "Fruit-a-tives" and cure themselves" CHARLES CALVEART.

LIFE ON HOLLAND'S CANALS.

Where Spring Cleaning Is the Rule All the Year Round.

I think one may see barges and canal boats in greater variety at Rotterdam than anywhere else. One curious thing to be noticed as they lie at rest in the canals is the absence of men. A woman is always there, her husband only rarely. The only visible captain is the fussy, shrewish little dog which, suspicious of the whole world, patrols the boat from stem to stern and warns you that it is against the law even to look at his property. I hope his bite is not equal to his bark.

Every barge has its name. English suburban villas have not a greater variety of fantastic names than the canal craft of Holland, nor with all our monopoly of the word "home" does the English suburban villa suggest more compact coziness than one catches gleams of through their cabin windows or down their companions.

Spring cleaning goes on here, as in the Dutch houses, all the year round, and the domiciliary part of the vessels is spotless. Every bulwark has a washing tray that can be fixed or detached in a moment. "It's a fine day, let us kill something," says the Englishman; "Here's an odd moment, let us wash something," says the Dutch vrouw.

In some of the Rotterdam canals the barges are so packed that they lie touching each other, with their burgees flying all in the same direction, as the vanes of St. Sepulchre's in Holborn cannot do. How they ever get disentangled again and proceed on their free way to their distant homes is a mystery. But in the shipping world incredible things can happen at night.—From "A Wanderer In Holland," by E. V. Lucas.

The Chrysanthemum.

It is believed that the first specimen of the chrysanthemum known to have been grown in England—perhaps in Europe—was reared at the Botanic gardens, Chelsea, in 1764, and the flower's rise into popular favor in the nineteenth century was chiefly due to the good work done by the Stoke Newington Chrysanthemum society. This society held its first exhibition of blossoms in 1846, and served not only as a model for all similar associations, but also as a school of chrysanthemum culture for the whole world.—London Graphic.

Too Talented.

"Where is that barber who used to have the end chair?" asked the customer.

"We had to let him go," replied the boss. "He had too much talent."

"Whaddy ya mean—talent?" asked the customer.

"He got so he illustrated his stories with cuts when he was shaving people," explained the boss.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Legal Fiction.

Says Sir Henry Maine in his "Ancient Law": "A legal fiction is the assumption which conceals or affects to conceal the fact that a rule of law has undergone alteration, its letter remaining unchanged while its operation has been modified. The fact is that the law has been changed; the fiction is that it remains what it always was."

LIVE WIRE CANINES.

Queer Little Watchdogs on the Canal-boats in Holland.

For many generations the breed of dog now known as the schipperke was nameless, but as they became familiar features along the banks of the canals in their native country, Holland, they won their present name, which means "little skipper." Tourists of the present day in Holland will see few canal boats that have not their two skippers, man and dog. His popularity is much more than national in extent. Travelers and dog breeders, attracted by the intelligence and nervous energy of this twelve pound mite, have carried him into other countries.

The schipperke is an excellent watchdog. For generations he has been trained to guard his master's boat. His bark is peculiarly rapid and piercing, and his oval eyes see everything. He has the reputation of never sleeping except in "cat naps" of a few minutes' duration. The activity, alertness and endurance of the schipperke are really astonishing. He has been compared to a bundle of "live wires."

In appearance the schipperke is an odd little fellow. As a rule, his coat is entirely black, abundant, thick and harsh except on the head, erect ears and legs. It increases to a mane or frill round the neck. The head is foxy in type, the muzzle fine, but not weak; the neck strong and rather short and the chest broad. Many of the schipperkes are born without tails. Those that are not so born have their tails docked when very young since custom insists on a tailless schipperke.—London Standard.

Radium To Be Cheaper.

Speaking at a meeting of the Medical Society of London, Sir Frederick Treves said that at the present time the price of radium was excessive and purely artificial. "It has been said that there is a corner in radium, but that is not the case," observed Sir Frederick. "The demand is greatly in excess of the supply. I think that before very long the price of a milligramme will be $50 instead of $100, but it will never become cheap. One has only to see the process of dealing with a ton of pitchblende to obtain 75 milligrammes of radium to realize this."

Hamlet and the Doctors.

Hamlet "fat and scant of breath" and encumbered with "too, too solid flesh," Hamlet swaying indecisively between profoundest gloom and hysteric gayety, is diagnosed by The Medical Press and Circular, which says: "Read the play and consider how such a man would be treated today. The diagnosis is clear at last. A gouty diathesis and autointoxication with protein fermentation fills the bill and Hamlet's abdomen. We would promptly do a gastropexy and prescribe liquid paraffin."

Emu Commits Suicide.

A pet emu belonging to Mr. B. L. Harfield, headmaster of the Pinnaroo public school, South Australia, escaped from its enclosure and was driven back and tied up with rope. It struggled severely, and after two men had been injured it lay down exhausted. Then, raising its head, it banged it hard against the ground and died.

"Yes," remarked the crusty bachelor "it may level all things except the lover's head."—Philadelphia Press.

How a Secret Was Obtained

By MARTHA MONROE

Two men met on the custom house wharf in Naples, where baggage was being transferred from a recently arrived steamer.

"Good morning, Vincenzo," said one. "What are you doing here?"

Vincenzo Fabroni gave the other a look enjoining silence and led the way to a place where they would not be observed.

"Well, Giuseppe, I am trying to make an honest living carrying baggage. The truth is I am tired of a criminal life and wish to reform."

"But you have nothing to fear. Being a member of the Camorra, you are always sure of protection whatever you do."

"That may be, but I am not naturally a villain. I was made so by circumstances."

"Well, Vincenzo, I wish you success in your efforts to carry rich men's trunks for an occasional lira that you may make by doing so. As for me, I wish I had your opportunities in a membership of the Camorra."

"Why don't you join the society?"

"It won't have me. I have secret enemies among the members who keep me out. Nevertheless I have been reasonably successful without the Camorra's assistance. I have just steered an American tourist into the hands of bandits and shared in the ransom."

"I wish you would lend me some of it. I would like to set up a wineshop whereby to make a living."

"How much do you need?"

"Five hundred lire would start me."

Giuseppe Zarrella thought a few minutes, then said: "I need something you possess. You need something I possess. Suppose we make a trade. You wish money to set you up in business. I wish to be a member of the Camorra. I will give you all you require for your purpose. You give me a secret that will enable me to gain admission into the society."

"What secret?"

"Who murdered Di Guido?"

Vincenzo winced. "What good would it do you to know that?" he asked.

"It would open to me the doors of the Camorra. The police are straining every nerve to discover who committed that crime. Let me once intimate that I am in the secret and the Camorra will gladly admit me."

After some more talk Vincenzo said that he would think the matter over and would give his friend an answer on the steps of the sea wall at 9 o'clock the next evening. When they came together again Vincenzo said:

"Giuseppe, the risk I would run in giving you the information you wish—the risk of my life—is worth much more than 500 lire."

"How much is it worth?"

Giuseppe looked at the other, wondering how high a price he could put on his secret. Finally he said, "Could you give me 3,000 lire?"

"Yes, I will give you that. An admission to the Camorra would be worth that to me."

"Swear that you will divulge the secret to no one."

"How could I use it without divulging it?"

"I see. Swear that you will tell no one that I gave it to you."

"I swear to that."

"When will you make the trade?"

"Now. I came provided with the money."

Giuseppe took a roll of bills from his pocket, counted out 3,000 lire and put the rest back. With the money in his palm he clasped Vincenzo's hand. Vincenzo whispered the secret in his ear, the hands were unclasped, and the bills remained in Vincenzo's.

"Now, Vincenzo," said his friend, "I will tell you what to do. Report to the Camorra that you have made this money by robbery and expect an arrest, warning them to be ready to clear you. That will account for your having such an amount, and they need not suspect that I got my secret from you."

"That I will surely do."

A few days later Vincenzo reported that he had waylaid an Englishman on the heights back of the city and taken considerable money from him. He was promised that should he be arrested and tried members of the Camorra would be present at the trial and intimate by signs to the judge that if Vincenzo were convicted he (the judge) would be assassinated.

Within a week a man was arrested for the Di Guido murder. He remained in jail some time while the government was working up a case against him and taking steps for his conviction despite the threats of the Camorra. Meanwhile Vincenzo Fabroni opened his wineshop and was making for him a good living. One day a member of the national police walked by his shop several times and, when he saw it was empty, walked in. Fabroni stood looking at him with astonishment mingled with horror.

"Giuseppe!" he exclaimed or, rather, moaned.

"Don't be afraid," said the carabineer. "You are safe so far as the government is concerned. Serve me a liter of wine, and I will tell you something."

Vincenzo pulled himself together, brought the wine, and Giuseppe told him that he had bought his secret not to secure a membership in the Camorra, but to discover the murderer of Di Guido.

Her Club.

Mrs. Subbubs had joined a club for the first time. Mrs. Towuley asked her what the club was for, its aims and so on.

"I really don't know," said Mrs. Subbubs.

"You don't know? Why did you join a club when you don't see its object?"

"Because it meets on Mondays, and that's the only day in the week I had nowhere to go."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Then He Subsided.

"I never saw such a woman in all my life," said Bass. "You are never satisfied with anything."

"People who knew the man I took for a husband," replied Mrs. B., "think, on the contrary, that I am easily satisfied."—Liverpool Mercury.

CLEVER WITH HIS FISTS.

John Paul Jones in a Fight Was as Quick as Chain Lightning.

The exploits of John Paul Jones, the famous commodore, have for many years formed interesting reading for young and old students of history, and a volume issued by M. MacDermot Crawford, under the title "The Sailor Whom England Feared," adds much that is worthy of note. The hero of the book is thus described in its pages:

"Though of low stature and slender build, his neck, arms and shoulders were those of a heavy set man. His neck was out of proportion to the rest of him. The strength of his arms and shoulders could scarcely be believed, and he had equal use of both hands, even to writing with the left as well as the right hand.

"He was past master in the art of boxing, and though there were many hard nuts to crack in the various crews he commanded, no one ever doubted that the commodore was the best man aboard. To all this he added a quickness of motion that cannot be described except by saying that he was quicker than chain lightning. When roused he would strike more blows and do more damage in a second than any other man could do in a minute.

"Even when calm and unruffled his gait and all his bodily motions were exactly like those of the panther—noiseless, sleek and the perfection of grace, yet always giving one the idea that it would be well to keep out of reach of his paws and teeth."

AN UMBRELLA TAIL.

It Serves Many Purposes For the South American Anteater.

One of the old natural history stories that have been only half believed is that the South American anteater uses its great bushy tail as an umbrella whenever it takes its walks abroad in a shower. The story is partly true. And the tail has other excellent uses, as one might suppose of so extraordinary an appendage, for perhaps no other animal of the woods has so much tail in proportion to body.

The tail is like a huge plume, but differs from the feather and from such flat, feather-like tails as form the rudders and balancing poles of the squirrels in having its hairs arranged in two enormous fringes along the upper and under surfaces of the tail—not along the sides of it.

The benefit of this arrangement is that when the anteater lies down at rest, with his tail bent sidewise, as is his wont, the long hairs of the tail completely cover the body like a cloak or umbrella and shed the rain like a sloping thatch. The hairy covering is also useful in keeping away troublesome or dangerous insects, and its dull gray tint harmonizes so well with the lights and shadows of the forest that it actually helps to hide the animal from its enemies while it sleeps.—Youth's Companion.

A Marvelous Makeup.

George Robey tells this story in an interview in London Motor: "I do not remove my makeup in driving from one London hall to another, but travel with the grease paint still upon my face. One night we had a little altercation with the driver of a vehicle, who quite forcibly declared that he had not seen us coming toward him, which was quite true, because he had been fast asleep. At last I looked out of the window at him, when, jumping back in surprise, he demanded, ''Oo's the old fright you've got aboard?' 'My master is Mr. George Robey,' responded my driver, with dignity. 'Well, you tell 'im,' said the man, scrambling up into his cart, 'that if 'e'd sit on the engin' with that face and nose and them eyebrows, 'e wouldn't want no 'eadlights in a fog!'"

His Money Was Safe.

Schopenhauer, the German pessimist, was asked one day to dinner by a gentleman who had also invited a number of Prussian officers. Said one of the officers to Schopenhauer, "Why do you put a frederic under your plate?"

"I have made a vow," replied the philosopher, "to give this piece of money to a beggar the very first time I dine with the military without hearing talk about women and horses. It is fifty years since I made this vow, but I have not yet been called upon to bestow my frederic in alms."

Harder Still.

Senator Sheppard was talking about a pathetic figure in Texarkana, an old merchant who, after attaining a position of eminence, now saw his trade slowly deserting him for younger and more radical rivals.

"Poor old Blank is a pathetic figure," said Senator Sheppard. "He shows us that, hard as it is to climb up in the world, it is harder still to climb down."—New York Tribune.

Just What She Said.

"Does he ever try to flatter you?"

"Indeed he doesn't. He always tells me the plain, unvarnished truth."

"Why, I heard him tell you that you were bewilderingly beautiful."

"Didn't I tell you so?"—Houston Post.

A Mutual Pleasure.

Mother—Were you glad to get back to school and see your dear teacher? Little Son—Well, I—I was just about as glad as dear teacher was to get back and see me!

Time Wasted.

Madeline—He's a nice young man to take a girl fishing, I must say! May—Why, what did he do? Madeline—He fished!

Weary Sufferers Welcome

Dr. Stohr's Kephaldol

Pronounced Keph-al-dole

THE GREAT UNFAILING PAIN RELIEVER

In all cases of NEURALGIA, NEURITIS, SCIATICA, GOUT, RHEUMATISM, etc., especially in acute form where maddening pain makes life almost unbearable, KEPHALDOL offers that which will evoke heartfelt gratitude—relief, prompt and certain, with speedy cure ahead.

KEPHALDOL is no injurious drug, no charlatan nostrum—thousands of medical men all over the world, including all representing the clinical opinion of Vienna (to which City belongs Dr. Stohr, KEPHALDOL'S famous discoverer) have pronounced this remedy to be a means not merely of alleviating, but of stopping pain without risk of injury to the heart or other organ of the body.

MRS. A. E. TURNER, 52a, Willoughby Street, New Lenton, Nottingham, writes:—

"I must say Kephaldol seems to charm away the pain like nothing else does. I have tried a great many things for Rheumatism, but Kephaldol eases the pain quicker than anything I have ever had."

MR. LAWRENCE WINDLEY, Cranleigh, Dane Road, Luton, Eng., sends the following letter;—

"I had rheumatism in my leg, and had to go about with the aid of a stick. I took two Kephaldol tablets at 10 a.m., and by eleven all trace of pain had disappeared and I have not had it from that day to this. All you say of Kephaldol is true. It is a pain killer. The remaining tablets I gave to a friend suffering with acute Neuralgia, and they have positively cured him."

A letter from MRS. BEATRICE COSSEY, Brookfield, Eng., is worth repeating:—

"My experience of Kephaldol as a pain killer is absolutely marvellous. I had a fearfully acute attack last year of Neuritis, Sciatica, and Lumbago, and it did wonders for me. I shall always feel most grateful for what it has done, and I am most happy to let others know of its wonderful effects as a pain destroyer."

KEPHALDOL IS SOLD IN TUBES BY DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE AT FIFTY CENTS A TUBE

If you find any difficulty in procuring locally, a large tube will be sent direct by the Manufacturers upon receipt of 50c. Address: KEPHALDOL LIMITED, 31 Latour Street, Montreal.

ON THE FRONTIER.

Far West Missionary Tells of Life In Undeveloped Canada.

Mr. J. M. McCormick, the head of the little army of missionaries working under the Navvy Mission in Canada, is at present in London.

"The whole manhood of Canada is being made out there on the frontiers," he says, "away from anyone who sees or anyone who cares, except, maybe, a wife or a mother or a sweetheart away in the home-land, waiting for the man pushing the steel road out on to the prairie and laying up the capital that will set him up on his farm and bring his folk out to him across the Atlantic."

In England the navvy is "the bloke what lives rough so as other people can live smooth." In Canada he is the man that faces death and disease and mutilation every day to build the lines that pay the investor's dividends. And Mr. McCormick has come home for just a little share of those dividends—say, 50,000—to send out another dozen missionaries and a few hospitals and a score or so of libraries and schools and meeting halls to the men who have left civilization behind them at the rail-head.

"Not that these men are the scum of humanity," he warns you. "Don't get thinking that. They're magnificent men, the men who are going to be the backbone of Canada. These men don't stay navvies. They work there till they can save capital to stock the 160 acres that the Government gives free to men who show proof that they can work them."

In camp the sky-pilot with his fiddle or gramophone ("canned music" in camp parlance) is no unwelcome visitor, provided he can pull off his coat and show his grit by taking his turn at navvy's work. Religion, like everything else, has no frills in the West. You get back to the elemental things—sin, and God, and prayer.

"What about drink?" Mr. McCormick was asked, as he spoke of the odds the missionary had to face.

"Drink is absolutely prohibited," he replied. "That doesn't mean that it doesn't come in. I have seen it come in in coffins, in dynamite kegs, sewn up inside of dead pigs, and hidden in casks of butter.

"I remember a crate of eggs arriving once. Every egg had been blown hollow and filled with whisky and sealed up. Those egg sold at a dollar apiece.

"One man I knew had a pair of hollow steel corsets made, and wore them under a big coat. They were divided into two compartments, and he sold port wine out of one side and whisky out of the other. The liquor went in through a little hole at his neck and come out of a tap through a waistcoat button hole."

It is a great work, in truth, among the men who "live rough," and—as Mr. McCormick did not tell The Daily News' reporter—it takes great men to do it.—London Daily News.

When the Consul Won.

The Montreal consul of a Central American republic has never been seen in public without a silk hat of uncertain vintage. In the last Dominion election he won a hat from a Liberal friend, and the latter, determined that the consul should sport a more seemly specimen of headgear, left instructions at a leading store that the winner was to be fitted out with the best hat in stock. When the consul appeared to claim his prize he was shown a topper of the latest style and best quality, priced at eight dollars. He explained that, as he wore his silk hat in all weathers, something cheaper would suit him. The hatter, surprised at the winner's moderation, showed him some hats at five and six dollars, but he still insisted that they were too expensive. The shopman, ruefully abandoning his vision of a good sale, finally produced several hats which, he pointed out, were so hopelessly out of style, and of such inferior quality that they were sold for one dollar each, principally to coachmen and cab-drivers.

"The very thing!" exclaimed the upholder of the dignity of the Disunited States of Revolutionaria. "Send me up eight of those."—Saturday Night.

A Substitution.

Dr. Gore, the Bishop of Oxford, is endowed with a keen sense of humor, and is rather fond of telling the story of how, at a diocesan examination, one of the questions ran thus: "Name the three evils mentioned in the Litany from which the Church prays to be delivered."

Judge of the examiner's astonishment when instead of the answer "False doctrine, heresy, and schism," he read the words, "Bishop, priests and deacons."

CHILDHOOD CONSTIPATION.

Constipation is one of the most common ailments of childhood, and no child suffering from it thrives well. To banish it no other medicine acts so promptly and surely as Baby's Own Tablets. They never fail to bring relief. Concerning them Mrs. Dominique Ferland, St. Michel, Que., writes:—"I consider Baby's Own Tablets a marvellous remedy for little ones. I gave them to my baby for constipation and they soon made him well again." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

STRONG WIND AND ICE PLAY HAVOC WITH FLOATING BRIDGE AT CHEMONG LAKE

One Hundred Feet of the Bridge on Smith Side is Demolished

Without the slightest warning, and much quicker than it takes to tell it, the floating bridge between Ennismore and Bridegnorth was broken and partially carried away yesterday afternoon about one o'clock. The accumulated ice, carried against the bridge with the force of the strong wind which prevailed, and the pressure of the wind itself, just took ten minutes to twist the massive structure into ruins. One hundred feet on the Smith side of the mile span was buried or sunk beneath the ice, and another part was carried down about 200 yards.

Very fortunately no one was on the bridge when the break occurred, but several persons were isolated on the Ennismore side, especially those who had attended late mass at St. Martin's Church, and as a result had to drive eighteen miles around the head of the lake. All phone connections on the far side of the bridge have likewise been severed as the cable ran across the bridge. Just how long it will be before it is repaired cannot be ascertained, but if the wind does not become contrary, there are prospects of having it fixed in a week or ten days.

J. P. Scollard, the Ennismore postmaster, had to drive around the lake this morning, but be intends leaving a team on this side and work across on the ice and by boat. The ice is some six inches or more thick, but is free at the edges and a strong wind would break it up in less than an hour.

PNEUMONIA WAS FATAL

THE LATE WM. O'LEARY WAS CARETAKER AT CHEMONG BRIDGE.

A very singular incident is that Mr. William O'Leary, the well-known caretaker of the Chemong Bridge, passed away last night. He assisted at the building of the bridge and when completed in 1900 he assumed the office of careaker, which he held till his recent illness from pneumonia, which caused his death. In all the time the late Mr. O'Leary was connected with the bridge, there was no break of a more serious nature than the one yesterday. Some eleven years ago the flood of ice in the spring swept over the top and carried away the railings, but residents of that section state that it was not as bad as it is now.

Mr. O'Leary was a member of St. Martin's Church, Ennismore, and widely known. He leaves a widow, three sons, Daniel, of Buffalo; William, of British Columbia; and James, of Bridgenorth; also six daughters, Mrs. James Bogue, of this city; Mrs. P. Bennet, Montreal; Mrs. L. Calse, of New York; Mrs. W. Gereghty, of Bridgenorth; Miss Frances, of Toledo; and Miss Minnie, of this city, to mourn his death.

The funeral will take place at 8 o'clock from his late residence at Bridgenorth on Wednesday morning, to St. Peter's Cathedral and Cemetery.

CASE DISMISSED

Garbage Collector is Charged With Cruelty Towards His Horse

The charge against Wm. Hare, garbage collector, with cruelty towards a horse, was dismissed by Magistrate Dumble this morning.

Evidence by Sanitary Inspector Spence was to the effect that in his opinion the horse was not in fit condition to use. Dr. Rogers said the horse was suffering from lamanitis, but not suficiently so to cause its removal to a stable.

"What are we going to do, make sausage meat out of it?" remarked Magistrate Dumble.

COWARDICE COURT IN THE REVIEW TODAY

Another of Geo. McCutcheon's Interesting Stories.

An irate British lord and his beautiful but petulant land; the Hon. Penelope Drake, youngest and most cherished sister of his lordship; Randolph Shaw, a handsome and athletic young American, and a French count are the leading characters in an amusing and highly entertaining romance by McCutcheon, the prince of American story tellers, which will appear in The Review commencing to-day. Cowardice Court will interest Review readers. It captures the interest from the very first paragraph, and there is not a dull line in it from start to finish.

Boats on the River.

Canoes and motor boats were fairly prominent on the Otonabee yesterday. Canoes were greatly in the majority, and in a few weeks the water fronts will present unlimited activities.

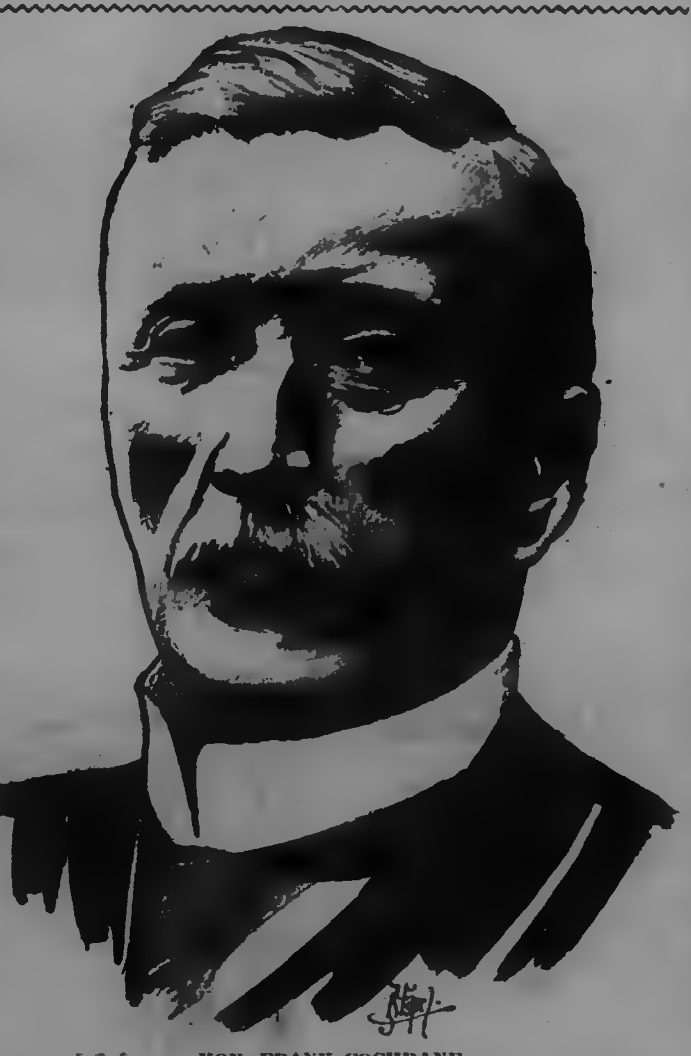
BUSY INTER-SECTIONS SHOULD RECEIVE ATTENTION OF POLICE

The time has arrived when the Police Department, strengthened as it has been by the addition of officers, should provide some system whereby traffic on George Street can be controlled.

Action such as this is urgently required at the Corner of Hunter and George Streets, and particularly so at the corner of George and Charlotte Streets.

It should not be necessary to wait until a fatality has robbed a family of the breadwinner. Accidents are occurring almost every day. There were several Saturday night.

The traffic by-law is not enforced as it should be for one thing, and it would appear that two policemen—one for each inter-section—could be spared to do duty on Saturdays, at least, and stop what appears to be an almost utter disregard of traffic regulations.



HON. FRANK COCHRANE.

Minister of Railways and Canals, who is now on an extended European trip in search of better health. Just at present Mr. Cochrane is in Scotland, and his intention to avoid the cares of office till he is feeling physically fit is shown by his refusal to be interviewed in London upon the Dominion Railway Board's decision regarding Western freight rates.

CONTRIBUTIONS AT ALL SAINT'S

Easter Offerings So Far Received Amount to $1006.

At All Saints' Church on Sunday, the rector, Rev. R. B. Grobb, thanked the congregation for their liberal contributions at the Easter offerings. One thousand and six dollars had been contributed, and there were some envelopes still to be presented.

Rev. Mr. Grobb also announced that the loose collections of the year had increased by $543 over the previous year. This, he said, was tangible evidence of the progress of the church.

JOHN GILPINS

Men Were Intoxicated While in Charge of Rig

A runaway Saturday evening on George and Charlotte Streets, ended in Robert Anderson and Frederick Anderson appearing before Magistrate Dumble this morning charged with being drunk while in charge of a horse and rig. They pleaded guilty and were each fined $5.75.

Their mismanagement of the horse resulted in its running away and nearly resulted in numerous accidents before its break for liberty was stopped.

P. C. Hayward and Phymster arrested the men.

EXAMINATIONS FOR PROBATIONERS

Examinations for probationers of the Bay of Quinte Conference, now holding charges, will be held at Charlotte Street Church, commencing Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock. Rev. J. G. Lewis, secretary of the Board, will be in charge. Sixteen candidates sent applications.

A very pretty dessert and one quite delicious, is grape jam served with whipped cream.

SACRED HEART C M.B.A. RECEIVE COMMUNION

The Sacred Heart Branch of the C.M.B.A. No. 509, attended the eight-thirty Mass at the Church of the Sacred Heart yesterday morning, and received Holy Communion in a body. Rev. J. J. O'Brien spoke very highly of the good work the society is doing in the parish and assured them of his hearty co-operation in all their undertakings, which he knew would always tend toward the elevation of man and defence of Catholic truths and doctrines.

Messrs. J. Picard, Sr., and L. Heath acted in the capacity of marshals.

SERVICE AT ST. JOHN'S TO-NIGHT

At large congregation is expected for the St. George's Day service, to be held in St. John's Church to-night. At six o'clock the Lord Bishop of Kingston will be the guest at luncheon in Coleman's Savoy, and the proposed new church for Brownton will be discussed.

Rev. J. C. Davidson, in announcing the service to be held this evening, said that with the glad approval of St. John's congregation, the church had been lent to St. George's for the occasion, and the service would be under the full direction of Mr. Price, with whom St. John's people would co-operate.

NO MIDNIGHT DISCUSSIONS FOR EX-ALD. GILLESPIE

"Nothing doing," was the response of Mr. G. A. Gillespie to a Review reporter this afternoon when asked if it was his intention to become a candidate for the aldermanic election in the centre ward caused by the appointment of Ald. Gordon as City Solicitor.

Mr. Gillespie said he was going to rest up this season and attend to business.

Mr. H. P. Morgan has stated that he would accept a nomination.

BASS SPAWN FOR STONEY LAKE WATERS

Will Come From the Hatchery on Grand River

SPECIAL DEPARTMENT WITH DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. E. A. Peck Will Also Take up Matter of Hatcheries for Bass and Maskinonge

Through the efforts of Mr. Peck, M.L.A., a large quantity of bass spawn from the hatchery on the Grand River will be placed during the coming summer in Stoney Lake and the adjoining water. This will be good news to the many residents of these waters and incidentally add very much to the usefulness of the lines of such well known fishermen as John Carlisle, Ben Shortley, Josh Collins, D. W. Dumble, Bob Neil and many others who up to the present have wasted unnecessarily such a lot of time in endeavoring to catch their alloted number. As fish will in future be more plentiful, the time required to catch their quota will be much reduced, so that more of their time can now be devoted to improving their cottages, cutting wood, etc., and in other acts of usefulness to mankind in general.

Department for Fisheries.

Mr. Peck also informs the Review that a separate department is to be formed for fisheries, and that a Deputy Minister will be appointed. This will be welcome news for the people of this district, especially as we will now have the fish question looked after in an intelligent way. The Government could not strike a more tentative chord at the present time than by putting the fish and the whole game question in a more intelligent and useful condition than it has occupied heretofore. The many sportsmen and the people in general in this district want fish and game and at reasonable prices. We have as great natural features and facilities for propagating fish as are to be found in the world, and we should be able to derive some benefits from such a district. It has been very difficult to make anyheadway with the fish question, as the fish and game came under the general Department of Public Works, but now a special department is to be formed, and the old timber is to be laid aside, so that our representative can now make some progress in getting the present condition of affairs improved. Mr. Peck is to take up the question with the new Deputy Minister of establishing hatcheries for bass and maskinonge at Stoney Lake and has every hope that he will be successful.

PAINFUL MISHAP TO MRS. H.S. MacDONALD

Suffered Fracture of the Leg Through Accident Saturday Evening

Mrs. H. S. Macdonald, 338 Rubidge Street, met with a painful accident about six o'clock Saturday evening, when she sustained a fracture of the leg between the knee and the ankle.

Mrs. Macdonald boarded a street care at the corner of Simcoe and George Streets, but had to be taken from the car at the Charlotte Street corner. She is unable to explain just what caused the mishap.

Several gentlemen, among them being Messrs. W. J. McDermid and R. H. Ross, gave assistance, and Mrs. Macdonald was placed in the automobile of H. J. McCannan and taken to her home.

Mrs. Macdonald had just recovered from an illness. Numerous friends will extend sympathy, coupled with the hope for a speedy recovery.

On May 24th and 25th the city will be invaded by the crack Belleville regiment for an outing. Arrangements are under way for the entertainment of the visitors, who will be in the city over the week-end.

The regular weekly drill and march-out will be held to-morrow evening.

DON'T GET IMPRESSION WE ARE GOING TO HAVE WAR

PRESIDENT WILSON'S STATEMENTS TO THE PRESS CORRESPONDENTS

In no Circumstances Would We Fight the Mexican People He Says—Seizure of Ports Would Have Precedent in Action by British Warship

Canadian Press Despatch.

Washington, April 20.—"Don't get the impression that we are going to have war with Mexico," President Wilson told the newspaper correspondents to-day. "I got a feeling of uneasiness to-day when I read the papers and found them fired with enthusiasm for war. I have no enthusiasm for war. I want justice. In no circumstances would we fight Mexican people. This is an issue between the American Government and a person calling himself the President of Mexico, whose title we have never acknowledged. If Huerta takes a wise course, this may not eventuate a war."

The seizures of Tampico and Vera Cruz would not be acts of war, the President said, and cited as a precedent, the bombardment of Greytown by British warships, which was an act of reprisal.

NO CHANGE IN SITUATION AT NOON.

Washington, D.C., April 20.—The Mexican situation at noon is unchanged, with no new proposals from Huerta. Congress meets in joint session at three o'clock, and the foreign affairs committee are at work on a resolution. President Wilson has a message of one thousand words, which will take ten minutes to read to Congress, but he will not give out copies until he begins reading. The administration feel there is a possibility of something turning up during the day to modify the present intentions. In the meantime great activity prevails in naval and military circles.

SILVER PIECE FROM THE BAR ASSOCIATION

Members Regret to Sever Pleasant Associations With Mr. L. M. Hayes.

On Saturday afternon the members of the local Bar Association met in the office of Hall, Hayes and Hall and presented Judge L. M. Hayes and Mrs. Hayes with a beautiful silver tea piece.

In making the address President Johnston of the Bar Association spoke of the regret of the Association in the departure from the city of Judge Hayes who for twenty-seven years had been a popular and prominent man among them. Mr. E. L. Goodwill then presented Judge Hayes with the silver.

Police Magistrate Dumble spoke feelingly of the departure of Judge Hayes and made several references to his career here. He expressed himself strongly that Judge Hayes would make a good and wise judge. He had the essential qualities of a judge. Concluding he wished both prosperity and happiness. Judge Huycke also paid a neat tribute to the departing member.

Mrs. Hayes was also presented with a beautiful bouquet of flowers from the members of the Bar.

Sheriff Hall also paid a high tribute to the valuable services of Judge Hayes. It was a high honor for a member of the Association.

In an appropriate and feeling reply Judge Hayes thanked the members for the many honors and kindness bestowed upon him. He was deeply grateful and felt it hard to realize that so soon he was to leave. The members were like brothers after his residence of some twenty-seven years in the city. He had a peaceful life and the office with its associates was a hallowed spot in his memory. "I thank you, for your beautiful present which will always be a remembrance of the flattering kindness shown to me at Peterborough," he concluded amid applause.

Mrs. Hayes spoke feelingly of her departure from the city and her many friends whom she had learned to love and respect.

Amid three cheers the function was brought to a close.

Among the members present were: Judge Huycke, Magistrate Dumble, Sheriff Hall, Messrs. Hall, Sherry, O'Connell, Corkery, Peck, McElderry, Gordon, Goodwill, Ruddy, Bennet, Wearing, Nesbitt, La Plante, Green, Moore, Johnston, Hatton.

HONORED BY MEMBERS OF THE PETERBORO CLUB.

On Saturday evening, at an informal gathering of the Peterboro Club, Judge L. M. Hayes was presented with a handsome cabinet of silver by the club members. President E. G. Patterson, on behalf of the members, in a most appropriate address, spoke of the sincere regret at the departure of Judge Hayes from their midst.

Judge Hayes, in his remarks, thanked the members for their kindness shown him while a member of the club.

Other addresses were made by Judge Huycke, D. O'Connell and W. R. Travers. Mr. E. H. D. Hall, partner of Mr. Hayes for over twenty years, spoke of his deep regret at the loss of Mr. Hayes, but was happy to realize that his services had been recognized by this appointment as County Judge for Wellington.

Judge Hayes was sworn in to-day by His Honor Judge Chadwick at three o'clock in Guelph. This evening a civic banquet will be tendered him by the citizens of Guelph.

INSPECTOR HAS BUSY SEASON

Inspections of Slaughter Houses Reveal Fairly Satisfactory Conditions.

"It's the busiest season I have had yet," remarked Sanitary Inspector Spence to-day to a Review reporter, who found the Inspector almost buried in a pile of books, making entries of inspections and also booking the various changes to be made and other numerous little details, all a necessity in inspection.

A general clean up day would greatly relieve the situation, which consists of the annual spring cleaning of back yards and putting things in sanitary condition.

People even complain of such a small matter as cleaning their yards. They generally blame the neighbor if the one yard is used more extensively than the single yard.

Inspections of slaughter houses and other places of which the conditions are of vital interest to the health of the general public, this year are reported to reveal fairly satisfactory conditions.

One feature of the present regime of the Board of Health is the stringent means they intend adopting in regard to over-crowding, which eventually ends in epidemics of the worst kind. Steps to prevent and terminate this practice is being taken by Mr. Spence, who is strongly backed by the Board of Health and the city at large in this important step.

SOME OF THE BANDS FOR THE BIG CONGRESS

One Hundred and Sixty or More Will Meet in London.

The Peterborough Temple Band is hard at work practicing for their trip to England to attend the International Congress in June. Latest reports state that 160 or more bands and 4,500 bandsmen from all parts of the globe will take part in this great geathering. ## FIRE FIGHTERS IN TRAINING

Plenty of Time as Fires Are Scarce These Days.

With the absence of fires in the city, Chief Howard decided on manual training this morning, and under his supervision the firemen had their first work out, part of which was staged at the Y.W.C.A. Gym, and the finish at the rear of the tower at the fire hall. Considerable interest was shown by the men and spectators.

The training will be carried on during the summer months every Monday morning, and will consist of fire drills such as used in the larger cities.

MINISTRY NO PLACE FOR WEAKLINGS

PREACHERS NOT MADE OUT OF THE FOOL OF THE FAMILY, SAYS DR. HENDERSON

NOT AN EASY LIFE

Very large congregations were on hand yesterday both morning and evening, in Charlotte Street Methodist Church to hear a former pastor, Dr. Henderson, of St. Catharines, preach. At the evening service he preached from the text, Isaiah, 8-6, "Here am I, send me." His subject was, in other words, the opportunities of the Christian ministry. Sooner or later a man must answer the question what vocation he will follow. The supply of men in the ministry is not equal to the demand, while other professions are overcrowded. Plenty of soldiers can be secured for the militia, and there is no lack of volunteers for the polar expeditions, yet there is not enough men going into the ministry. The call or need for men is most acute. In speaking to the young men, he said, "if your desire is to make money, your place is in the market place, not in the ministry." If you feel the desire of ministering to the spiritual needs of men, then your call is to the ministry. The speaker then briefly sketched the call to the foreign mission field, pointing out its magnitude and importance. Then he called attention to the vast number of immigrants coming to this country, and of the field for ministerial work among them. To make these strangers Canadians, they must be made Christians. He contended that the statement that preachers were usually made out of the fool of the family was untrue, only picked men can be of much use in the ministry. In this calling, there is no place for weaklings, if the work of God is to proceed. Good men are needed in the rural districts as well.

Highest Qualities Required.

The highest qualities are required for effective services, mental capacity, physical power, the personal experience of God, moral enthusiasm, these were some of the qualities necessary. It was a call to service to a busy, not an easy life. The pulpit was no place in which to gain wealth, the appeal was to higher motives, hard work and small pay. The minister must play an important part in the solution of national problems, for the only adequate solution has to be based on the teachings of Christianity. The work was to correct godless lives, to improve social conditions, to inspire men in the service of God—no higher calling among men.

There were a lot of announcements, among them being the address by Rev. H. J. Keith, M.A., to the Literary Society to-night. The choir rendered a very fine anthem, the solo part being taken by Miss Richardson. There was also given a male quartette that was much appreciated.

LIBERAL AND CONSERVATIVE POLICY.

THE REPLY of the Hon. W. J. Hanna to Mr. Rowell in the Legislature was, as is the majority of Mr. Hanna's speeches, pointed and convincing. The Liberals have been crying, Whitney and Whiskey, Rowell and Reform ad. nauseam. Indeed, the present policy of the Liberal party in Ontario in spite of all the wind the Opposition is trying to raise, is not receiving general support. There is a large number of people in Ontario who would like to see the evils of the liquor traffic driven from Canada, but, whether this is to be done by total prohibition of sale or of manufacture, by local option or by education, is a matter of opinion. As far as Mr Rowell is concerned the majority of electors are of opinion that his Banish the Bar policy will not secure this end and will not be the reform it is claimed to be, if we judge by previous elections.

The temperance question is a comparatively new one in politics. As a movement it is scarcely fifty years old, yet it has made a most wonderful progress. It has had a large share in creating the reform sentiment which is so widespread at the present time. But all people are not of the same opinion on temperance, and, of those in favor of it, different and opposing views prevail. Thus, the Hon. Rudolphe Lemieux, speaking to the Rowell Liberal Club of North Toronto the other evening, said, "I am not a prohibitionist, but I claim to be a temperate man, and I admire Mr. Rowell."

Mr. Rowell and the Liberal party in Ontario are catering to the temperance people on the policy of banishing the Bar. Let it be remembered that the Liberal party is not a prohibition party—it promises merely to banish bars; liquor stores and clubs are not to be molested by the Liberals. Liquor will still be made and sold, men will still be able to get drunk and break the law as of yore. In its last analysis the policy of the Liberal party in Ontario is only a restrictive policy, merely another version of that of the Whitney Government. The Conservatives, realizing the youthfulness of the temperance movement, the diversity of opinion regarding temperance reform, and not blind to the evils of intemperance, have supported and enforced a restrictive policy. They have passed, in the light of these facts, local option legislation, they have raised licenses, shortened hours of sale, increased fines, investigated charges, protected local option constituencies and have vigorously pursued their policy. When Mr. Rowell attacked the government on the ground that it was allied with the liquor interests, Mr. Hanna challenged the Grits to show one effective measure they had passed in support of temperance during the thirty-two years they were in power. As to temperance legislation its bulk stands to the credit of the Conservative party in Ontario and Mr. Rowell could not take up the challenge.

If Mr. Rowell advocated a policy of prohibition there would be a real difference between the two parties on this question. As they now stand the people have a choice between two restrictive policies. The Conservative policy has been tried and found efficient. Where local option has been passed it has been enforced and the three fifths clause makes it as difficult to repeal as to carry. The law has been vigorously enforced all over the province and breaking the law has been made difficult and expensive. The Liberal policy has not been tried, it is not prohibition, it has not been proved in theory or in fact superior to the Conservative program. Add to this the dissension on the temperance policy among Liberal leaders themselves and the reason is manifest for the wide, general support of the vigorous Conservative policy throughout Ontario.

HAS MADE A POOR SHOW OF HIMSELF.

THOMAS MARSHALL, Liberal member for Monck, championed in the Legislature the cause of the suspended teachers of Almonte High School. He charged that the suspension was due to the personal animus of the Superintendent of Education, Dr. John Seath.

As Mr. Marshall understood the case, Mr. A. R. Walker was appointed to the position of science master before he was twenty-one years of age. The School Board, as well as Principal Jenkins, were aware of that fact, and the Department of Education did not raise any objections at the time, except to order the board to advertise for a teacher who was of age. This was delayed for two months, but Mr. Marshall failed to see in that any fault on the part of the science teacher. When they did advertise, there was but the one application, coming from a young lady. The principal took the liberty of writing to her and explaining the situation. When she learned the particulars of the case, the woman refused to hire, and it was when the Department of Education learned these facts that they immediately ordered the suspension of Messrs. Walker and Jenkins, science master and principal, a proceeding that took place just one day before Walker became of age.

Taking Mr. Marshall's version of the case, the Liberal member has shown a strange lack of good sense in the position he has taken. The law states explicitly what a qualified teacher is and one detail is that a teacher shall be twenty-one years of age. Both Mr. Walker and the principal knew this, or should have known it for ignorance is not an excuse. They were attempting to break the law. Then, the principal, Mr. Jenkins, acted in a very high-handed manner, when, having secured the application of a qualified teacher he wrote her a letter tantamount to saying she was not wanted. Dr. Seath has the whole case on his side, and, though his manner may not be as pleasing as it might be, Mr. Marshall has shown ignorance of the law and a curious want of common-sense in chiding the Superintendent for merely doing his duty. If we have laws, they are not made to be evaded or broken. A man elected to assist in the making of laws is the last man who should plead evasion, and above all, in the very assembly where laws are brought into being.

WOMEN VOTING IN ILLINOIS.

A FEW DAYS AGO, women of the state of Illinois exercised the franchise in that state for the first time. The results of the voting are interesting, in view of the agitation in Ontario for woman franchise. About 72 per cent. of the enrolled women voted, a little higher percentage than that of the men vote recorded. The presence of a moral issue, local option, and the novelty of taking part in an election, explained in part the high number of women who cast their ballots. Sixty-five per cent. of the women voted for local option, forty per cent. of the men voted the same way, causing twenty-two counties to be added to the thirty already dry ones in the state. Nine communities however, that were more manufacturing than agricultural remained wet. Aside from the question of temperance, the women voted much the same way as did the men, for there are no marked changes from the previous election result. The Hearst-Harrison subway scheme was turned down, a rather remarkable feature in view of the fact that the Hearst newspapers warmly supported the cause of woman suffrage. In four wards party lines were smashed, but throughout the rest of the city of Chicago, women voters were divided among the different parties much as their husbands or fathers were divided. The Toronto Mail and Empire very well sums up a conclusion from the details of the election :—

> On the whole, the women voted very much as they might have been expected to vote. A majority of women in any community in the United States or Canada will be opposed to the liquor traffic. A majority will be found in favor of total prohibition. Women, as a rule, do not study the evils of intemperance ; they feel them. It is upon the women that the blows fall. Except upon questions that may be considered moral ones, women are likely to vote as their fathers, their husbands, or their brothers advise them to vote. Those who do not accept this advice will largely vote under newspaper influence, as on many questions men do. With the ballot women cannot create a new heaven and a new earth.

NOT LIKELY TO PREVAIL.

IT IS SAID that certain members of Parliament will be bitterly opposed next time, both at the party conventions and at the polls. A few outspoken members have spoiled all hope of certain people getting what they want out of the public treasury. These same members are also called for having "sinned" in other ways. But if "the people" see any attempts to scuttle their defenders in this well known "good, old-fashioned" way, they may be trusted to block the play. The People are not so "easy" as they used to be.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE ERIE DESPATCH contains a news-item to the effect that a tomb stone was discovered deep in the ground where excavations were being made for a large new building. The stone doubtless marked the remains of one who was trying to get in on the ground floor, and goes to show that as far back as 1835 politics in the United States was well established.

MAKE A MARK. Saturday was the first day we got the office window open and permitted the gentle intrusion of spring's balmy zephyrs.

THAT'S ABOUT as near poetry as we can get. You see there is no danger of us ever getting poetical.

THE GANNON'S NARROWS Bridge will have to go over till next year, as it is too late to take the matter up with the Government. The sessions are drawing to a close.

"Yank it out, doctor. Hang such sympathy," replied the Tyke.

A Mere Smell Was Sufficient.

The plans of a very light-draught gunboat were once shown to Abraham Lincoln, the martyred President of the United States. Great stress was laid on the fact that this boat would manoeuvre in very little water.

Which reminds us of Professor Price's remark during the Russell test.

About the tenth day of the test, Prof. Price and Mr. Russell were comparing the figures for fuel and oil consumption with the best previous world's records, which were being shattered hour by hour.

"Is she using much gas ?" inquired Mr. Russell.

"She's using so little," replied the Professor, "that I believe she'd run on the mere smell of gasoline."

LONG LIFE

By Walt Mason

"I would not live alway," some poet paused to say, when to his humble shack eight manuscripts came back. I would not live alway, e'en though each passing day brought noble gifts to me, and prizes fair to see. If daylight never ceased, if in the golden East the glowing sun should stand, at Jove's direct command, no longer go its way, and shine day after day, we'd weary of the sight, and we would long for night. And so with life, my friend; if it should never end, how tired we all would grow, of everything below! All things would then seem old, a tale that has been told too oft, without avail; the whole world would seem stale, and we would stand and rave: "Ten dollars for a grave! Won't some accomplished guy instruct us how to die? We've hung around too long, a tired and jaded throng; we've tired of human toys, we're tired of mortal joys, we're tired of drawing breath, we're tired of all but death, which we'd regard a snap, but it is not on tap. We'd like ten yards of doom! Bring on the misfit tomb, the casket and the hearse, for life's become a curse!" I would not live alway, my friend, by half a day!

Birthdays Note

MONDAY, APRIL TWENTIETH

REV. CANON DYSON HAGUE, one of the most prominent clergymen of the Church of England in Canada and now rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Toronto, was born fifty-seven years ago to-day in the city where he now resides. His father was George Hague, former general manager of the Merchants' Bank and at that time accountant of the Bank of Toronto. Dyson Hague was ordained a priest thirty years ago and was given a curacy in St. James Cathedral, Toronto. He then became rector successively of St. Paul's Church, Brockville; St. Paul's Church, Halifax, and Bishop Cronyn Memorial Church, London, whence he was removed to Toronto three years ago. He serves on various church committees, lectures at Wycliffe College, writes books and articles and generally leads a busy life.

ADMIRALS IN CONCLAVE.

British and U. S. Officials Hold Conference at Vera Cruz.

VERA CRUZ, April 20.—Sir Christopher Cradock, the British rear admiral, and Rear Admiral Frank Fletcher in command of the United States fleet here, had a long conference on board the British cruiser Essex yesterday afternoon. The Essex returned from Tampico yesterday.

Both admirals naturally refused to divulge the nature of their conference. It was learned, however, that Sir C. Cradock has received the most urgent request from the British Government to meet Sir L. Carden here, and to deliver to him certain messages and instructions personally.

U. S. Consul Canada is very reserved about notices as to the movements of the fleet. There is no alarm here at present, the general feeling being that the two Governments will yet get together.

Fears For Forty Men's Safety.

VALDEZ, Alaska, April 20.—Grave fear is expressed here for the safety of the tug Latoosh, which, with the barge America in tow, is seven days overdue from Seattle. The tug and her tow were last sighted April 10, off Cape St. Elias, and it is feared the craft was caught in the recent heavy seas off the Copper River delta. Besides the crew on the tug, there were 40 carpenters aboard the barge, which carried 2,600 tons of mining machinery and supplies.

Writ Against Maxim Gorky.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 20.—M. Maxim Gorky, having returned to Russia, the public prosecutor of the District Court of St. Petersburg has ordered immediate proceedings to be taken against him on a charge of blasphemy preferred against him in 1908, in connection with his novel, entitled "Mother." According to Russian law, if he is found guilty he will be exiled to Siberia. According to a message from Paris the famous author has fled from Russia.

Echo of Zabern Affair.

BERLIN, April 20.—The Emperor has accepted Count Charles von Wedel's resignation as Governor-General of Alsace-Lorraine, to become effective May 1, and has created him a prince.

Seeking the Lost.

"What is that poet gabbling about?"

"His lost Lenore."

"He'd better put an ad. in the lost column. By the way, what is a lenore?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Babies' Good Trait.

Another good thing about babies is that they never go around telling the smart things their daddies said.—Galveston News.

Hard work is still the road to prosperity, and there is no other.—Benjamin Franklin.

May Day in Montreal will be extremely quiet in labor circles. The only tradesmen who have threatened to strike on that day are the painters, and they decided Saturday that they would postpone their action.

Colony of Celery Growers.

For a long time what is now the fruitful irrigated land of Canada was given a wide berth. Then southern farmers, who had been accustomed to such soil and conditions, came along with results to themselves and the land that were little short of phenomenal. Now another tract of so-called "worthless land" is about to be taken up. Four hundred settlers, who have been living in the Kalamazoo district of Michigan, the great celery-raising country, are migrating to the township of Dunwich, in East Elgin, Ontario, to start a similar industry there. They have secured some 2,000 acres of low and swampy lands, suitable to celery culture, and plan to start business on an extensive scale.

An Exchange of Compliments.

This correspondence, ending in true Irish fashion, actually passed between two men in England some years ago.

"Mr. Thompson presents his compliments to Mr. Simpson, and begs to request that he will keep his doggs from trespassing on his grounds."

"Mr. Simpson presents his compliments to Mr. Thompson, and begs to suggest that in future he should not spell 'dogs' with two gees."

"Mr. Thompson's respects to Mr. Simpson, and will feel obliged if he will add the letter e to the last word in the note just received so as to represent Mr. Simpson and lady."

"Mr. Simpson returns Mr. Thompson's note unopened, the impertinence it contains being only equaled by its vulgarity."—Toronto Mail and Empire.

Toothpicks in England.

Toothpicks are not so generally used in England as in the United States, being in no real sense considered a household necessity. At the hotels and restaurants, especially those frequented by Americans, they are often supplied, though in a large percentage of eating houses they are given only upon request, and there are thousands of restaurants and other eating places where they are not obtainable even on request. Silver and gold toothpicks suitable for carrying in the pockets are sold to some extent among the well to do classes.—New York Post.

Clever Scheme.

"Blink's wife seems to be quite a musician."

"Yes. She is a fine pianist."

"How does she keep in practice when she is away from home?"

"She carries a large muff."

"What for?"

"Just to keep her hand in."

COWARDICE COURT

CHAPTER I.

In Which a Young Man Trespasses.

"HE'S just an infernal dude, your lordship, and I'll throw him in the river if he says a word too much."

"He has already said too much, Tompkins, confound him, don't you know."

"Then I'm to throw him in whether he says anything or not, sir?"

"Have you seen him?"

"No, your lordship, but James has. James says he wears a red coat and"—

"Never mind, Tompkins. He has no right to fish on this side of that log. The insufferable ass may own the land on the opposite side, but, confound his impertinence, I own it on this side."

This concluding assertion of the usually placid but now irate Lord Bazelhurst was not quite as momentous as it sounded. As a matter of fact, the title to the land was vested entirely in his young American wife, his sole possession, according to report, being a title much less substantial but a great deal more picturesque than the large, much handled piece of paper down in the safety deposit vault—lying close and crumpled among a million sordid, homely little slips called coupons.

It requires no great stretch of imagination to understand that Lord Bazelhurst had an undesirable neighbor. That neighbor was young Mr. Shaw—Randolph Shaw, heir to the Randolph fortune. It may be fair to state that Mr. Shaw also considered himself to be possessed of an odious neighbor. In other words, although neither had seen the other, there was a feud between the owners of the two estates that had all the earmarks of an ancient romance.

Lady Bazelhurst was the daughter of a New York millionaire. She was young, beautiful and arrogant. Nature gave her youth and beauty. Marriage gave her the remaining quality. Was she not Lady Bazelhurst? What odds if Lord Bazelhurst happened to be a middle aged, addlepated ass? So much the better. Bazelhurst castle and the Bazelhurst estates (heavily encumbered before her father came to the rescue) were among the oldest and most coveted in the English market. Her mother noted, with unctuous joy, that the present Lady Bazelhurst in babyhood had extreme difficulty in mastering the eighth letter of the alphabet, certainly a most flattering sign of natal superiority, notwithstanding the fact that her father was plain old John Banks (deceased), formerly of Jersey City, more latterly of Wall street and St. Thomas'.

Bazelhurst was a great catch, but Banks was a good name to conjure with, so he capitulated with a willingness that savored somewhat of suspended animation, so fearful was he that he might do something to disturb the dream before it came true.

That was two years ago. With exquisite irony Lady Bazelhurst decided to have a country place in America. Her agents discovered a glorious section of woodland in the Adirondacks teeming with trout streams, game haunts, unparalleled scenery. Her ladyship instructed them to buy without delay. It was just here that young Mr. Shaw came into prominence.

His grandfather had left him a fortune, and he was looking about for ways in which to spend a portion of it. College, travel and society having palled on him, he hied himself into the big hills west of Lake Champlain, searching for beauty, solitude and life as he imagined it should be lived. He found and bought 500 acres of the most beautiful bit of wilderness in the mountains.

The same streams coursed through his hills and dales that ran through those of Lady Bazelhurst, the only distinction being that his portion was the more desirable. When her ladyship's agents came leisurely up to close their deal they discovered that Mr. Shaw had snatched up this choice 500 acres of the original tract intended for their client. At least a thousand acres were left for the young lady, but she was petulant enough to covet all of it.

Overtures were made to Mr. Shaw, but he would not sell. He was preparing to erect a handsome country place, and he did not want to alter his plans. Courteously at first, then somewhat scathingly, he declined to discuss the proposition with her agents. After two months of pressure of the most tiresome persistency he lost his temper and sent a message to his inquisitors that suddenly terminated all negotiations. Afterward when he learned that their client was a lady he wrote a conditional note of apology, but if he expected a response he was disappointed. A year went by, and now with the beginning of this narrative two newly completed country homes glowered at each other from separate hillsides, one envious and spiteful, the other defiant and a bit satirical.

Bazelhurst Villa looks across the valley and sees Shaw's cottage commanding the most beautiful view in the hills; the very eaves of his ladyship's house seem to have wrinkled into a constant scowl of annoyance. Shaw's long, low cottage seems to smile back with tantalizing security, serene in its more lofty altitude, in its more gorgeous raiment of nature. The brooks laugh with the glitter of trout, the trees chuckle with the flight of birds, the hillsides frolic in their abundance of game, but the acres are growling like dogs of war. "Love thy neighbor as thyself" is not printed on the boards that line the borders of the two estates. In bold black letters the signboards laconically say: "No trespassing on these grounds. Keep off!"

"Yes, I fancy you'd better put him off the place if he comes down here again to fish, Tompkins," said his lordship, in conclusion. Then he touched whip to his horse and bobbed off through the shady lane in a most painfully upright fashion, his thin legs sticking straight out, his breath coming in agonized little jerks with each succeeding return of his person to the saddle.

"By Jove, Evelyn, it's most annoying about that confounded Shaw chap," he remarked to his wife as he mounted the broad steps leading to the gallery half an hour later, walking with the primness which suggests pain. Lady Bazelhurst looked up from her book, her fine aristocratic young face clouding with ready belligerence.

"What has he done, Cecil dear?"

"Been fishing on our property again, that's all. Tompkins says he laughed at him when he told him to get off. I say, do you know, I think I'll have to adopt rough methods with that chap. Hang it all, what right has he to catch our fish?"

"Oh, how I hate that man!" exclaimed her ladyship petulantly.

"But I've given Thompson final instructions."

"And what are they?"

"To throw him in the river next time."

"Oh, if he only could!" rapturously.

"Could? My dear, Tompkins is an American. He can handle these chaps in their own way. At any rate, I told Tompkins if his nerve failed him at the last minute to come and notify me. I'll attend to this confounded popinjay!"

"Good for you, Cecil!" called out another young woman from the broad hammock in which she had been dawdling with half alert ears through the foregoing conversation. "Spoken like a true Briton. What is this popinjay like?"

"Hullo, sister! Hang it all, what's he like? He's like an ass, that's all. I've never seen him, but if I'm ever called upon to—but you don't care to listen to details. You remember the big log that lies out in the river up at the bend? Well, it marks the property line. One-half of its stump belongs to the Shaw man, the other half to m—to us, Evelyn. He shan't fish below that log—no, sir!" His lordship glared fiercely through his monocle in the direction of the faraway log, his watery blue eyes blinking as malevolently as possible, his long, aristocratic nose wrinkling at its base in fine disdain. His five feet four of stature quivered with illy subdued emotion, but whether it was rage or the sudden recollection of the dog trot through the woods it is beyond me to suggest.

"But suppose our fish venture into his waters, Cecil. What then? Isn't that trespass?" demanded the Hon. Penelope Drake, youngest and most cherished sister of his lordship.

"Now, don't be silly, Pen," cried her sister-in-law. "Of course we can't regulate the fish."

"But I dare say his fish will come below the log, so what's the odds?" said his lordship quickly. "A trout's a lawless brute at best."

"Is he big?" asked the Hon. Penelope lazily.

"They vary, my dear girl."

"I mean Mr. Shaw."

"Oh, I thought you meant the—but I don't know. What difference does that make? Big or little, he has to stay off my grounds." Was it a look of pride that his tall young wife bestowed upon him as he drew himself proudly erect, or was it akin to pity? At any rate, her gay young American head was inches above his own when she arose and suggested that they go inside and prepare for the housing of the guests who were to come over from the evening train.

"The drag has gone over to the station, Cecil, and it should be here by 7 o'clock."

"Confound his impudence. I'll show him," grumbled his lordship as he followed her, stiff legged, toward the door.

"What's up, Cecil, with your legs?" called his sister. "Are you getting old?" This suggestion always irritated him.

"Old? Silly question. You know how old I am. No; it's that beastly American horse. Evelyn, I told you they have no decent horses in this beastly country. They jiggle the life out of one"—but he was obliged to unbend himself perceptibly in order to keep pace with her as she hurried through the door.

The Hon. Penelope allowed her indolent gaze to follow them. A perplexed pucker finally developed on her fair brow and her thought was almost expressed aloud: "By Jove, I wonder if she really loves him." Penelope was very pretty and very bright. She was visiting America for the first time, and she was learning rapidly. "Cecil's a good sort, you know, even"—but she was loyal enough to send her thoughts into other channels.

Nightfall brought half a dozen guests to Bazelhurst Villa. They were fashionable to the point where ennui is the chief characteristic, and they came only for bridge and sleep. There was a duke among them and also a French count, besides the bored New Yorkers; they wanted brandy and soda as soon as they got into the house, and they went to bed early because it was so much easier to sleep lying down than sitting up.

All were up by noon the next day, more bored than ever, fondly praying that nothing might happen before bedtime. The duke was making desultory love to Mrs. De Peyton and Mrs. De Peyton was leading him aimlessly toward the shadier and more secluded nooks in the park surrounding the villa. Penelope, fresh and full of the purpose of life, was off alone for a long stroll. By this means she avoided the attentions of the duke, who wanted to marry her; those of the count, who also said he wanted to marry her, but couldn't because his wife would not consent; those of one New Yorker, who liked her because she was English, and the pallid chatter of the women who bored her with their conjugal cynicisms.

"What the deuce is this coming down the road?" queried the duke, returning from the secluded nook at luncheon time.

"Some one has been hurt," exclaimed his companion. Others were looking down the leafy road from the gallery.

"By Jove, it's Penelope, don't you know!" ejaculated the duke, dropping his monocle and blinding his eye as if to rest it for the time being.

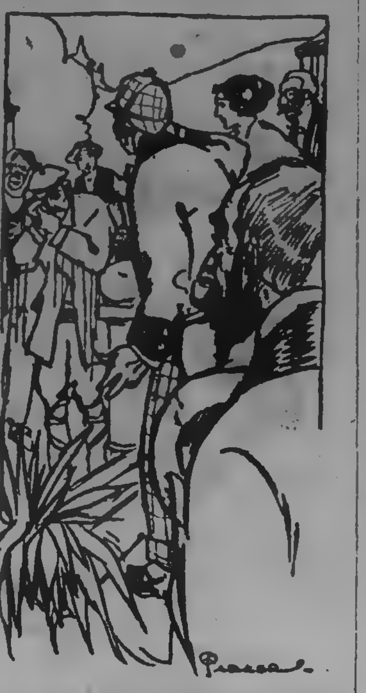
"But she's not hurt. She's helping to support one of those men."

"Hey!" shouted his lordship from the gallery as Penelope and two dilapidated male companions abruptly started to cut across the park in the direction of the stables. "What's up?" Penelope waved her hand aimlessly, but did not change her course. Whereupon the entire house party sallied forth in more or less trepidation to intercept the strange party.

"Who are these men?" demanded Lady Bazelhurst as they came up to the fast breathing young Englishwoman.

"Don't bother me, please. We must get him to bed at once. He'll have pneumonia," replied Penelope.

Both men were dripping wet, and the one in the middle limped painfully,



'Who are you?' demanded his lordship.

probably because both eyes were swollen tight and his nose was bleeding. Penelope's face was beaming with excitement and interest.

"Who are you?" demanded his lordship, planting himself in front of the shivering twain.

"Tompkins," murmured the blind one feebly, tears starting from the blue slits and rolling down his cheeks.

"James, sir," answered the other, touching his damp forelock.

"Are they drunk?" asked Mrs. De Peyton, with fresh enthusiasm.

"No, they are not, poor fellows," cried Penelope. "They have taken nothing but water."

"By Jove! Deuced clever, that," drawled the duke. "Eh?" to the New Yorker.

"Deuced," from the Knickerbocker.

"Well, well! What's it all about?" demanded Bazelhurst.

"Mr. Shaw, sir," said James.

FOR PALM BEACH.

The middy blouse that is so in demand for the juniors is being affected by some of the younger set during the Palm Beach season for the morning sports. Here is an attractive design that would be unusually pretty for outing or for misses' school use and could be developed in light or dark mohair or serge, in linen or heavy cotton suiting or in one of the sheer crepes of this season. This one shows white and black with white canvas buttoned boots.

Has Wealth of Furs.

Colin Fraser, who has been trading in the north country the last twenty-six years, arrived in Edmonton, a few days ago with a catch of furs which, he said, is the largest he has made in ten years. His pack included pelts of 17 silver, 70 cross and 45 white foxes, 56 otter, 30 lynx, 460 marten, 21 wolverines and several bear skins. He made the trip south from Fort Chippewayan to Fort McMurray with four dog teams, and from the last named point to Athabasca with horses.

CONCERNING MOIRE.

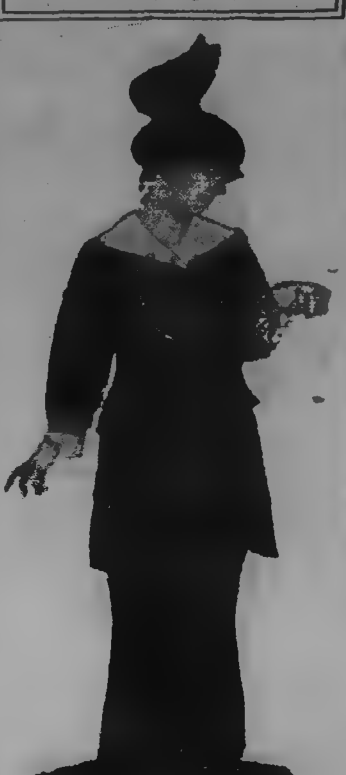
It Is Used For Many Smart Spring Suits.



MOIRE SUIT.

Moire suits are popular for spring. Illustrated here is a model which has many of the new style touches. The short loose coat, the plaited tunic and narrow skirt are all exceedingly chic. The sleeves are short in the seven-eighths length to be seen on many new coats.

Fashion clings to the skirt narrow at the foot.

Modish for evening wear are caps of gold lace.

The latest evening gowns have three-looped tunics.

Evening costumes are striking combinations of color.

Accordion plaited skirts are worn in Paris.

Velvet is the successful material for afternoon costumes.

The new taffetas are of the chiffon variety—supple in quality.

Brown tulle is introduced on many of the evening gowns.

Most of the smart gowns have sashes of a contrasting color.

Moire is almost as fashionable for afternoon costumes as velvet.

Small buckles are used to fasten vest effects on the new spring suits.

NOVELTIES IN CRYSTAL.

Glass Trays and Gold Decorated Tableware Are Attractive.

Daintiest among the new teapot stands are the circles in clear but thick glass, beveled or plain edged, that exactly fit over circles of finest linen delicately embroidered in white or colors. Although intended to prevent the teapot from scorching the table or the tray, these little circles will go under any medium sized hot dish and look charming when placed upon either a bare or a cloth covered dining or tea table.

Of the same character are the glass trays for serving tea or luncheon and for passing the collation at an evening party. These trays come in round, square and oval shapes, have mahogany, bronze, brass or wicker sides and often high curved or square handles by which they may be carried.

GOLD DECORATED GLASSWARE.

The lingerie under mat is easily fastened to the bottom of the tray by means of tiny pins forced into holes bored in the framing of the article. On the same principle are made the new muffin stands, which are handsomest in mahogany and glass because of the marked contrast between the two materials, but they are very stunning in bronze and crystal, and against the heavy metal framework the delicate lingerie matting is very effective.

Many charming and attractive new pieces of glassware are shown in the shops. There seems to be a tendency to favor fancy glass for table use. The gold decorated specimens which are illustrated here are considered very chic.

A Better One.

At the monthly meeting of a certain homing society, one of the members related an interesting experience. He had recently sold a couple of "squeakers"—very young pigeons—to a man whose cote was 200 miles away. He sent them off by train and was astounded to find them back in the old cote two days later.

There was a painful silence, broken at length by the president's "Wonderful!"

"You doubt my word?" demanded the narrator of the story.

"Not a bit of it," was the reply. "It's a strange coincidence, that's all. I sold the very same man a setting of eggs in the middle of June. Before the end of the month those birds had hatched out and had flown back to me! Homing instinct's a wonderful thing!"—Youth's Companion.

The Order of the Seraphim.

The Order of the Seraphim is the oldest and most famous of the decorations in the gift of the king of Sweden. Originally it was instituted by Magnus IV., some 600 years ago, to commemorate the siege of Upsala, the ancient capital of the Swedish kings, and its statutes bound the recipients of the order to fight to the death for the maintenance of their religion and to constitute themselves the special protectors of the widow and the fatherless. When it was revived about the middle of the eighteenth century by King Frederick the obligations laid upon the members were somewhat less onerous. The decoration consists of an eight pointed star in white enamel with cherubs' heads of gold and is worn on a broad band of pale blue ribbon.

SEES RELIEF IN LORD'S RETURN

Time for Second Coming Now at Hand, Says I.B.S.A. Lecturer.

The Royal Theatre held quite a large audience yesterday afternoon when Mr. Jos. Frappy, of Stirling, gave a lecture on Christ's second coming.

The speaker admitted that his subject was more or less unpopular on account of the foolish theories sometimes advanced. He claimed, nevertheless, that the subject is an important one for all Christian people to consider carefully, and that viewed in the sensible and reasonable light of the Scriptures it is a most interesting and inspiring study.

Why?

The lecture called attention to the fact that our Saviour had a definite purpose in coming to this earth at His First Advent; namely, to pay the penalty for Adam's sin—not eternal life in torture, but death. At His Second Advent, He has an equally definite purpose: to liberate Adam and his posterity from that death.

Man cannot be liberated from the curse until the Ransom-price has been both secured and applied on his behalf. "The wages of sin is death." Jesus, therefore, became a man, and voluntarily gave up His human life. After receiving His reward of resurrection to a spiritual existence, He could have at once applied the merit of His human sacrifice to further reward Jesus by giving Him a Bride, the Church, the Lamb's Wife. The Gospel Age was set aside for the selection of this Church. Jesus, therefore, postponed the second feature of His redemptive work until a future time. It will not be accomplished till His Second Coming. Following this, Adam and all his race, "both the just and unjust," will be awakened from the sleep of death and be fully liberated from the curse. We see, therefore, that without our Lord's Second Coming our redemption would be incomplete and His death would avail mankind nothing.

Christ's Second Coming, then, is for the purpose of delivering mankind from death and the grave. "Death and Hell (margin: "The Grave") delivered up the dead that were in them." "All that are in their graves shall hear His voice and shall come forth." (John 5.28.) We read in Rev. 20:1-6 that the first work of Christ for the world at the Second Advent will be to bind Satan for a thousand years, that he may deceive the nations no more. Then will begin their wonderful ressurection from the dead. All who have died shall be restored to life again. What a grand re-union that will be! During the thousand-year Judgment Day of Christ's presence, all the world of mankind will be judged, instructed, restored to perfection, as it was once possessed in the Garden of Eden. This earth will blossom as the rose. The Scriptures are full of the blessings that will come as a result of Christ's Second Coming—not that all will be given eternal life, but all will be granted a fair chance to gain this life.

How?

The speaker made the startling assertion that Jesus would never come again in the flesh. "Yet a little while and the world seeth Me no more." If He should come again in the flesh, they could see Him, but since He will come as a spirit being, they will not be able to see Him any more than they can see the angels who are spirit beings. Jesus was put to death in the flesh, but raised a spirit being, according to the Bible. The bodies which He took on different occasions after His resurrection were merely mediums of communication with His disciples, just as He and the two angels used bodies of flesh when they visited Abraham and Lot. We are not to think that Jesus still has His manged body in Heaven. Heaven will not be filled with disfigured bodies of flesh. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of Heaven. Human legs, arms, eyes, and ears would be of no service there. The Lord, who is now "the express image of the Father's person," is invisible to the human eye. The Church alone of all mankind will see Him again; for they will be resurrected with spiritual bodies, in the First Resurrection. "We know not what we shall be, but we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him," not as He was, in the flesh, but "as He is," in the spirit, in glory.

We may expect our Lord to come as a thief in the night, stealing upon the world unawares, invisible to them. As in the days of Noah, so now, they will go on building, planting and marrying, and will "know not." They will first perceive that He is present by noticing the results of His Reign. Just as now, we know Satan is the Prince of this world by observing the results of his reign on every hand, so they will learn that the Lord is present, that He is binding the "strong man (Satan) of the house, and spoiling his goods," when they see Satan's works being overthrown in the great Time of Trouble.

When?

The speaker did not startle his audience by setting a positive date for the Lord's Return, as some have tried to do, to their disappointment and chagrin. He did state, however, that the Bible is quite definite in its time prophecies; that the Jubilee cycles and the parallel dispensations, together with many other striking time features, clearly indicate that we are now in the time of great "running to and fro," the "Time of the End," the Harvest of the Gospel Age. If the Bible be correct in its testimony, and if the signs of the times are at all to be relied upon, it is evident to all Christian students that our Lord's Return is due. The Apostle, after showing that the world would not recognise the Lord's presence at first, continues, addressing the Church (1 Thes. 5:4) "But ye brethren, are not in darkness, that that Day should over take you as a thief." Those who watch, who diligently search the Scriptures, will in due time be instructed concerning the Lord's Second Presence. In conclusion, the speaker urged all to trim their lamps without delay and keep them burning.

MOTHERS' DAY SECOND SUNDAY NEXT MONTH

Beautiful Thoughts Associated With Observation of the Day.

The second Sunday in May is a day each year more generally observed in loving honor of the mothers of the land. Special services in the churches and Sunday Schools mark this festival. The wearing—and better still, the giving of white carnations, will be a fragrant testimony of the love of countless hearts.

A beautiful feature of the day is the remembrance of lonely or bereaved mothers by those whose own mothers are beyond the reach of loving voice or thought.

The movement, though a custom of English origin, is being widely observed on this continent. It is participated in by rich and poor, old and young, each wearing a white carnation and dedicating the day to loving deeds for mother or in memory of mother.

Flowers may be sent to the hospitals, to the homes for the aged, to the poor, and countless deeds may be done in memory of mother. If one's own mother is no longer here, there is always some one else's mother who may be made happier on this day in tender remembrance of the one who is gone and whose chief care in life was to make her children happy. Everywhere on the second Sunday in May the wearing of a white carnation will indicate a sympathy with this growing movement in loving honor of the mothers of the land.

The object in having a Mother's Day is to encourage a simultaneous recognition throughout the world of the love and gratitude due to all good mothers by their children; to honor and uplift motherhod, and to make the day a specially happy one for every mother in the land.

Mother's day is for everybody and not only the interest of the individual is desired but the co-operation of every fraternal, military, busines, social, civic educational and other organizations is desirable.

The observance of Mother's Day is not idle sentimentalism, but an organised tribute to the love and sacrifice of all mothers and was originated in America by Miss Anna Jarvis, of Philadelphia, in memory of her own mother.

It is but little that anyone can do to repay the loving care, the ceaseless thought, the continual sacrifice which each mother has given to her children—to wear a flower and to do a little kind deed for her is very little.

LEAGUE FOR BLACK MAGIC IS ALLEGED IN SARDINIA ISLAND

MILAN, April 20. — Stories of witchcraft which the most highly imaginative modern novelist would hesitate to print were related at the Assize Court at Sassari, Sardinia, during the trial of several women. Only six of the alleged witches were in the dock of the twenty-five original companions discharged during the secret magisterial examination. Their plea was that they acted under the powerful spell of the other six.

The existence of an influential witches' league was revealed by the evidence of some members professing mystic power for locating hidden treasure, working miracles and calling up the spirits of the dead. They victimized several hundred dupes to the extent of thousands of dollars, and eighty victims gave evidence. One of them, a former prison governor who was being threatened with dismissal because of the escape of a ferocious Sardinian brigand, spent all his private means with the witches. The women undertook to have the brigand seized by demons in the mountain fastnesses, translated through the air, and set down securely in the prison cell again.

Returning emigrants from North and South America were despoiled of their savings and deluded by the cunningly devised apparitions of lost relatives. Some families have been content to forfeit not only money and jewelry but every bit of household furniture for the benefit of the witches. One prisoner, Rosa Artu, a venerable matron of imposing appearance, and known as the Saint of Sassari, refused a lawyer's aid, saying that Saints Thomas and Augustine had been sent from heaven to defend her. In an eloquent speech she claimed to possess supernatural powers, which enabled her to heal scores of so-called incurables and even raving lunatics. The case is still proceeding.

INSANE WOMAN AT HULL KILLS NINETEEN YEAR OLD GIRL WITH AXE

OTTAWA, April 20.—Wielding an axe as the instrument of death, Mrs. Placide Massie, aged 45, wife of a plasterer residing at Adelaide and Alfred streets, Hull, Saturday afternoon murdered her 19-year-old daughter, Marie, the oldest of a family of seven children.

The woman had been acting strangely for about a week, and it is thought she committed the crime in an insane frenzy. The cause of the crime, it is believed, was the mother's objection to a young man, an acquaintance of her daughter. So far as known there were no witnesses to the events leading up to the crime. The screams of the girl were heard by a neighbor, Felix Charron, who reached the house, but was too late to save her. He held the woman until the police arrived.

The body of the girl was horribly mutilated, though she lived a few minutes after Dr. Belisle had reached her. She was, however, unable to make any statement.

Mrs. Massie was immediately taken into custody by a squad of police, and on being placed in a cell at headquarters tried to suicide by battering her head against the wall. She appears to be violently insane.

PEACE COMMISSION PACT.

Anglo-American Questions of Honor To Be Examined.

WASHINGTON, April 20. — Sir Cecil Spring-Rice and Secretary Bryan yesterday discussed the outline of the peace commission treaty to bind the United States and Great Britain to submit to a commission for examination any issues between the two countries which may not yield to diplomatic adjustment. The ambassador visited the Department twice, and on his last call was able to lay before the Secretary of State a tentative draft of the convention as prepared in the British Foreign Office.

Secretary Bryan expressed satisfaction with the British suggestion to adopt as a basis for the British-American treaty the convention already concluded between the United States and the Netherlands. It will take a little time to perfect the new convention, because of its application to Britain's five great colonies, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Newfoundland, each of which has to be consulted.

ALL WORE PRIMROSES.

Englishmen Wore Flowers In Memory of Benjamin Disraeli.

LONDON, April 20. — Primroses were worn in nearly every British buttonhole Saturday in honor of Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield, England's famous statesman, who died 33 years ago yesterday.

Originally a Conservative political festival, Primrose Day is now celebrated by Englishmen of every shade of political opinion, and as this year the anniversary fell on a Sunday, the various demonstrations and banquets organized by the Primorse League were held Saturday. The Beaconsfield statue in Parliament square was garlanded and festooned with the pale yellow flower which was always the great statesman's favorite.

TAMED THE PIANO.

An Unmusical Variation in One of Gottschalk's Concerts.

Gottschalk, the pianist, was noted for his enormous physical strength almost as much as for his brilliance as a pianist. On one occasion he gave a practical illustration of his strength which, while it did not display his disposition in the most amiable light, undoubtedly afforded him much satisfaction.

He was in concert playing on a piano that was built on a new model, one of the peculiarities of which was that the lip of the keyboard cover projected farther over the keys than in most pianos when the instrument was open for playing. Gottschalk, who was accustomed to throw up his hands to a considerable height during the performance of brilliant passages and was unused to this new form of keyboard, constantly hit his knuckles against the projecting lip.

This repeated rapping of his knuckles at last began to have an irritating effect on him, as the audience could plainly see. Suddenly after a particularly hard rap he stopped short in the middle of his selection, wrenched the offending cover out of the instrument by main force and hurled it across the platform with great violence. Then, with a smile of the greatest satisfaction, he reseated himself at the piano and continued his playing.—Chicago Record-Herald.

FRED DANE MOVES.

T. & N. O. Commissioner Takes Position Under Federal Government.

TORONTO, April 20.—Fred Dane has resigned from the Timiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway Commission. He will accept a position in the trade and commerce branch of the Dominion Government under Hon. Geo. E. Foster, which will take him to Europe. He is succeeded by G. W. Lee, mayor of North Bay. Mr. Lee has been general agent for the T. & N. O. Railway for nine years.

Mr. Dane has been a member of the T. & N. O. Commission for eight years, and held also the post of land commissioner. He is one of the most prominent Orangemen in Ontario, and has given general satisfaction by his work and his thorough knowledge of conditions in Northern Ontario. He has been instrumental in opening up a large section of the north to settlement.

Mr. Lee's appointment is very popular in the north. During his term of office as general agent for the T. & N. O. he has familiarized himself with conditions in the north country and has a thorough knowledge of railway operation.

Killed By Fall From Horse.

CHATHAM, April 20.—Hugh Hyslop, 18 years of age, a member of the fire department, was fatally injured yesterday afternoon by falling from a horse. He suffered a fracture at the base of the skull and his neck was also dislocated. He died last night.

The horse he was riding was unused to the saddle and became unmanageable and ran away. Hyslop tried to stear the horse around a corner, but the animal slipped on the pavement and fell. Hyslop fell under the horse.

The accident occurred directly in front of the First Presbyterian Church while the children were assembling for Sunday school.

Murdered Two, Killed Self.

MONCTON, N.B., April 20. — The two little children of Neil Mullin were killed with an axe in their home, nine miles from Newcastle Saturday, it was learned yesterday. Park Sobey, who is alleged to have committed the murders and to have made an unsuccessful attack upon the father of the children, was found yesterday in his backwoods camp. The authorities believe he killed himself.

Killed by Falling Timber.

NORTH BAY, April 20. — Jose Sunstrum was almost instantly killed Saturday morning at English River on the National Transcontinental Railway west of Cochrane, by being struck on the head by a falling timber. He was foreman of the bridge crew engaged in tearing down a temporary trestle.

Stricken While Rowing.

BELLEVILLE, April 20. — While Capt. Wesley Weese, accompanied by his son, was rowing on the bay he expired suddenly from heart failure. He was 52 years of age, and was born at Rossmore, Prince Edward County, where he lived all his life. He was a member of the A. F. & A. M., Orange Prentice Boys and Canadian Order of Foresters' societies. He was for years captain of a company of the 16th Regiment.

New Year in Japan.

In Japan the New Year is welcomed with far more zest than in this country. One is expected to arise with the sun and don new clothes to meet the auspicious morning. Then he worships, performs obeisance to the spirits of his ancestors and pays homage to all relatives older than himself. No ordinary viands are consumed at breakfast. On every tray, covered with evergreen leaves and supporting a rice dumpling, are placed a lobster, oranges, persimmons, chestnuts, dried sardines and herring roof, all these dishes possessing allegorical meanings. This meal is the start of the festivities, which in olden times were continued for many days, business being almost entirely suspended. The idea of celebrating New Year's in such a manner is that the year is going to be the way it is started. Smile on New Year's day and you will smile throughout the year. Complain on New Year's day and you will complain all the year round. Weigh your anchor with merry song of heart and it will be smooth sailing all through the voyage. Begin right and you are bound to finish right. That is the Japanese idea of New Year's celebration.—Bulletin of the Japan Society.

AMEND ACT TO KEEP CHILDREN FROM MOVIES

Probably the scope for action in keeping children under the age of fifteen from visiting picture shows will be widened. Since the provision was placed in the act requiring all children to come with an adult the children in many cases have hit upon the scheme of accosting strangers to take them in with them. In this way numerous youngsters gain admission despite the ordinary care taken by the picture men.

The authorities have decided upon a restriction that will no doubt put a stop to this situation although it may prove a difficult one to enforce. An amended section is also being added to the Theatres and Cimetographs Act that will keep the children under the age of fifteen years out of the theatres unless accompanied by parents or guardian or an adult members of the household of which they belong.

PARK ST. CHURCH

Thirteen Were Baptized at Services on Sunday

Yesterday was a big day at the Park Street Baptist Church. In the morning the pastor, Rev. F. A. Conners, spoke to a well filled church on "Life's Greatest Problem," and at the close of the service, four were baptized.

In the evening the subject, "Union With Christ," was heard by an exceedingly large congregation, and at the close nine were baptized, making a total of thirteen for the day. Five of these were heads of families.

REV. DR. HERRIDGE FOR ANNIVERSARY

Mrs. John Allen will give an address to-night in the Young People's Guild in St. Paul's Church on "Novels and Novel Reading." The meeting is open to all who may find it convenient to come.

The mid-week service will be held on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. In addition to a brief address by the pastor four others will give short addresses. A St. George's Tea will be held on Saturday afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock by the Fraser Mission Band in the Guild Room of the Church.

The anniversary preacher for St. Paul's this year is the Rev. Dr. Herridge of Ottawa. He will occupy the pulpit at both services on May 10th. On the Tuesday evening following the choir will give a concert at which they will be assisted by Mr. Hollinshead, tenor, and Mr. MacDonald, bass, both of Toronto.

Juvenile Logic.

Marie is a very bright kindergarten pupil. She came home to her parents the other day and told them that the kindergarten teacher had said she will grow up to be a very nice looking young lady if she is a good girl, but will grow up to be a very ugly woman if she is a naughty girl. "Is that true, mamma?" asked Marie, and she was informed that if the teacher said so it was true. Marie then sat still for awhile, pondering seriously. "But, mamma," she suddenly burst forth again, "why was the kindergarten teacher so naughty when she was a little girl?"—Philadelphia Record.

ENGLAND'S PATRON SAINT, AS SOLDIER UNDER DIOCLETIAN

Was Beheaded Because He Rebuked Emperor for Persecution of Christians

St. George, the patron Saint of England, was born in Cappadocia, at the close of the third century, of Christian parents. In early youth he chose a soldier's life and soon obtained the favor of Diocletian, who advanced him to the grade of tribune. When, however, the emperor began to persecute the Christians, George rebuked him at once sternly and openly for his cruelty, and threw up his commission. He was in consequence subjected to a lengthened series of torments, and finally beheaded. There was something so inspiring in the defiant cheerfulness of the young soldier, that early Christians felt a personal share in this triumph of Christian fortitude; and as years rolled on, St. George became a type of successful combat against evil, the slayer of the dragon, the darling theme of camp song and story, until "so thick a shade, his very glory round him made" that his real lineaments became hard to trace. Even beyond the circle of Christendom he was held in honor, and in evading Saracens taught themselves to except from desecration the image of him whom they hailed as the "White-horse Knight."

In the East, a church of St. George is ascribed to Constantine, and his name is invoked in the most ancient liturgies; whilst in the West, Malta, Barcelona, Valencia, Arragon, Genoa and England have chosen them as their patron.

POLICE FIND RENDEZVOUS OF THIEVES

The hang-out, hide or rendezvous of a band of thieves, was discovered by chance when the Chief of Police and Constable Foster were out on a business mission in the interests of law and order.

The two officers, who were on bicycles, visited the various wards, wheeling along in silence, or, to be painfully particular, they were enwrapped in meditation.

The banks of the river were closely scanned. Was it a drowning or a suicide. No one knew or yet attempted a solution of the secret movements of the officers.

Later on it developed that they were looking up some goods which were stolen, the facts in connection with which must of necessity be kept quiet, or it might undo what the police have undertaken.

In making this search the officers wended their way to the G. T. R. bridge, which crosses the Scugog in close proximity to Durham Street East, when a hunt through the vacant property close by, which is covered with an undergrowth of willows and cedars, revealed the startling fact that a "hide," not as elaborate as the one found outside of Orillia, was located in the bushes, and within this hidden resort were found wrench, chisels, and various tools which are used by burglars in perpetuating their crimes. The officers, took the bunch of stuff in charge, and will follow the scent given them to the end. From articles found, the frequenters of the place had not been long gone before the police arrived.

Some of the tools bore G. T. R. stamp, and are supposed to have been stolen from the company either in Lindsay or some other town. —Lindsay Warder.

With oranges a-plenty in the market, try a salad made of the pulp of the orange and chopped nuts, tossed up with a French dressing made with lemon juice instead of vinegar. Season with a bit of paprika.

FARMERS WILL BE TAUGHT FARMING ON G.T.R. MAIN LINE

It is the intention of the Government to establish small five or ten acre tracts on the most advantageous ranches or farms already under cultivation and to carry on experiments in mixed farming for the benefit, experience and guidance of the farmers of the interior. At Fort Fraser the parent station will be presided over by an expert of the Provincial Government, who will govern the experiments of the other smaller stations.

Compound Division.

A Berlin chauffeur named Paul Kugelmann found £6,500 in notes and gold in his taxicab. No one came forward to claim the money, and the chauffeur, setting aside temptation, reported the matter to the police.

This huge sum remained, according to German law, in the police's keeping for a year, after which the finder could claim the fruits of his good fortune. But when Paul Kugelmann presented his claim he was told that various other claims would have to be settled first. Since the money had been found in Berlin, the Berlin municipality was to receive £1,500. Because the absent-minded fare hailed the chauffeur in the suburb of Wilmersdorf, the Wilmersdorf municipality claimed another £1,500. The municipality of Charlottenburg, not to be outdone, demanded a similar sum, as Kugelmann lived within its limits.

And while the disgusted chauffeur was reckoning up the balance his employer came forward and asserted that the whole £6,500 belonged to him, because the automobile in which it had been found was his property.—London Answers.

AIRSHIPS IN COLLISION

TRAGEDY IN MID-AIR RESULTS IN DEATH OF AVIATOR AND PASSENGER

BUC, France, April 20.—The aviator, Francois Deroy and Marvel Dablin, who was making a flight with him, were burned to death as a result of a collision in the air yesterday. Thousands of spectators witnessed the accident.

Deroy's machine, and another piloted by Bedault, with a passenger, M. Pelladeau, came together with a crash in mid-air. Evidently the gasoline tanks exploded, for both machines burst into flames and fell to the earth. Bedault and Pelladeau, although badly injured, managed to extricate themselves from the blazing wreckage, but Deroy and Dablin were pinned down and the intense heat prevented rescuers from approaching.

Flies Upside Down In Gale.

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y., April 20.—Flying upside down in a southwest gale, estimated to be blowing more than 35 miles an hour, Charles F. Niles, in a monoplane, thrilled spectators on the aviation field at Hempstead Plains Saturday.

After bucking the wind until he reached an altitude of about 2,000 feet, Niles, with his aeroplane twisting in the blast, succeeded in completing a circle. In his second attempt, when the circle was about half completed, Niles' machine slipped back and earthward for nearly 1,000 feet, when an unusually heavy gale struck it. A third attempt also failed, owing to the wind that made another loop the loop impossible.

Niles ended his day's thrills by flying upside down for nearly half a mile.

MAJ. GEN. WOOD TO COMMAND

SPANISH WAR VETERAN IS READY TO GO TO TEXAS CITY

WASHINGTON, April 20.—By the direction of the Secretary of War Major General Leonard Wood, Chief of the General Staff of the United States army and the first colonel of Roosevelt's Rough Riders in the Spanish-American war, is holding himself in readiness to proceed to Texas City, Texas.

It is the intention of Secretary Garrison to have Gen. Wood assume command of operations of all the regular troops in Texas, or those that may be used for hostile operations against Mexico. His term of service as chief of staff will expire on Wednesday, and he had been chosen to command the Department of the East, with headquarters at Governor's Island, New York harbor.

MAJ.-GEN. LEONARD WOOD.

Taking No Chances.

"Captain," said a wealthy passenger who was about to take his first trip across the ocean, "I understand this ship has got several water tight compartments."

"Yes, sir," was the reply.

"Captain," the passenger went on decidedly, "I want one of those compartments. I don't care what it costs."—Minneapolis Journal.

An Exacting Patronage.

"Well," said the warden of a prominent prison, "if it becomes customary to send malefactors of great wealth here I'm going to resign."

"Why?"

"There would be more money in running a regular hotel, and the guests wouldn't be nearly so hard to please."—Washington Star.

The Human Machine.

Is there one of us who does not sometimes treat a person like a machine? Do we always think of the railroad conductor as more than a machine for taking tickets? Do we not often treat our fellow creatures like masks on flat cars without substance and personality? I have been striving for years to overcome in myself and in my medical fellows the professional habit of treating a person as a "case" or a walking disease. But the habit of impersonality persists, like original sin, in myriad forms and unexpected ways. In law courts we treat a human being as a "prisoner at the bar," as the "plaintiff" or "defendant," to the exclusion of the fact that he is as real and sensitive as ourselves.—Atlantic.

SATURDAY NIGHT SPENT BY BRYAN IN NEGOTIATIONS

WASHINGTON, April 20.—Throughout the day the Mexican crisis occupied the absorbing attention of officials, dispelling the usual calm of a beautiful midspring Sunday. President Wilson arrived at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., early yesterday, after a night ride from Washington, and there joined Mrs. Wilson.

Secretary Bryan remained up practically all Saturday night, awaiting some definite word from Mexico City. He was at the State Department until after midnight, and on going home continued telephoning to those in the cipher room at the State Department until four o'clock yesterday morning.

Shortly after nine o'clock Mr. Bryan had received two messages from Mexico City. Both were from Charge O'Shaughnessy. The first was merely formal, stating that the message of President Wilson, giving Huerta until six o'clock Sunday to yield, had been communicated to Portillos a Rajos, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and that a reply would follow. The second despatch was in the nature of a reply, although the officials quickly perceived that it was not clearly responsive and definite as to the demands made by this Government, but raised a new issue as to the U. S. agreeing in writing to return the Huerta salute.

Mr. Bryan summarised the Huerta reply in a telegram to the President at White Sulphur Springs, and soon thereafter held a long distance conference with the President, going over the points Huerta had raised. While the reply was considered favorable in the general purport as to saluting the American flag, yet it again parleyed over details and conditions. As a result of the long distance talk, Mr. Bryan despatched a further message to Mexico City, making it plain that President Wilson would listen to no counter-proposals or suggestions, but must have unequivocal acceptance of the American demand at the time stated, six o'clock last night.

While these exchanges were going on by cable between Washington and Mexico City the Navy Department was centering its attention on further preparations for an eventuality which might occur. At 10.30 o'clock, shortly after Huerta's dilatory message had been received, orders were sent to the battleship Mississippi, with an aeroplane corps and six hundred marines and the torpedo flotilla at Pensacola, Fla., to get under way at once, joining Admiral Badger's fleet as it entered the Gulf of Mexico, and proceeding with the fleet to Tampico. The torpedo flotilla consists of 22 destroyers, the tender Dixie and the scout cruiser Birmingham, but several of the destroyers are in reserve, so it is probable only 14 will sail.

Secretary Bryan had planned to go to church at 11 o'clock but as the cable messages began to come in he changed his plans and went to the State Department. There he was joined by Governor Lind, the President's personal representative in Mexico, and the two went together to the private telegraph office of the State Department to consult over a difficult piece of deciphering in the latest message from Huerta.

The secretary and Governor Lind joined Secretary Tumulty at the White House, and the latest exchanges were further gone over in detail.

Later it became known that the messages showed that Huerta was not raising objection to the salute itself, but as to the details under which the salute would be returned. The main condition was that the United States agree in writing that the salute be fired, instead of relying on the assurance given by Admiral Mayo for a return salute. This was construed by officials as a wily and adroit move on Huerta's part to obtain an assurance direct from the American Government, which would be capable of being construed by him as a recognition of the de facto Mexican Government.

News from Mexico was awaited by the people of the capital with the keenest interest. All through the evening the streets were thronged, and crowds gathered in front of the newspaper offices. In the hotel lobbies the crisis was the one topic of conversation and some of the crowds, inspired by the playing of the "Star-Spangled Banner" and "America," engaged in patriotic demonstrations.

Senators and representatives, anxious to receive some official word, besieged the White House and the State and Navy Departments with requests for information.

CAESAR IS DEAD.

Favorite Dog of King Edward's Attended His Master's Funeral.

LONDON, April 20.—Caesar, the wirehaired fox terrier which was the favorite dog of King Edward, died on Saturday.

Caesar used to accompany the King to different parts of the country and attended his royal master's funeral.

The dog became ill some time ago, and in spite of careful veterinary treatment showed no improvement. It became clear Saturday that there was absolutely no hope of recovery, and rather than allow the dog to continue to suffer he was painlessly put to death by the direction of Queen Alexandra.

In pronouncing sentence on Morgan, Judge Gervais denounced him, telling the prisoner that he was one of the worst types of criminals the law had to deal with.

HUERTA REFUSES DEMAND AND WAR SEEMS INEVITABLE

WASHINGTON, April 20. — Gen. Victoriano Huerta, Provisional President of Mexico, flatly refused last night to accede to the unconditional demands of the United States that he salute the American flag, and Congress will be asked by President Wilson to-day for authority to use armed forces to uphold the honor and dignity of the nation.

Negotiations with Huerta over the demand for a salute in reparation for the arrest of American bluejackets at Tampico on April 10 came to a close last night at six o'clock, the last hour given by President Wilson for a favorable response from the Mexican dictator. The final word of Huerta to Charge O'Shaughnessy was a refusal to comply unless the United States would guarantee in writing that his salute be returned.

President Wilson at midnight was on his way to Washington from White Sulphur Springs, preparing to read a message to Congress in joint session as early as it can be arranged to-day. In the meantime American war fleets were moving down both coasts on their way to Mexican waters to carry out the President's plan for reprisals.

The crisis thus reached does not mean that there will be a formal declaration of war, because the United States Government would not declare war against a Government which it does not recognize. President Wilson will seek authority, however, to send armed forces into Mexico to seize first the ports of Tampico and Vera Cruz and the railroad trestle leading to Mexico City.

Secretary Tumulty announced just before 11 o'clock last night that President Wilson had instructed him over the long-distance telephone to call a special meeting of the Cabinet for 10.00 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. Tumulty also announced that the President was preparing to deliver a special message to Congress to-day, and that a joint session would be held at the earliest hour the Congressional leaders could arrange for it, probably three o'clock.

"The matter is closed," said Mr. Tumulty. Huerta, he added, had asked for no continuation of the negotiations, and refused flatly to accede to what he called the demand for an "unconditional" salute.

Incompatible With Dignity.

MEXICO CITY, April 20. — The Mexican Foreign Minister, Senor Portillo y Rojas, announced last night that it would be impossible to agree to the demand of the United States that the flag of that country be unconditionally saluted, because that flag was not insulted, because it was not flying from the launch, and because the marines were set free before an investigation, and the officer responsible for the arrests were himself arrested and held for trial.

The United States Government, Senor Portillo declared, had refused permission to Charge O'Shaughnessy to sign such a protocol, and demanded an unconditional salute from Mexico, which Mexico felt was incompatible with her dignity.

In conclusion, the Foreign Minister said: "Mexico has yielded as much as her dignity will permit. Mexico trusts to the fair-mindedness and spirit of justice of the American people."

Will They Join Forces?

CHIHUAHUA, April 20.—An important meeting will take place in the Palace here to-day. Gen. Pancho Villa is coming from Torreon, and Don Miguel Acuna, said to be an official representative of President Huerta, has left Juarez for a conference with Carranza and Villa about aiding the dictator in the event of the United States assuming a belligerent attitude toward the republic. Villa left Torreon at 13.30 on a special train and was expected to arrive here some time last evening. Acuna is said to have come from Mexico City to confer with Carranza, having been sent to feel out Carranza as to the attitude of the Constitutionalists as soon as the Tampico incident occurred.

No Recount at Montreal.

MONTREAL, April 20—The Montreal municipal deadlock is broken. The four members of the board of control, in consequence of the withdrawal of the demand for a recount, will be sworn in Tuesday and immediately afterwards the board will hold its first meeting, when a mass of business which has been accumulating for the past ten days will be disposed of. The four controllers to take the oath of office on Tuesday are Messrs. Thomas Cote, E. N. Herbert, J. Ainey and Duncan McDonald.

Jobless May Make Trouble.

MONTREAL, April 20.—As the result of an open invitation issued by Mayor Martin, it is expected that the City Hall will be besieged in the morning by several thousand out-of-works looking for civic laboring jobs worth $2.25 a day. Only about 500 men may be taken on at the start, though if trouble develops among the disappointed work-seekers this number may have to be increased.

Unable To Avoid Train.

ST. CATHARINES, April 20.—An open verdict was rendered by the jury over the death of Charles Grigg of Grimsby, who was struck by a train on the T., H. & B., near Grassies. It is said that Grigg, who had been suffering from heart trouble, was stricken while walking the track, and was helpless when the train struck him.

A DARING PATRIOT

Feats of a Little Known Hero of Revolutionary Times.

JACK JOWETT'S BRAVE RACE.

It Saved Jefferson and the Virginia Assembly From Capture by Tarleton's Dragoons and Gave General Washington Valuable Information.

Most of the Revolutionary heroes have been immortalized in song or story, but there is one whose fame has never spread, as it should, beyond the region of his birth. His name was Jack Jowett. In the little city of Charlottesville, Va., there is a tablet on the building that stands on the site of his old tavern. But that simple bronze is the only memorial of his name and deeds.

In Revolutionary days young Jack Jowett kept the Swan tavern in Charlottesville. He was a patriot at a time when patriotism was dangerous, for Cornwallis was in possession of tidewater Virginia, and Tarleton and his cavalry were sweeping back and forth over the inland counties.

In June, 1781, the Virginia assembly abandoned Richmond, which Cornwallis threatened, and came to sit in Charlottesville. Among its members were such men as Patrick Henry, Richard Henry Lee and Benjamin Harrison, and the governor was no other than Thomas Jefferson. One bright morning when the state assembly was in session Jack mounted his thoroughbred mare and rode out to look over his farm outside the town. As he rode along he caught through the trees a glimpse of a British uniform flashing down a crossroad. He put his horse over the low stone wall and confronted the rider. It was one of Tarleton's troopers.

With a big pistol pointed at his head, the Englishman thought it wise to obey Jack's command to turn in at the gate of a nearby house and change clothing with him. Under threat of death the soldier divulged the fact that Tarleton was in the vicinity. Jowett at once galloped away in search of the enemy. The day passed without result, and Jack stopped at an inn to take a few hours' rest.

In the night he heard the tramp of horses and, looking out of his window, saw that the yard was full of British soldiers, led by Tarleton himself. The troopers entered the tavern and sat down to drink and talk, quite unconscious that an enemy was on the stair above listening to every word. From their conversation Jowett learned that Tarleton commanded an advance guard that was halting to wait for the rest of the troop. Then they planned to dash on to Charlottesville and capture the Virginia assembly.

Jack Jowett set out at once in the cool of the dawn. Once he was chased by some troopers who trotted in from the pike that crossed his path, but his bay mare soon outpaced theirs. Like the wind he raced through lanes, over low stone fences, up the side of the hill to beautiful Monticello, the home of Governor Jefferson. He warned Jefferson of the approach of the British, and then, with a fresh horse, he dashed down the steep mountain road into Charlottesville. Rushing into the hall where the assembly was in session, he called to the members to flee, for Tarleton's dragoons would soon be at their heels. In a few moments the hall was empty, and the members were on their way across the mountains to Staunton, where they would be safe from pursuit.

Jack rode on to his tavern, but found there a wounded officer of the Continental army—General Stevens. He dressed the sick man in a suit of his own clothes, carried him downstairs and put him on the fresh horse, with bags of corn in front and behind—the very picture of an old farmer going to the mill. Side by side Jowett and Stevens rode out of town, which by 10 o'clock was in the possession of Tarleton's men. Pausing as he reached the top of a hill, Jack saw his own tavern in flames.

The British, who had reason to suspect the young man in a uniform, set out in chase of him, but Jack's horse was again too speedy for them, and he got safely away to Washington with the news that Tarleton was no longer acting in support of Cornwallis—a bit of information that was of the greatest value to the commander of the Continental army.

To Jack Jowett's quick wit and daring the author of the Declaration of Independence and many another hardly less famous patriot owed their liberty and perhaps their escape from a traitor's death upon the scaffold.—Youth's Companion.

A Marshal's Retort.

It is on record that the Prince of Orange, filled with rage because he had been beaten at Fleurus, Leuse, Steinkerque and Nerwinde, alluding to the Marshal of Luxembourg:

"Can it be that I shall never beat that hunchback?"

"How does he know that I am a hunchback?" said the French marshal. "He never saw my back; I always saw his."

MIXED MARRIAGES.

Canadians Have Received Advice Regarding Weddings With Foreigners.

The following important statement regarding the marriage of British women with Hindus, Moslems, African negroes, etc., has been sent from Downing street to the Canadian Government. It has been prepared by the registrar-general of Great Britain:

The marriage of a woman of British nationality professing the Christian faith with a Hindu or Mohammedan even in a case when it is valid in all respects in this country, is not necessarily so when the husband returns to India or his own Mohammedan country. In India he is subject to what is known as his "personal" law of a Hindu; this law would probably not recognize the marriage at all, and in the case of a Mohammedan the fact that the marriage took place under forms prescribed by British law only, might give rise to doubts in a Mohammedan country as to the validity of the marriage, or at least place the parties in a position of some difficulty. The Indian courts would in such cases be able to offer very inadequate, if any, protection to the wife of such British marriage, while her position under a foreign court would be presumably worse.

In neither case is the marriage one that necessarily implies (outside Great Britain) the voluntary union for life of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others, for under his "personal" law the Hindu and under Mohammedan law the Mohammedan husband may, if he desires, take other wives in addition to the first without consulting his Christian wife in any way. Even if the Hindu or Mohammedan husband had entered into a covenant with his Christian wife, such a covenant could not prevent him from taking another wife in India or a Mohammedan country if he so desired.

The forms observed at a marriage under English law before a registrar are not necessarily recognized by Mohammedan law as giving any legal effect or validity to the marriage relationship, and afford no protection to the wife in a country where Mohammedan law is observed. Where a marriage relationship is constituted which the Mohammedan law will recognize a Mohammedan husband may, under Mohammedan law, divorce his wife at will without any legal formality beyond that of repudiating her, while should he return to his own country, leaving his Christian wife, the difference of domestic domicile might be equivalent to divorce under Mohammedan law. In either case such divorce, while not dissolving the marriage in Great Britain under British law, would be operative in the Mohammedan country.

In the case of a woman of British nationality professing the Christian faith who marries a Mohammedan who is not a British subject, but is a subject or citizen of a Mohammedan state, she loses her British nationality on the marriage, and when the husband and wife land in any Mohammedan country (not being in the dominions or under the protectorate of his Britannic Majesty) they both become subject to the Mohammedan law. Further, the wife having lost her British nationality would appear to have become disentitled to the protection or assistance of any British authority, consular or otherwise.

African negroes are in many cases in their own countries subject in certain particulars to native law and custom which may permit of polygamy.

Canada Slips Behind.

Canadian marine engine manufacturers are losing ground in New Zealand. The Canadian trade commissioner states that the reason is the high price, the ancient standard and the inapt construction. Great Britain sells the most internal combustion marine engines in New Zealand, being nearly seven to one American engine. The total importation was 5,421 engines at $897,553, of which 728 were United States engines at $109,795 and 49 Canadian engines at $6,155. Canadian manufacturers, says the report to the Trade and Commerce Department, have an advantage over American manufacturers, yet their engines are more expensive. British-made engines are landed in New Zealand as cheaply as Canadian engines, and in some cases are very little dearer than those from the United States.

Largest Concrete Pole In World.

The largest concrete pole installation at present in the world is that of 25,000 concrete poles set up in connection with the municipal street lighting and general light and power distribution of the Hydro-Electric system in Toronto, says The Electrical World.

Although re-inforced concrete poles have been the subject of experiment from time to time for a great many years, it is comparatively recently that they have been employed or even seriously considered. The high and constantly increasing cost of wooden poles, their comparatively short life, with consequent prospective renewal at greater expense, is making Toronto experiment a matter of interest the world over.

Ringing the Bells.

The late Sir John A. Macdonald was ever known for his ready wit and gift of repartee.

On one election campaign he was staying over night with a family by the name of "Bell" where there was a bevy of bright, charming young daughters. The father proudly introduced his girls to Sir John, who laughingly rejoined that he would like the pleasure of being present when they were "Ringing the Bells."

Risked Lives for Dog.

MONTREAL, April 20. — At the risk of their lives two boys, W. Holliday and W. Harris, rowed out in a light skiff among the floating ice on Friday and rescued a little dog. The animal had been stranded on a miniature iceberg on the St. Lawrence since Monday, and its cries finally touched the hearts of the boys. Several times their boat nearly overturned in the current, but they finally landed in the flow and after a chase caught the dog, which died from exhaustion soon after they reached shore.

Basuto Telegraphy.

At the battle of Ishtib a Bulgarian cowherd signalled news to his military countrymen relative to the position of the Servian battalions by moving five cows about in various ways on the top of a hill.

The Basutos, by the way, practically anticipated "wireless telegraphy" in a crude fashion. That is, by striking heavily on a huge drum of goat-skin, which is placed on a special spot, another Basuto at a distance can gather the purport of the message by placing his ear close to the ground to catch the vibrations; and then he, in turn, passes the message on. So quickly can this be done, owing to the peculiar configuration of Basutoland, that during the South African war the Basutos were said to know all about big battles long before the people in Cape Town.

Of course, given suitable climatic conditions, the military heliograph can transmit messages over enormous tracts of country, and the record is probably held by Captain Sadler, of the 6th Dragoon Guards, who, by this means, succeeded in South Africa in sending a message direct a distance of 180 miles.

YOUNGSTERS PASS UP BASEBALL FOR LACROSSE

Decline an Invitation to Play Baseball and Resume Their Lacrosse Practice

Mr. Geo. Robertson, vice-president of the Peterboro Lacrosse Club, is doing his part to create a new interest in the game in Peterboro. He has gathered together a number of youngsters, some of whom show signs of developing into good players. And strange to say, they take to the game in preference to baseball.

Saturday, while a number of the youngsters were practicing, other boys came along with a baseball bat and gloves and suggested a game. There was only a short delay and the answer was a resumption of the lacrosse practice.

Mr. Robertson says the only handicap is the lack of sticks.

ONLY BALL PLAYERS WHO CAN SWAT REMAIN IN BIG SHOW

May be Fleet on the Paths and Clever Fielders but They Have to Hit to Remain on Pay Roll

A baseball players may handle the bat to almost perfection when it comes to making catches, scooping up grounders and firing them to an intended spot, but all this grace and accuracy are pretty likely to count for naught unless he can meet the sphere with a regularity that brings an average beyond the .250 mark.

It's their wonderful batting prowess more than their fielding skill that have kept Lajoie and Wagner in the big tent years after those who started out with them as kids were pushed into the sideshow and the discard. The marvelous batting skill of Cap Anson, of the old Chicago Colts, kept him in the game at least six years after his fielding had slumped to the point where he was hardly good enough for the minors.

Ty Cobb is a wonderful all-round player, but it's his hitting ability that has annexed for him a contract that calls for one of the biggest salaries ever paid for a ball player. Joe Jackson, of the Naps, is an ordinary fielder, yet because he is a demon with the hickory he is regarded as one of the most valuable ball players in captivity.

Frank Baker, of the Athletics, is a fair infielder and rather slow on the paths, but he is one of the greatest batsmen the game ever has known. And so he draws a mighty husky salary—as Athletic salaries go—because of his hitting.

Charles Hickman, old "Piano Legs,' always was something of a shine as a fielder, yet he could connect with the ball regularly and with terrific impact, and that kept him in the game for many years after his slight fielding usefulness had gone.

Charlie Rossman, first sacker of the Naps and Tigers some years ago, was a mediocre fielder and atrociously erratic as a thrower, but because he could hit he stuck around longer than he would have otherwise.

Baseball history shows hundreds of such instances. And, also, it shows that hundreds of players who had few peers as fielders, but who could not hit, flashed into view along the major league horizon and soon after dimmed and faded entirely. They couldn't hit—and so they didn't belong.

Rhody Wallace, the Brownie veteran, has been shunted off to the side-lines. He slowed up a bit on his fielding, and was sent into the discard. Were he a good batter he still would belong. Bill Bradley, regarded as one of the greatest third basemen of all time, was shooed out of the mojar league by the Cleveland Naps when his batting fell off, although his fielding was almost as brilliant as it was in the early days of his stardom.

Pitcher Dode Criss, now in the majors, was kept on the payroll of the St. Louis Browns for a couple of years, although as a pitcher he was one of the finest little bloomers that ever came along. Why did they keep him? Simply because he was a great pinch hitter.

Mike Donlin, many years past his prime as a ball player, has returned to the New York Giants' payroll. Mike today perhaps couldn't run 100 yards in 14 seconds, and a Class D. player could outfield him. But Mike still can hit—and that's why he's contracted for at a nice salary.

And so it goes. It's the man who can swat—and swat 'em far—who draws the biggest salary and who lingers longest where the calcium is brightest. And the man who can't connect with the hurling sphere is the man who carves but a small niche, if any, in baseball's hall of fame.

BASEBALLITIS

The following players reported to the Toronto Canadian League club to-day. Their first real work-out will be to-morrow morning at the Island.

Pitchers—W. Hubbard (Baltimore Md.); W. Hitchcock (Binghampton, N.Y.); W. Schaffer (Reading, Pa.); C. Kirley (Pittsburg, Pa.); M. McGuinn (Toronto).

Catchers—Trout (Reading Pa.); Mike Burns (Toronto); J. Mulvay (St. Bonaventure College).

Infielders—Chas Isaacs (Toronto); G. Weidman (Rochester, N.Y.); Geo. Ort (St. Thomas); Schneider (New York City); Ralph Hunt (Everett, Mass.); F. Duffey (St. Bonaventure College).

Outfielders—John Kelliun (Pawtucket, R.I.); L. Schnck (Binghampton, N.Y.); R. Burrett (East Weymouth).

Five more players will be dropped from the Leafs to the Leaflets before the end of the week.

"Knotty" Lee will be in charge of the Toronto Canuck team during the training.

Jim Thorpe and "Bunny" Hearne have been procured by the Toronto Internationals. The latter will in all probability pitch the opener at Providence to-morrow.

"Shag" is a little worried over Joe Lill refusing to report. Lill asked for more money and he got it, but still hesitates.

Geo. Ort, who managed the Saints last year, is going to have a battle in attempting to beat Schneider, the New York semi-pro. boy out for the initial sack. Schneider made quite a hit when with the Kelly Klan on their training trip.

Hamilton is endeavoring to land Catcher Lidgate, of the Baltimore Internationals.

Honus Wagner, the patriarch of the diamond is out with a suggestion for a home for aged and decrepit ball players. Honus himself is not a likely candidate for the institution, as he owns a great part of Carnegie, Pa., and besides intends to keep on playing until Gabriel's trumpet sounds.

We might suggest a few likely inmates just to assist in the good work. There's Doc. Reisling, Rube Deneau, and Jo Jo Keenan. Oh yes, you might add Amby Kane and "Old Folks" Templin. That's four of a kind and the joker.

Harvey Rice, a catcher, and Ernest Hallbach, infielder, of Meriden, Conn., paid their own expenses to Brantford and will try out for a place. Deneau signed them some time ago but never asked them to report.

The Canadian League pilots will soon start using the blue envelope.

Brantford Expositor: When it comes to a pitching staff which has shown class already in the Canadian League, St. Thomas has them all going. Wilkinson, Baker, Clement, Reilly and Howick are all left from last year, with Hughey and Knoble as new men. That staff looks good.

Riley, London's new left-hander, is said to be troubled with laziness.

PETES RAINED HITS IN FIRST BATTLE

Youngstown, April 20.—Exceptionally bad weather greeted the Peterboro Canadian League team in their game here yesterday with the Goodlow Nine, a local semi-pro team. In fact, the weather was so decidely disappointing that many of the local boys did not show up, thus necessitating the substitution of several of the Peterboro players to fill in. Tirrell did the biggest share of the Petes' slab work, while Schrage and Miller—the latter is a brother to Mully Miller, the catcher—worked on the infield.

Manager Curley Blount sent in the following team: Creswell and Belting, pitchers; Ryberg and Kelly, catchers; Flanagan and O'Hearne, first; Fox, second; Price, short; Byrne, third; Gaffney, left; Blount, centre; Dawson and Naw, right. The game was very loose, the Petes having it on the locals in every department.

Stanley Creswell, the lanky southpaw of the Canadian team, had everything. He worked the first four innings, and allowed two hits, no runs and struck out nine. Belting finished the game, allowing six hits, three runs, and he struck out four. Creswell could undoubtedly have gone the whole route, but Manager Blount didn't think it would be doing justice to him to work him nine innings, and the weather so cool. He was going as strong at the end of the fourth as he was in the first. Knute Belting has still the same old speed and was burning them across for further orders.

Tirrel worked the first five innings for the local team, but put up a rather poor argument. He allowed ten hits, off which eleven runs were scored. His support was wretched and just how good he is cannot yet be learned. He was himself in no way responsible for so many runs. He struck out three. Boggins, a homebrew, finished the game but was very wild. He allowed three hits and four runs. The final score was 15-3, but the fact that the Petes secured 13 hits was of greater importance to Blount than the score.

Infield Was Strong.

Price at short and Joe Byrne at third were showing up exceptionally well. Both are going fast and handle the willow in mid-season form. Curley Blount is very fast, and proved to the boys that he's a ball player as well as a manager. At first, Flanagan worked the first past of the game and O'Hearne the last. Both the men covered the sack well, and had two hits each. So far, there is little to choose between the two, and no one can predict which one will be retained.

The Petes who were on the Goodlow line-up were given very little opportunity to show much class. Schrage, however, shone in spots and is going to give the rest of the infielders a fight for a place. The fair haired boy takes a good healthy swing at the ball, and may develop into a reliable hitter.

Blount is Satisfied.

Manager Blount expressed himself as highly pleased with the way the boys hit the pill. It was a question whether they could connect or not, but for their first appearance they did remarkably well. They are all very fast on the paths, and while little opposition was given to their base stealing, they stole everything but the catching mit.

If the weather is suitable to-day, morning and afternoon workouts will be the order, and it is expected that the weeding out will start about the end of the week. Word has been received that Tracey and Sterling will arrive to-day, and it is probable that Willie Swartz will also be in.

Blount is using good judgment in allowing them to go easy till the weather is warmer.

TRACEY IS IN CAMP

SOME OF THE PLAYERS ARE COMPLAINING OF SORE ARMS.

CAN IS OPENING

Youngstown, Ohio, April 20th.—As a result of yesterday's game in the cold weather several of the players of the Canuck club are complaining to-day of having sore arms, and in fact one suggested that they pay a visit to Bonesetter Reese, who resides in this city. Owing to the number of "sore whips," the order of the a.m. practice was fungo hitting, batting practice and a workout for the outfielders. It was very cold here this morning, but toward the end of the session Old Sol extended his rays to Wright's field, and the prospects are for a good workout this afternoon.

Ken Tracey arrived to-day and looks in perfect condition. Illness at his home prevented him from reporting earlier, but he has been playing quite a bit and ought to be in fair shape. Willie Swartz or Bob Sterling have not as yet appeared, but will, it is hoped, be in to-night.

Manager Blount gave out the information this morning that a couple of the recruits will be let out tonight. He did not give any names, but he will very likely drop a couple of the aspirants to the infield and outer garden. Two, at least, of the catchers are due for a blue ticket also.

THE TURF

The Rules Committee of the Central Ontario Horse Racing Association composed of Dr. Sinclair, of Cannington, Geo. Spences, of Beaverton, Thos. Hodgson, of Orillia, J. M. Brooks, of this city, and Dr. J. C. Moore, of Orillia, met on Saturday afternoon in Lindsay, and drew up the rules and regulations which will govern the racing on the circuit. These rules are to be published within a few days.

The schedule covers two months from the middle of June to the 20th of August, with a race meet each week, [illegible]

WHAT ABOUT CITY LEAGUE

THE MERCANTILE LEAGUE SHOULD ALSO BE HUSTLED ALONG BY BALL ENTHUSIASTS.

Although very little has been said in the local baseball circles about the prospects for a City or a Mercantile League, there are great possibilities that one or even both will prove, with the lacrosse, an attraction for the fans when the White Caps are battling on foreign ground. Last season the Mercantile League afforded no small amount of interest and likewise considerable amusement, but this season the dope points to having a City League composed of four teams which would undoubtedly dish up a fairly good class of ball. The league would afford pastime for some forty players or so, but there are many more players, or rather would-be players, who enjoy a game now and then, therefore, with a philanthropic feeling it is humbly requested that Mercantile be also stanged.

Speaking of a Mercantile League, there are several Charles Murphys or rather Charles P. Tafts, who are daily scanning the horizon for slab artists and catchers; the rest of the team can be filled in with almost anybody under fifty (If you don't believe it, ask some of last year's Typos.) The Printers have organized, and as they are including the three offices in that word "Printers," there is no doubt but that the men who will represent the three newspapers will have a formidable crew. The De Laval have signified their intention of having a team and the manner in which they followed their hockey team, demonstrates that interest in their clan would not be lacking, and after all, it's the interest that counts.

Down in the C.G.E. there is talk of a Drafting Room team, but whether a second nine could be mustered is doubtful. The Draftsmen can, however, be depended upon to present a good team, and being the last year champions there is no doubt as to their following. The Bankers will, of course, have a team, and perhaps a stronger aggregation than last season. They have Smith, last season with the champions, and Carson to share the bulk of their twirling, and with Phelan behind the bat they form a nucleus about which a first class squad could be built.

With the above clubs and perhaps a few more, eagerly waiting for some one to make the first move, it might be well for the officers of last year's Mercantile League to call a meeting in the course of a few days and get the old ball rolling.

To Bed With Drum and Shot.

From the following story it would seem that the cadets at West Point are not the only persons who sometimes find taps and the sunrise gun annoying.

The wife of one of the officers there had a colored maid who was giving satisfaction and was apparently well pleased with her position. Mrs. Brown was therefore amazed when Sallie came to her and told her she could not work there any longer.

"Will you tell me why you are leaving, Sallie?" her mistress asked.

"Mis' Lizzie," she answered, "Ah likes you an' Ah likes de kunnel an' Ah likes de chillen. But Ah can't stay nowhar whar Ah has to be drummed to bed at night and shot out of bed in de mawnin'."—New York Post.

JUST COAX THE SPRING.

How to Start a Clock After Winding It Too Tightly.

If in winding a clock actuated by a spring you have given the key a turn too much and so have wound the spring so tight that the clock won't run you don't have to take the clock to a clockmaker to have the spring unwound. You can start it yourself if you will go about it the right way and exercise a little patience.

Jarring or shaking the clock does no good. What you want to do is to hold it up and turn it right and left quickly, but gently, to oscillate the balance wheel. The object of this, of course, is to set the clock in action and free the spring from the binding restraint upon it, give the spring a little play, a chance to exercise its own power. If your own strong arm were bound tightly to your side you couldn't use it at all, but if you could work your arm free just a little bit you could then break loose. It is so with the tightly wound clock spring. Give it just a little of play and it will then be able to exert itself.

With your first oscillation the balance wheel will stop after half a dozen ticks, but that has helped. Keep this up for ten or fifteen minutes and you will then have given the clock spring play enough to enable it to exert its own power and keep the clock going.—New York Sun.

INSIDIOUS.

"That man must be an insidious lobbyist," declared Congressman Grump. "What has he done?" enquired Congressman Waylock. "He invited me to share a bottle of grape juice with him."—Pittsburg Post.

The way to write a satisfactory love letter is to forget that you have any common sense.

Winning a Thousand.

Some years ago a jewelry firm in New York sent the late J. P. Morgan a fine pearl, offering it to him for $5,000. This Mr. Morgan decided to purchase, and two checks were made out—one for $5,000 and the other for $4,000. He then removed the pearl from its box and, having substituted for it the $5,000 check, resealed the package. Mr. Morgan's clerk was next dispatched to the jeweler's with the sealed box and a note containing the check for $4,000, stating that Mr. Morgan would be pleased to purchase the pearl if they would be satisfied with the check. The unsuspecting jewelers—in ignorance, of course, of what the sealed package now contained—closed with the astute financier's offer. And the box in which the $5,000 check serenely reposed was returned to Mr. Morgan unopened!

Pounds and Weights.

Here is a question that will tax the arithmetical powers of a youth. Suppose that for some reason or another a shopkeeper who sold goods by pounds and half pounds, but never in quantities exceeding twenty pounds at a time, was told that he must transact all this business with four weights only. What must these four weights be? The answer is half pound, one and a half pound, four and a half pound and thirteen and a half pound. With these it will be readily seen that any weight from half a pound to twenty pounds may be determined in pounds and half pounds.

His Card Tricks.

Mrs. Stryver—We had a most enjoyable time at Mrs. Hunter's tea. Count Tedout was there and kept us mystified for an hour with his tricks with the cards. Mr. Stryver (dryly)—He kept us mystified with 'em for three months at the club, but we're on to him now.—New York World.

PLANTING ROSES

The planting of roses should always be deferred until the soil is in a proper condition to receive the plants, says Canadian Horticulturist. There is no greater mistake than planting roses in wet soil. The soil to be in proper condition for planting should be dry and free. The best time to plant roses which have been raised or grown in Canada is the last week in October, and for imported roses the second week in April. With good culture roses may be planted safely up till the middle of June. Care must be taken not to plant too deeply. By placing the union or callus three inches below ground you will be about right. For dwarf roses see that the roots do not cross or coil around. This is most important. Be particular also to see that no manure comes in contact with the roots directly, and always firm the soil by treading it down with the feet, but leave a rough surface.

The best soil is a strong holding argillaceous loam, so tenacious as to almost touch clay in some of its more inviting forms. Not a few soils that are called clay when wet, turn into a strong loam when dry. Though such loams are on the whole most favorable for the perfect cultivation of roses, it must not be asserted that they cannot be grown on others. I have seen prize roses grown on soil so light that it could be driven and drifted like sand during a protracted drought, and also on sheer peat. The natural quality of rose soils is often of less vital importance than might at first sight appear, inasmuch as in many cases the soil is the mere dish, shell or basin to hold the materials which are freely given to roses to feed upon. While saying this much, so that nobody may despair of growing fair roses with soils such as they have, or can make with the materials within reach, it should be added that no loam can be too good or too rich for roses. In selecting a site for a rose border or rose garden, the cultivator should endeavor to marry the three S's, namely, sun, shade and shelter to air.

A man likes to pose as a pillar of some church when he is a candidate for office.

PROVINCE WILL GO DEFINITELY INTO THE OPERATION OF RADIALS

Special Act Provides That the Ontario Government Will Operate and Supervise Lines and Will Use Hydro Electric Bond Issues

TORONTO, April 21.—A provincial control and operation of radial railways was presented by Hon. Adam Beck in the Legislature yesterday. The bill while repealing the special measure of 1913 provides that funds secured by Hydro-Electric bond issues guaranteed by the province may be used for the construction of the new railways.

The change in the plan relieves the municipalities from their responsibility of operation and supervision and provides a more substantial financing arrangement than that of floating municipal debentures. The burden will be distributed equally between province, commission and municipalities.

To save the Government and commission each municipality interested will deposit debentures equalling the expenditure, and they will also provide for the deficits which accrue from interest or sinking fund.

Following out some ideas suggested by deputations bonds for construction will be issued on a 50-year basis and for the first ten of these when the lines are struggling to get on their feet municipalities will not be charged any sinking fund deficits at all. No chance will be taken, however, of a municipality failing in its obligations, and their debentures may be sold in the market if the commission thinks necessary, the commission bonds being a first mortgage on the radials.

Before any municipality enters agreement the Lieutenant-Governor's approval must be gained and the electors who vote on money bylaws will then vote on it at the polls.

The change in the Government policy is understood to have been caused by the desire to centralize the management and to ensure certain capable men being in charge. This bill is now taken to open the way for all places so desiring to advance at once upon electric railway schemes.

Hon. Mr. Hanna introduced amendments to the provincial liquor license administration. One thing arranged for is the enforcement of the Scott Act by means of the Government backing with consolidated revenue funds the operation of the act in municipalities where the fines collected are not large enough to permit adequate enforcement. Government and municipality will each contribute one-half and a separate account subject to audit will be kept. The operation in unorganized districts will be under the Government entirely.

One change is to include Good Friday along with Christmas as one of the days on which liquor cannot be sold.

The right to question an intoxicated person in local option districts will hereafter be allowed in any "dry" district, and he may be forced to explain the circumstances.

It is now left to the magistrate to place on the Indian list any person he thinks proper.

Druggists as well as licenses will have the privilege of appealing from convictions and the fines and penalties accumulating in local option districts will be placed in a common fund for the use of the constituency in enforcing the law.

AN IMAGINARY SEAT AT CAMP FIRE IN INDIA

Rev. H. J. Keith Tells From His Own Experience What One Might See and Hear

The Rev. H. J. Keith gave a very interesting address to the Literary Society of Charlotte Street Methodist Church yesterday evening. The audience was small, but was well rewarded for coming to hear the address, which was delivered as a campfire talk to a circle of interested listeners. Mr. Keith asked his audience to imagine themselves in India, gathered around an evening camp-fire, to hear one of the travelling fakirs or holy men speak to the people, when their day's work was over.

A very pretty camp-fire was arranged on the platform, but Mr. Keith explained that the camp-fire in India would be quite a different one. It would be fed by dried manure, for wood is so scarce in India that the people have to use this material for fuel which they dry on the sides and roofs of their houses. The rural parts of India as described by the speaker, resembled the manorial system that existed in England in the time of Chaucer in the fourteenth century. The people, who worked quite a number of farms lived together in one litte village community, self-centred and cut-off, very much from the rest of the world.

The lower castes received most of their education by means of these travelling priests, for schools and newspapers are not common to the lowest caste; superstition and religious rites are kept alive in the same way. The houses are very poor affairs, having very few windows, if any at all, and are almost destitute of furniture, save in the houses of the well to do, where a few chairs, a table and a bed constitute the furnishings. In the morning, the speaker said, you will frequently see the inmates banging their beds on the ground outside the house, to free the bed of unwelcome visitors. The beds are made of four poles fastened together with ropes stretched between them.

This ubiquitous priest is a walking newspaper, as well as a teacher of Pagan doctrine. He tells the people news of distant parts of the country which he has visited, as well as news of foreign affairs which he has read in the journals of that country. He explains how the Canadians have refused the Hindus admittance to Canada, how the British oppress the people, how the missionaries are spreading false doctrine, and the strange belief in a Christ, how they teach from a sacred book which they call the Bible. They must shun all these things, for they have an incarnation in their own religion and sacred books, too, both of which are the best in the world. He explains to them the origin of their great gods and goddesses, tells them what days are holy and how they must observe them. He explains that they must worship the snake, lest they offend it and it sting them, thereby causing their death. He advises them to visit some of the holy places, such as the great river Ganges, where they can wash away their sins. Thus he talks to them on a great variety of subjects until the stars are twinkling all over the sky, when it is time for the people to go to their beds.

CAMP SHERWOOD THREATEN TO DROP FROM THE ORDER IF THE RATES ARE BOOSTED

The meeting of the Woodmen of the World held last night in their hall was a disappointment, inasmuch as Dr. W. S. Harrison, Head Council Commander, who was to be present and explain the raising of the rates, failed to put in his appearance and did not send any explanation. Stirring addresses were made by Messrs. W. Mann, of Toronto, and Mr. D. Cinnamon, of Lindsay, as well as several local members, censuring the Head Council for their proposed change of rates. Mr. G. N. Gordon spoke defending the Head Council.

The result of the meeting was a resolution protesting against the action of the Council and promising that in event of the proposed rates coming into force the camp would quit in a body.

$100 FINE IS IMPOSED

ON CONVICTION OF KEEPING GAMING HOUSE

Raymond Sullivan, charged with being in charge of a common gaming house known as Joe's Pool Room, was fined $100 forthwith, or six months in jail, by Magistrate Dumble this morning. The fine was paid. Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for Sullivan.

In passing judgment, Magistrate Dumble remarked that two reputed experts had come here. They had come looking for sport They found it. There had been considerable crookedness throughout the entire game of pool played in the pool room, of which Sullivan was in charge.

The table had been engaged for the express purpose of playing the game for the stake of $125. Sullivan was aware of the fact. He was responsible. Lavassuer was not there.

The case of David Parsonson, George Patterson, of Lindsay, and Edward Donahue, of Peterborough, charged with being frequenters of the pool room, His Worship reserved judgment for one week. Parsonson and Patterson pleaded not guilty, while Donahue pleaded ugilty.

MISSED TIDY BALANCE BY NOT BUYING

Cheese Buyer Sees the Mistake He Made Last Year

"If we had purchased $5,000 worth of cheese last fall we would now have fully $10,000 to our credit," was the remark that passed between two prominent cheese men yesterday afternoon.

From the tone of the conversation of both men, evidently cheese is due to take a jump in price.

Later when interviewed by The Review as to the standing of the cheese market, one of the men stated that cheese would possibly be rather high at the commencement of the season and also that it would be rather scarce.

Cheese at present is rated about fourteen cents and may possibly make fifteen by the time the market opens next month. This however will tend toward the farmers going back to cheese instead of so much butter.

F. H. DOBBIN BY ACCLAMATION

Was the Only Nomination for Vacant Seat in Council

Mr. F. H. Dobbin gets the seat in the City Council as a representative for the Centre Ward, succeeding Ald. G. N. Gordon, who resigned to accept the position of City Solicitor.

At the noon hour to-day the nomination of Mr. Dobbin by Messrs. T. E. Bradburn and W. H. Lytle was the only nomination received, and accordingly Mr. Dobbin takes the seat by acclamation.

GROWTH IN MEMBERSHIP OF LEAGUE

Reports Show Progress of the George Street Epworth League.

PRESIDENT RE-ELECTED

The Epworth League of George Street Methodist Church held its annual meeting and election of officers last evening, with the Pastor, Rev. R. G. Peever, in the chair, about 120 members and friends being present.

The first part of the programme was devoted to receiving annual reports from the six departments, and closing up the year's business. Excellent reports were received, indicative of a most encouraging year's work for the year ending April 30th.

The Christian Endeavor and Look-out Department gave a commendable report in connection with the Christian Endeavor and Look-Out work. Through its active efforts it had succeeded in just doubling the membership from 78 to 155. The Missionary Department have greatly encouraged the study of home and foreign missions by monthly programmes and mission study classes. Through this department the Society will contribute $200 to the Forward Movement for Missions this year. A visiting and Relief Committee has also done splendid service in visiting and sending flowers to the sick and aged of the congregation and giving practical relief to poor families.

The Literary and Social Department carried on for the purpose of promoting literary work and social intercourse among the young people, have held some very interesting evenings, including debates and socials. The Christian Citizenship which is a department entirely for men's work, was severely handicapped through several changes in the Vice-Presidency, but made a fair showing. The Junior Epworth League, which is in charge of the 5th Vice-President of the Senior reported having a membership of 45. This department meets on Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, and is for children under fifteen.

A Publicity Department was formed during the year as an experiment, and it has been found very successful. It had charge of the publicity work of the Society, reporting to the newspapers, and also published a Society paper, the Criterion, which was read at each monthly meeting. This added a very interesting feature to the work of the Society. Altogether, the Epworth League is to be congratulated on the flourishing condition in which it now is. A further innovation has been introduced for the coming year.

At the request of the President, who was re-elected, two associate presidents were appointed to assist him in the work of the Society.

The following officers were elected for 1914-15:

President—C. S. Tompson, B.A.

Associate Presidents—Miss Pearl Hardill and Mr. Earl Logan.

First Vice-President (Christian Endeavor)—Miss Lillian Fisher.

Second Vice-President (Missionary)—Miss A. L. Beatty.

Third Vice-President (Literary and Social)—Miss Roxie McKee.

Fourth Vice-President (Christian Citizenship)—Mr. Horace Coon.

LONDON HAS BAD BLAZE

BUILDING OF DOMINION SAVINGS ASSOCIATION IS DESTROYED

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, April 21.—Fire from an unknown cause, but apparently preceded by an explosion completely destroyed the Dominion Savings Building, owned by the Dominion Savings Association, located at the corner of Richmond and King Sts., at three o'clock this morning. The loss on building is two hundred thousand, with insurance of one hundred thousand. The loss to tenants is one hundred thousand. Both the Canadian Pacific and Great North Western telegraph offices occupied the building and their service was cut off until temporary premises could be secured.

Other tenants included the Northern Life Insurance Co., Western Fair Association, and Woodmen of the World, Knights of Maccabees, Fidelity Trust Company, and Dominion Savings and Loan Association.

WORK ON BRIDGE MAY START TOMORROW

Word from Bridgenorth states that the bridge is in the same predicament to-day as it was yesterday, but repair work may be started to-morrow. The road around the lake is in fairly good condition, but none too safe for autos. The 'phone communications to Ennismore are cut off.

$1,000 FROM CARNEGIE.

Belleville, April 21.—The Baptist Church of this city have decided to accept from Mr. Carnegie the sum of $1,000 towards the installing of a pipe organ in the church.

GAS PLANT AT WESTERN HOTEL EXPLODES CAUSING AT LEAST NINE DEATHS

The Proprietors Wife and Daughter Are Dead and Son is Missing

Margaret Wilson, Ontario School Teacher not Expected to Live

Spectators Unable to Save Victims as They Burned to Death

Canadian Press Despatch.

Macoun, Sask., April 21.—The latest list of dead from the hotel explosion and fire is:—

Mrs. Hockhaus, the proprietor's wife.

Emma Mockhaus, daughter, 22.

Thomas Drake, telephone contractor, Moose Jaw.

Harold Clark, government telephone lineman, Estevan.

Clifford Vander, hotel clerk

Ford Schmidt, bartender.

Joseph Grant, carpenter.

James Dungar, buyer for International Elevator Company of Mintou.

Mrs. Petterson, cook.

A laborer named Rodney, and probably the prorietor's son Harold.

A telephone gang of four men from Estevan are missing and it is rumored that several Regina and Moose Jaw commercial travellers are missing. Margaret Wilson, a school teacher at Fergus Falls, Ont., is not expected to live.

A guest at the hotel, coming out from dinner, told Vander he smelled gas. The latter opened the cellar door and explosion came, lifting the building six feet into the air. After the fire started, the spectators were powerless to help the victims, who were pinned down beneath the timbers and wreckage, burning to death before their eyes. A bucket brigade and a hose from a railway tank were the only means of fighting the fire, and the marvel is that the whole town was not swept. The death list is expected to total at least eleven.

MACOUN, Sask., April 21.—Eight persons were killed or cremated, one was fatally injured and eight seriously injured in the explosion of the gas plant of the Macoun Hotel at noon yesterday.

The dead: Mrs. C. Hochaus and daughter, Emma; Emile Dungar, grain dealer; Cliff Vander, carpenter; F. Schmidt, bartender; Walter Clark, telephone lineman; Thomas Drake, Moose Jaw; Joseph Grant, carpenter, Macoun.

Dangerously injured: Stella Peterson, cook; Miss Margaret Wilson, school teacher of Fergus Falls, Ont.

THREE INDIANS ARE ASSESSED $20 AND COSTS

Aftermath of Row at Burleigh, Where They Were Arrested

SMOKE IS HELD.

Charged With Assaulting Constable and Resisting Arrest

Albert Smoke, Richard Henry, and Richard Perry, the three Indians who were remanded last week on the charge of being drunk in Buckhorn, a local option district, appeared before Magistrate Edmison this morning at 11 o'clock and pleaded guilty. When asked if they could pay a fine they reluctantly admitted being financially embarrassed. Constable Cochrane claimed that Smoke's previous record caused him to believe that he would not pay a fine if it were not payed forthwith. His Worship, however, thought otherwise, and stated that their fines would be $20.00 and costs, amounting to $27.33, and that he would give them till June the first to pay it.

Resisting Arrest.

Constable Cochrane still had his doubts about Smoke, so he laid information against him for assaulting Constable Montgomery and resisting arrest. On this charge he will be held till next Friday, when both it and the charge of being drunk in local option territory will be dealt with. The other two promised faithfully to go to work and after a few words by His Worship along the lines of total abstinence, they made their exit.

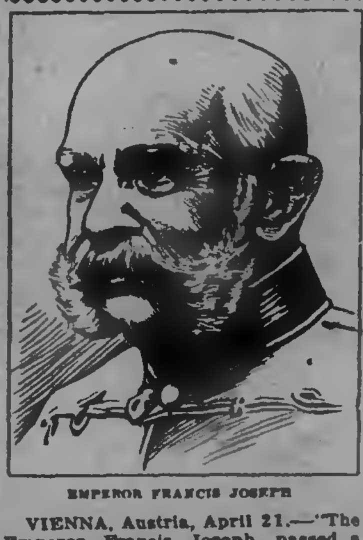
THOUSANDS OF EXCURSIONISTS TO PETERBORO THIS SUMMER

(Contributed by the Board of Trade.)

Can Peterborough accommodate fifty thousand (50,000) excursionists this summer? Mr. Business Man, you can give your answer by becoming a member of the Board of Trade, and thus help in their scheme to advertise Peterborough as an excursion centre for the summer of 1914.

We have the Parks, the Waterways, the Baseball team, the Lift-lock, and a score of other attractions. All we need is the advertising. The Board of Trade is now working on an extensive scheme to accomplish this. It is to your interest to back them up.

On or before May 1st a Board of Trade representative will call on you for your subscription. If you are not going to be in, leave your Two Dollars ($2.00) addressed to the Board of Trade, and he will leave your Membership Card. Better still, take no chances on being overlooked, but mail it to-morrow to the Secretary or President, along with your ideas as to the most comprehensive way this scheme of advertising Peterborough can be carried out.



EMPEROR FRANCIS JOSEPH

VIENNA, Austria, April 21.—"The Emperor Francis Joseph passed a fairly comfortable night. His health otherwise is not unsatisfactory." This was the official bulletin issued at the Palace of Schoenberunn yesterday. It was also stated that his majesty rose at his usual early hour and transacted official business.

The guarded language of the official bulletin caused apprehension in Vienna that the Emperor's condition was graver than was admitted by his physicians. Fear was expressed in court circles that unless the catarrh from which he is suffering diminishes within a short time serious complicatons may develop.

SENTENCED TO BE HANGED.

Halifax, April 21.—Edward Cook, Jr., of Sheet Harbor, convicted of the murder of Charles Assaff, a Syrian peddler, at Sheet Harbor, was sentenced to be hanged on June 30. Previous to being sentenced he protested his innocence.

FOUNDATION DAMAGED.

The recent blasting in an effort to remove the ice from the creek, under Hunter Street, affected the foundation of J. Halpin's Blacksmith shop and damaged the brickwork to some extent. Street Commissioner Evans has a couple of men on the job today and the matter is being rectified.

DEATH BY ACCIDENT

THE VERDICT OF JURY INVESTIGATING FATALITY AT C. P. R. BRIDGE

"That Harry Lennox came to his death accidentally by being run over by freight number 76 going eastward on the evening of April 14 at the C. P. R. Bridge, Peterboro," was the verdict arrived at by the jury empanelled to investigate the death of Harry Lennox Coroner Dr. Greer presided. Mr. Jos. Wearing., M.A., represented the Crown

Patrick Gorham said he found the body. It would be about 400 yards probably from the station. The one leg was lying on the north side of the main rail of three rails. The body was on the south side of the main rail. It was between 8.55 and 9 o'clock. Witness did not go near the body. A man at the station came and looked at the remains and then telephoned the police department. A train passed at 9.15 but this was not the train that passed over the body of the deceased.

C. P .R. Car Inspector Henry Falkner stated that he received a message from Peterborough that a man had been killed by freight No. 76. He investigated and found the freight commencing with about the sixth car with blood on the south side wheels. A shred of woollen cloth was also found on the sixth car. In getting on the car Lennox could have grabbed the irons on the side. The cars were box cars.

Arthur Quibell said he knew Harry Lennox. He saw him on April 14th. He saw him at 6 o'clock. He appeared to be drunk. He remarked the next morning to McCall that he thought Lennox must have been drunk. He did not know Lennox had been killed when he said this.

Joe Miller gave similar evidence to the former witness.

Samuel Sewell said he had known the deceased for four years. He had a peculiar walk. If one had never seen him before they might think he was drunk Witness knew him to be a sober, industrious man. He had seen Lennox that afternoon of the accident and did not see anything wrong with him.

POLICE AND SALVATION ARMY CAPTAIN CLASH

Officer Suggests That Police Attend to Blind Pigs and Leave the Army Alone

COBALT, April 21.—Cobalt has been for some time a place where the local branch of that world-wide organization, the Salvation Army, and the city police are not on the happiest relationship one with the other.

The police, continuing their practice of enforcing the by-law relating to standing on the side-walk, had moved a few people on while the Army were carrying on its Gospel spreading mission. Noticing this action the leader stopped short in his fervid exhortations and opened out into a heated tirade against the "coppers." In fighting spirit the leader requested the liberty, religious and civic, as was enjoyed elsewhere. He emphatically uttered a defiance to their interrupters in 'I defy Chief Burke to move us from this stand. We have stood here for months and we will stand here. There is no blockade of the sidewalk when the people are standing along the edge of the sidewalk.

"If the police would attend to the blind pigs and leave the Salvation Army alone they would be doing their duty," went on the leader in aggrieved tones. "We want a new council that's what we want in Cobalt," finished the speaker who received the murmured endorsement of a few of the bunch nearest the band. The Army members then intoned "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," and turned their heels from the forbidden ground.

Chief Burke states that he visited Captain Snowden and suggested that together they go before the town Council and relate their respective sides of the matter. Chief Burke stated that he would, of course, abide by the decision of the council whether it favored his stand on the matter or the Army's stand. He says that Capatin Snowden resolutely refused to adopt this move which caused Chief Burke to say that the only course open to him then was to take the case to court.

Chief Burke this morning applied to Magistrate Atkinson for a summons against Captain Snowden but the issuing of the summons was deferred until Chief Burke had consulted town solicitor George Ross.

"The S. A. have selected the busiest part of the town and a place where there is only one sidewalk to the roadway and if the sidewalk is blocked foot passengers have to go out into the muddy road and get back again onto the sidewalk," said Chief Burke this morning. "In the big cities the S. A. always choose some quiet side street where traffic is very little," further observed the Chief.

Captain David Snowden, captain of the Cobalt branch of the Salvation Army in an interview said: "We go to the Square for no other purpose than that of doing good and preaching the gospel. We want to stand at that corner and the police want us to go over to the Lang Street corner, but we cannot get our crowd there. It is not as if we stood in the middle of the road and stopped the vehicular traffic, we never do that. And there was only a crowd on the edge of the pavement; people were able to get along on the inside of the sidewalk. If the police want to prevent an obstruction who do they not move on the crowd that is always hanging around the Imperial Bank corner making remarks about women that pass, that are not fit to be heard. There is always a number of people there at night and on the Square corner whether we are preaching or not. The Salvation Army has fought this very question all over the world and [illegible] won almost invariably. In Toronto I myself have preached at the corner of Yonge and Albert [illegible] you know what the traffic is there. It is merely a matter of [illegible] on the part of the police."

HYDRO RADIALS.

THE MEMORIAL of the Hydro Radial Electric Unions of Ontario presented to the Honorable J. J. Foy, is worthy of note. After stating power conditions in the province, they proceeded to ask that legislation be passed to secure several objects. They asked that permission be given to the Hydro Electric power commission to proceed at once with the development of the power at the spillway of the new Welland Canal, and that funds be placed at the disposal of the commission to carry out the proposal. They also asked that legislation be passed authorizing a standard agreement to be adopted as a contract between the commission and the municipalities ; also to guarantee bonds for the construction of such radial roads, as are approved by the commission, and that such bonds be for a period of fifty years. Lastly, they asked that legislation be passed dividing various districts into electoral zones, so that one municipality could not hinder or delay the construction of a radial road that might be necessary and desired by the majority of the other municipalities. When this important memorial was presented, Peterborough was represented by Mayor Buller, who has taken much interest in the scheme, and may be relied on to see that this city gets the benefit of Hydro Radials if there is any benefit in them.

HONOURABLE G. E. FOSTER'S BOOK.

A BOOK of much interest that has recently been published is entitled "Canadian Addresses" by the Honourable G. E. Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce in the Borden Cabinet. The book contains ten addresses on the outstanding questions in Canadian politics of the present time. He has dealt with the Naval question, Reciprocity and Immigration. He has explained his point of view in his usual clear and incisive style. The following paragraphs are a good example of the substantial character of the contents of his book :

> As to settlers, Canada prefers the people of Northern Europe—British first, and allied stock next, with, of course, open house for the comers from the United States. Under regulations as to health and morals, all are welcome to our wide areas and the opportunities of our new country. The people of Southern Europe are next in preference. The genius and spirit of their institutions are different from ours in important respects ; they do not fit so easily into our political and social system, and are harder to assimilate, but the best of them make good citizens, and most of them perform valuable service in the upbuilding of our national fabric.
>
> With the Oriental it is different. For the great Asiatic civilizations we have the utmost respect ; we acknowledge their greatness and admire their learning and art ; but there are reasons why we think it not only best, but absolutely necessary, to restrict to a minimum access of their immense populations. Climatically, Canada is not suitable to their best development. Economically, their coming injects an element which confuses and deteriorates the basis of wages and living. Ethically, assimilation and coaction are practically impossible. Politically, their coming in large numbers tends to interminable difficulties.
>
> For these reasons, what is called "the Oriental question" has assumed some importance, and tends to become one of increasing gravity. Some of these great peoples are our fellow-subjects, one is the ally of the Mother Country, and another the most ancient and populous of olden empires. To temper theory with practice, to study susceptibilities and pursue sane methods, and whilst doing this to keep mutual respect and strive to arrive at peaceful methods of solution, will tax, but need not dismay, the best resources of statesmanship.
>
> But in the final analysis it must be understood that Canada will claim absolute control over her own gateways, and the final voice in deciding who shall be admitted to her home and her nationhood.

UNIVERSITY FINANCE.

THE FINANCIAL CONDITION of the University of Toronto requiring a grant of $80,000 to cover its deficit, not to mention its needs of over a million for the completion of new buildings and the financial interests of Queen's University, and Western University, have brought the question of University finance to the attention of the Ontario Legislature. The Honourable I. B. Lucas explained in the Legislature the other day that possibly there might be appointed a government commission to investigate thoroughly financial affairs of Ontario Universities, with the object of devising some system that would insure for the future, a workable well understood basis for all three. He contended, that as far as possible, overlapping should be eliminated, and that little could be said in favor of building up other Universities to compete with the University of Toronto. As to what form competition between Universities in Ontario should take is a matter of opinion. The main point in Mr. Lucas's statement is that there should be co-operation between them, rather than petty rivalry. The Universities of the province should work together to secure a common end, that of providing the best Universitiy training possible for the youth of this province. If, among the many questions that are waiting for solution in the Ontario House, time could be given to consider this most important problem, Mr. Lucas will deserve the thanks of all intelligent people. Certainly the investigation would be productive of great benefits to the financial side of Ontario Universities.

THE NEW SUCCESSION ACT.

THE AMENDMENT to the Succession Duty Act, recently passed in the Ontario House and the work of the Honorable I. B. Lucas, has aimed to secure the carrying out of the intention of the original Act. The Act provides for certain duties being paid to the Government from the estates of deceased persons when the estates are over a certain value. During the last year or so, a number of wealthy persons have died and evaded the act by distributing their estate before death, thus, when their will was probated, they had a comparatively small estate to bequeath. The new amendment provides that in giving away or transferring of property, since the 1st of July, 1892, and which had not been immediately assumed will come under the assessment of the act. Thus property that is distributed, but which has been retained in the possession of the owner, or which has not been immediately assumed by the donee, will not be exempt from the succession tax. Under the new act, if a rich man wishes to avoid the succession duties, he must give away his estate absolutely and receive no benefit whatsoever from it, either voluntary or by contract. The new Act ought to secure the collection of this duty without evasion.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

ACCORDING TO THE latest statistics there are 2,000,000 French families without children. If these statistics refer to Quebec we will not print what they are but merely state that they are not in accordance with the true state of French-Canadian families.

WE HAVE PERUSED a column of statistics about Toronto in the Toronto Telegram. They are very interesting and humorous. We notice that the fire department has 334 men on the pay roll, but it does not say they are all firemen —doubtless a few supers for emergencies are among them.

THE TORONTO TELEGRAM gives an account of a man who was pronounced dead and came to life again. There is really nothing strange in this. Several times we have encountered deadheads walking about this mundane sphere.

TEMPERANCE PEOPLE could learn a lesson from Ottawa of the value to their cause of a supply of pure sweet drinking water. In Ottawa beer drinking has increased amongst those who think they cannot afford Tally-ho water, while alcoholic drinking has almost disappeared amongst those who have been driven to search out the pure spring.

THEN 39,564 persons were either arrested or summoned to court last year. We are not informed whether this list includes the editors of The World, Telegram or Haileyburian. Only our proverbial courtesy prevents us from going into details.

THERE ARE NEARLY 200,000 volumes on the shelves of Toronto's 12 libraries. This statement is quite true. The fact that 200,000 volumes are on the shelves accounts for so much ignorance and so many automobiles in Toronto.

PROPERTY to the value of $380,411.30 was stolen in Toronto. A sad reflection on the people of the Good City. The thirty cents was doubtless the former property of a Toronto newspaper man.

THE HEADQUARTERS of the Canadian Northern Railway are in Toronto—surely not—we were always under the impression that Ottawa was the headquarters of that concern.

Minnehaha Comes to Town.

Metawaka, Kan., Talk.

A lady from the Kickapoo Indian reservation, north of here, was in town yesterday. She purchased a pound of Horseshoe tobacco, and had expectorated half of it on the sidewalk before she left town.

During the Rush Hour.

The man arose and gave his seat to a girl.

"Oh, thank you most kindly, sir," she replied.

"Don't mind her being polite," explained a sad-faced woman. "I'm taking her to a sanitarium."

One of Mark Twain's Jokes.

"I enjoyed your sermon this morning very much," said Mark Twain to a clergyman of his acquaintance. "I welcomed it like an old friend. I have, you know, a book at home containing every word of it."

"You have not," said the preacher.

"I have indeed," returned the humorist.

"Well, send that book to me. I'd like to see it."

"You shall," Mark Twain replied. And he sent the next morning an unabridged dictionary to the minister. —Tit-Bits.

Partisanship at College.

Brockville Times (Con.)

Some time ago the opinion was expressed in these columns that the introduction of party politics into the body of the students attending Toronto University was a mistake, and that instead of trying to nurture political partisanship in the minds of Canadian collegians it would be far better to teach them to judge public issues solely upon their merits. That opinion is strengthened by a recent occurrence. For partisan reasons the picture of Sir Wilfrid Laurier is to be deliberately omitted from the 'Varsity Year Book. A number of newspapers have commented on this incident, and it is significant that the Conservative press has not only refused to defend the action but has condemned it as small potatoes and poor judgment. One may be entirely opposed to Sir Wilfrid's political actions and record but the fact remains that he is a striking figure in Canadian history and the picturesque leader of one of the great political parties of Canada, and is entitled to recognition as such.

TUESDAY

By Walt Mason

Oh, Tuesday is a large, fat day, indorsed by pulpit and by press; a day on which to shoo away all mental colic and distress. On Tuesday hustling people thrive, and see their bank accounts increased; we all are glad that we're alive when Tuesday's sun shines in the East. But Tuesday has no charm for men who play the old, sad loafing game; who fain would own the potent yen, but will not work to get the same. You see that bunch in every town, the shiftless, lazy, frowzy ghosts; they're holding dry-goods boxes down, or bracing poles and hitching-posts. Fair Tuesday comes with noble gifts, but idlers have no show thereat; as on her shining way she drifts, she eyes the bunch and mutters, "Scat!" Her gifts are for the bustling boys who hump themselves the whole day long, and in the evening find their joys at home, 'mid laughter, mirth and song. You could not ask a smoother day on which your labors to pursue; but if you fool the hours away, all days will look alike to you.

Birthdays Note

TUESDAY, APRIL TWENTY-FIRST

HIS HONOR D. B. MacTAVISH, judge of the county court of Carleton and a prominent and public-spirited citizen of Ottawa, celebrates his sixty-second birthday on this date. He is now one of the most eminent county court judges in Ontario, possessing a splendid reputation among members of the bar. Before being raised to the Bench he practised in the capital, being for some time city solicitor. He was retained at various times by the Dominion Government to argue cases before the Privy Council. Since becoming a judge he has more than once acted as a royal commissioner to investigate charges of corruption. In private life he has been active in the promotion of education.

PLAN OF OPERATION.

U. S. Contemplates a Possible Dash To Mexico City.

WASHINGTON, April 21. — The war plans of the Government—for all the preparations show the intention to resort to the actual use of force within a limited area of Mexican territory—embrace the use of the army as well as the navy and the marine corps. The program agreed on calls for joint operations of the three branches of the military service with the marines.

In the discussion of an aggressive plan of operations short of war, having for its object either the rescue of Americans and other foreigners in the City of Mexico or the lesser task of holding the town and port of Vera Cruz against a force of Mexicans, it was agreed that the marines after landing at Vera Cruz should push forward along the line of railway leading to the capital, for a distance of eight miles, to a point where a concrete bridge spans a canyon. This is a place of great strategic importance, and will be one of the hard nuts to crack if an advance on the City of Mexico should be regarded as necessary.

The elaborate plans drawn for marine corps operations contemplate the taking of the City of Mexico, for the purpose of rescuing Americans and other foreigners if necessary. A quick dash for the Mexican capital before the arrival of any troops at Vera Cruz is the keynote of the plan. All the offensive military plans for the navy and the marine corps have not been completed, but the basic principle of the program of operations decided on contemplates the seizure of Vera Cruz and Tampico and the blockade of both coasts of Mexico.

Fall Fatal After All.

WINDSOR, Ont., April 21.—Achilles Morand, aged 18, who fell 45 feet from a windmill last Tuesday, and was apparently unhurt, took suddenly worse Sunday night and died in a few minutes. Morand, who weighed 200 pounds, had got up after his fall and walked away without any apparent injury, after bouncing into a water trough.

Clemens, local district representative of the Department of Agriculture, has been tendered, to take effect on the first of June. Mr. Clemens is going to New Ontario to become manager of the Government demonstration and experimental farm at Monteith.

Newspaper Staff Summoned.

HALIFAX, N.S., April 21. — Subpoenas have been issued for practically all the staff of The Evening Mail, the paper which insinuated in an article published last week that if the Legislature passed the Tramways Bill now before it the public could only conclude that the members had been bought.

RACING TO LAND GUNS.

German Steamer Hastens To Get to Vera Cruz Before Blockade.

VERA CRUZ, Mexico, via Galveston, Texas, April 21.—Intense interest was created here yesterday when it became known that a German steamship is racing for this port at the topmost speed of her engines in order to unload her cargo of 200 machine guns, a quantity of small arms and ammunition before the American fleet under Rear Admiral Fletcher can establish a blockade of the harbor. All the guns and munitions are for the forces of Gen. Huerta, but the European port from which the vessel sailed has not been disclosed.

Under international law, a blockade must be effective if vessels in the category of the German ship are to be prevented from landing their cargoes.

A question may arise concerning whether war exists under the present status of things. At all events, the American battleships must be standing guard off Vera Cruz if the German vessel is to be prevented from entering the port.

Two Workmen Killed.

TORONTO, April 21. — Two fatal accidents occurred on downtown buildings yesterday afternoon within five minutes of each other. THE CENTAUR COMPANY, 77 MURRAY STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

COWARDICE COURT

BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON

"Good Lord! Couldn't you rescue him?" in horror.

"He rescued us, sir," mumbled Tompkins.

"You mean"—

"He throwed us in and then had to jump in and pull us out, sir. Beggin' your pardon, sir, but dash him!"

"And you didn't throw him in after all? By Jove! Extraordinary!"

"Do you mean to tell us that he threw you great bulking creatures into the river? Single handed?" cried Lady Bazelhurst, aghast.

"He did, Evelyn," inserted Penelope. "I met them coming home, and poor Tompkins was out of his senses. I don't know how it happened, but"—

"It was this way, your ladyship," put in James, the groom. "Tompkins and me could see him from the point there, sir, a-fishin' below the log. So we says to each other 'Come on,' and up we went to where he was a-fishin'. Tompkins, bein' the game warden, says he to him, 'Hi, there!' He was plainly on our property, sir, a-fishin' from a boat for bass, sir. 'Hello, boys!' says he back to us. 'Get off our land,' says Tompkins. 'I am,' says he; 'it's water out here where I am.' Then"—

"You're wrong," broke in Tompkins. "He said 'It's wet out here where I am.'"

"You're right. It was wet. Then Tompkins called him a vile name, your lordship—shall I repeat it, sir?"

"No, no!" cried four feminine voices.

"Yes, do," muttered the duke.

"He didn't wait after that, sir. He rowed to shore in a flash and landed on our land. 'What do you mean by that?' he said, madlike. 'My orders is to put you off this property,' says Tompkins, 'or to throw you in the river.' 'Who gave these orders?' asked Mr. Shaw. 'Lord Bazelhurst, sir, dash you'—beg pardon, sir; it slipped out. 'And who the devil is Lord Bazelhurst?' said he. 'Hurst,' said Tompkins. 'He owns this ground. Can't you see the notices on the trees! No Trespassin'?' But Mr. Shaw said, 'Well, why don't you throw me in the river?' He kinder smiled when he said it. 'I will,' says Tompkins and made a rush for him. I don't just remember why I started in to help Tompkins, but I did. Somehow, sir, Mr. Shaw got"—

"Don't call him Mr. Shaw. Just Shaw; he's no gentleman," exploded Lord Bazelhurst.

"But he told us both to call him 'Mister,' sir, as long as we lived. I kinder got in the habit of it, your lordship, up there. That is, that's what he told us after he got through with us. Well, anyhow, he got the start of us, an'—there's Tompkins' eyes, sir, an' look at my ear. Then he pitched us both in the river."

"Good Lord!" gasped the duke.

"Diable!" sputtered the count.

"Splendid!" cried Penelope, her eyes sparkling.

"Hang it all, Pen, don't interrupt the count!" snorted Bazelhurst for want of something better to say and perhaps hoping that Deveaux might say in French what could not be uttered in English.

"Don't say it in French, count," said little Miss Folsom. "It deserves English."

"Go on, James!" sternly, from Lady Bazelhurst.

"Well, neither of us can swim, your ladyship, an' we'd 'a' drowned if Mr.—if Shaw hadn't jumped in himself an' pulled us out. As it was, sir, Tompkins was unconscious. We rolled him on a log, sir, an' got a keg of water out of him. Then Mr.—er—Shaw told us to go 'ome and get in bed, sir."

"He sent a message to you, sir," added Tompkins, shivering mightily.

"Well, I'll have one for him, never fear," said his lordship, glancing about bravely. "I won't permit any man to assault my servants and brutally maltreat them. No, sir; he shall hear from me or my attorney."

"He told us to tell you, sir, that if he ever caught anybody from this place on his land he'd serve him worse than he did us," said Tompkins.

"He says, 'I don't want no Bazelhursts on my place,'" added James in finality.

"Go to bed, both of you!" roared his lordship.

"Very good, sir," in unison.

"They can get to bed without your help, I dare say, Pen," added his lordship caustically as she started away with them. Penelope blushed, and one party went to luncheon, while the other went to bed.

"I should like to see this terrible Mr. Shaw," observed Penelope at table. "He's a sort of Jack the Giant Killer, I fancy."

"He is the sort one has to meet in America," lamented her ladyship.

"Oh, I say now," expostulated the New York young man wryly.

"I don't mean in good society," she corrected, with unconscious irony.

"Oh," said he, very much relieved.

"He's a demmed cad," said his lordship conclusively.

"Because he chucked your men into the river?" asked Penelope sweetly.

"She's deuced pretty, eh?" whispered the duke to Mrs. De Peyton without taking his eyes from his young countrywoman's face.

"Who?" asked Mrs. De Peyton. Then he relinquished his gaze and turned his monocle blankly upon the American beside him.

"I shall send him a warning that he'll have to respect, cad or no cad," said Bazelhurst, absently spreading butter upon his fingers instead of the roll.

"Send him a warning?" asked his queenly wife. "Aren't you going to see him personally? You can't trust the servants it seems."

"My dear, I can't afford to lose my temper and engage in a row with that bounder, and there's no end of trouble I might get into"—

"I shall see him myself if you won't," said her ladyship firmly. There was frigid silence at the table for a full minute, relieved only when his lordship's monocle dropped into the glass of water he was trying to convey to his lips. He thought best to treat the subject lightly, so he laughed in his most jovial way.

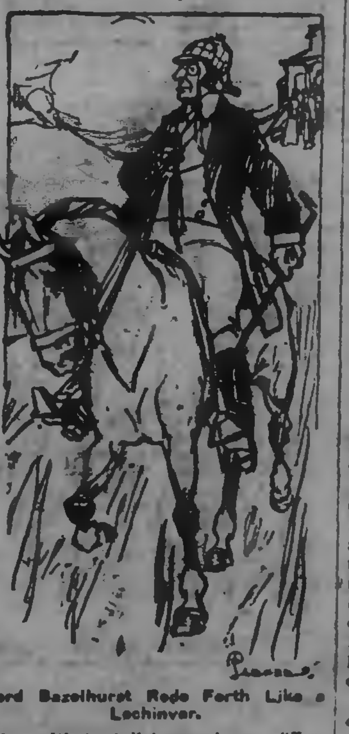
"You'd better take a mackintosh with you, my dear," he said. "Remember what he told Tompkins and James."

"He will not throw me into the river. It might be different if you went. Therefore I think"—

"Throw me in, would he?" and Bazelhurst laughed loudly. "I'm no groom, my dear. You forget that it is possible for Mr. Shaw to be soused."

"He was good enough to souse himself this morning," volunteered Penelope. "I rather like him."

"By Jove, Cecil! You're not afraid to meet him, are you?" asked the duke, with tantalizing coolness. "You know, if you are I'll go over and talk to the fellow."



Lord Bazelhurst Rode Forth Like a Lochinvar.

WEST POINT DISCIPLINE.

Its System of Demerits and the Sunday Morning Services.

The rigor of discipline at West Point does not leave behind many memories of halcyon college days. There are no week end larks, for, constantly under the surveillance of the officers, the cadets are never permitted to leave except under military orders. If they ride to the adjoining town, Highland Falls, they must not dismount or let their feet touch any soil outside the reservation.

How severe the system of regulating the standard of the several cadets is may be learned from the fact that some 18,000 acts of each appointee are "marked" during his four years' course, any one of which must be passed as good or given one or more demerits. "Late at roll call" insures one demerit; "absence from duty," ten marks; "slight untidiness in dress," one; "inattention at drill or other duty," five, and so on. If in six months out of some 2,000 events a hundred demerits accumulate the unfortunate student is dismissed from the academy.

At half past 10 every Sunday morning the cadets gather in front of the stone barracks, as trimly kept as any Fifth avenue mansion, and form in line, with faultless uniforms, natty white belts and sash, and march up the hill to the chapel service. It is something of a walk, as some of the puffing visitors observed on reaching the summit terrace. Silently and in perfect time and order the cadets change formation and file into the chapel under rows of historical regimental banners, some of which had seen service nearly a century ago. Some of the old stands of colors were threadbare, but the field of blue always remained with its story of a nation's development, bearing constellations of from thirteen to forty-eight stars in their imperishable fields of blue.

The cadet choir marches down the aisle singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and the ringing voices of those 500 cadets once heard can never be forgotten. The finale, the Dresden hymn, as sung by the West Point choir is an event that musicians from all parts of the world come to hear. The services throughout were impressive and conducted with military precision.

ONLY SIXTEEN, GIRL VERY SICK

Tells How She Was Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

New Orleans, La.—"I take pleasure in writing these lines to express my gratitude to you. I am only 16 years old and work in a tobacco factory. I have been a very sick girl but I have improved wonderfully since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am now looking fine and feeling a thousand times better."—Miss AMELIA JAQUILLARD, 3961 Tchoupitoulas St., New Orleans, La.

St. Clair, Pa.—"My mother was alarmed because I was troubled with suppression and had pains in my back and side, and severe headaches. I had pimples on my face, my complexion was sallow, my sleep was disturbed, I had nervous spells, was very tired and had no ambition. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has worked like a charm in my case and has regulated me. I worked in a mill among hundreds of girls and have recommended your medicine to many of them."—Miss ESTELLA MAGUIRE, 110 Thwing St., St. Clair, Pa.

There is nothing that teaches more than experience. Therefore, such letters from girls who have suffered and were restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be a lesson to others. The same remedy is within reach of all.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

THERMOMETERS.

Difference In Principle Between the Fahrenheit and Centigrade.

The difference in the numbering of the Fahrenheit and the centigrade thermometers is a difference in principle, that between circular measure and the neat simplicity of the decimal system.

When Fahrenheit had found that his thermometer was capable of giving him a means of measuring heat the necessity for a scale presented itself. He was able to establish two constants of temperature—that at which a mixture of salt and snow melts at one end of the scale, that at which water boils at sea level establishes the other. Evidently with some reference to the fact that in circular measure the maximum distance possible to measure from one point to another is 180 degrees, he scaled 180 equal parts between these two limits. He scaled the thermometer below his freezing point to its reading on a winter day colder than the oldest inhabitant could remember to have experienced, and here he established his zero. It chanced to be 32 degrees below his freezing point.

The centigrade, on the other hand, establishes its zero at freezing point and 100 degrees at the boiling point. These constants are selected because they may be so conveniently reproduced at any time and therefore obviate the necessity of maintaining an officially scaled standard, as must be the case with measures of length and capacity.—New York Sun.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING.

Different Methods on Which Arc and Incandescent Lamps Work.

The arc light and the incandescent light work on totally different principles. It was noted many years ago that when an electric circuit was broken the current jumped across a slight gap, producing a brilliant flame. The shape of this flame was roughly an arc from one conductor to the other. Thus the word "arc" was adopted. All arc lamps burn in the air and not in vacuum. The light is produced by the current leaping across a small air gap between the two electrodes, or carbon pencils, and heating the tips of the carbons white hot. Floating particles of white hot carbon also add to the brilliancy. A mechanism is necessary to "feed" in the carbons as fast as they burn away, or otherwise the gap would increase until the current could not jump across and the light would go out.

The incandescent lamp, common in most homes and office buildings, is obtained from a piece of white hot wire, heated by the passage of an electric current. The wire must be inclosed in a glass bulb from which the air has been exhausted, otherwise it would quickly be burned up and consumed. The wire filament is now made of tungsten, which resists the flow of electricity with so much vigor that the current, in working to get by the obstruction, heats the wire to incandescence, hence the name.—New York World.

To insure a perfectly ventilated house, is to open the windows in each room in the house, both top and bottom, for a suitable period every morning, and remember that it is easier to heat a house that is not full of vitiated air.

MODISH MILLINERY.

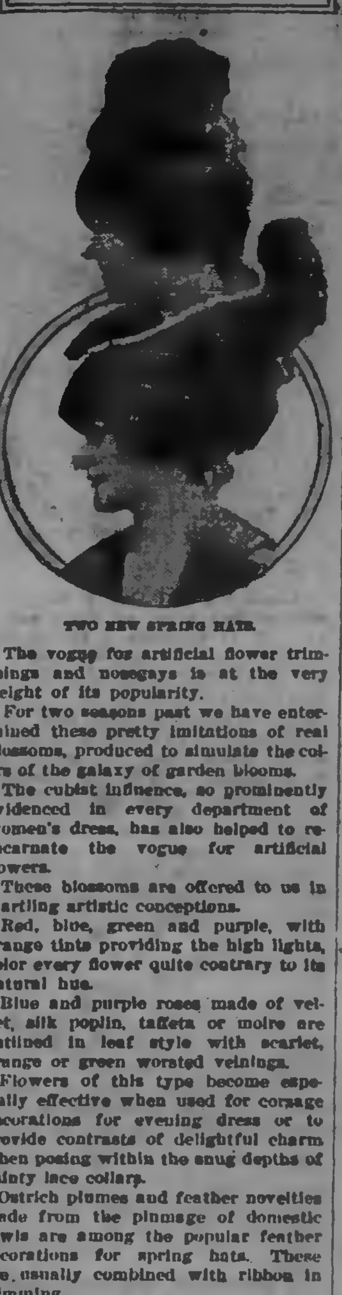
Hats and Feathers Divide Favor as Trimmings.



TWO NEW SPRING HATS.

The vogue for artificial flower trimmings and nosegays is at the very height of its popularity.

For two seasons past we have entertained these pretty imitations of real blossoms, produced to simulate the colors of the galaxy of garden blooms.

The cubist influence, so prominently evidenced in every department of women's dress, has also helped to reincarnate the vogue for artificial flowers.

These blossoms are offered to us in startling artistic conceptions.

Red, blue, green and purple, with orange tints providing the high lights, color every flower quite contrary to its natural hue.

Blue and purple roses made of velvet, silk poplin, taffeta or moire are outlined in leaf style with scarlet, orange or green worsted veinings.

Flowers of this type become especially effective when used for corsage decorations for evening dress or to provide contrasts of delightful charm when posing within the snug depths of dainty lace collars.

Ostrich plumes and feather novelties made from the plumage of domestic fowls are among the popular feather decorations for spring hats. These are usually combined with ribbon in trimming.

Illustrated here are two stylish new models. The upper one is of silk very much turned up at the left and adorned with a couple of short ostrich feathers. The other hat is of fine straw with moire ribbon and an ostrich plume that is wired to stand erect.

SCALLOPED SETS.

Sheets and Pillowcases For Beds Are Embroidered Simply.

While making sham sheets first fold in the hem which should be about four and one-half inches in width. The hem should be put in with hand sewing and the stitches should be very small and even.

Stamp the scallops about one-half inch from the edge so as to leave plenty of space for the embroidery. Before beginning the work sew a strip of goods along the edge so that the work can be done in an embroidery hoop. The scallops are worked through the two thicknesses of the material over a slight padding.

Pillowcases to match the sheet should be made and the hem in these should be put in before stamping the scallops. Pillowslips, made after the French method, open at both ends, are really worth the extra work, for the scalloped ends not only add to the beauty of the case but make it easier to adjust the pillow.

Garden Specializing.

It is a good plan, so a successful amateur gardener has said, to try one new annual every year. Perhaps you may not care for the plant again. Perhaps it may not be just what you expected, but if you really do find one or more that seem to thrive particularly well in some spot, stick to those and try them year after year.

Try to improve on them, so that you will have some specialty which, after awhile, you will consider as your own flower. We can never give up all the old favorites, nor make up our minds to grow only roses or sweet peas or pansies, but by making a specialty of roses or pansies or sweet peas and studying their needs we shall develop at least one really valuable flower among the mass of blooms in our gardens.

Friezes Out of Style.

It is much better to have a picture molding close up to the ceiling unless the walls of a room are more than eight and a half or nine feet high. If above that drop the ceiling paper down a foot or so to the picture rail. The old time deep border or frieze is seldom seen now, and it is a great improvement doing the walls this newer way. Satin striped paper in two tones of the same color is very good, especially for bedrooms. Pink is apt to fade as well as very light blue.

To Remove Tin Lids.

The following is a sure method of removing lids from small jars and round tin boxes. Place the article on the floor on its edge; then put your foot on it and roll it backward and forward. This never fails to remove the most obstinate lid.

The Test of Greatness.

There is no man who has ever sacrificed his selfish desire for the sake of some other person who has never felt a pleasure in undergoing some loss or trouble because it pleased somebody else. It is a truth that man is not a detached being, that he has a universal aspect, and when he recognizes this he becomes great.—From "Sadhana—The Realization of Life," by Rabindranath Tagore.

Cards and the Calendar.

Playing cards in their makeup are akin to the calendar. The two colors are red and black, which answer to the equinoxes. The suits are four, answering to the four seasons. The twelve court cards answer to the twelve months; the fifty-two cards answer to the number of weeks in the year; the thirteen cards in each suit represent the number of weeks in a lunar quarter.

SPARE TIME USED TO ADVANTAGE IN GARDENS

Practical Pointers for Amateur Gardeners—What to do and When to do it

To grow the best and largest sweet peas and to enjoy them for an extended season it is necessary that considerable care be taken in preparing the soil that the planting be done at an early season. Deep mellow soil, early planting and heavy mulching suit them admirably. Sow the seed as soon as the ground is fit to work in the spring.

Though a certain amount of moisture is necessary to enable the seeds to germinate too much is pretty sure to cause them to rot. The sweet pea will, if given an opportunity, send its roots down two feet or more in search of food and cool, moist (not wet) soil. If rooted to this depth they are not nearly so likely to suffer from drought and excessive heat as when they are only shallow rooted. For this good reason deep spading of the soil where the peas are to be planted is absolutely necessary.

Prepare Soil to Good Depth.

Dig trench at least two feet deep. In replacing a portion of the soil mix a good quantity of well rotted manure thoroughly throughout it. The manure should be well broken up. Break up all lumps to remove those that will not readily crumble. When replacing the earth firm it by trampling with the feet. Fill to within five or six inches of the surface before planting the seed. Cover the seed to the depth of a couple of inches and firm the soil about the seeds. When the plants appear above the surface and have reached a height of two or three inches, fine soil should be worked about them until the trench is filled almost to the level of the surrounding soil. This will ensure deep rooting while the slight depression left will catch the water.

Development Necessary.

If sweet peas are planted in a properly prepared trench sufficiently early that they will have a long season of cool weather after planting top growth will be retarded and the roots will be correspondingly strengthened and lengthened. To have sweet peas well and deeply rooted ensures luxuriant growth large flowers and a long season of bloom.

Sweet peas may be planted in single lines or in broad rows, according to the fancy. The broad thickly sown row ensures a thick growth and a large quantity of bloom. To obtain the best and largest bloom, however, it is necessary that each plant should have ample room to develop.

Three to six inches of space between the plants is none too much if quality bloom is the object. Some go so far as to allow 8 to 12 inches for each plant, but this is rather extreme, except where the object is to produce exhibition flowers.

How to Conserve Moisture.

Too much watering is sometimes the cause of failure in sweet pea culture. If the surface of the soil is kept loose at all times so that it will be as a dry dust, the moisture will be retained in the soil and plants will thrive with much less watering.

If before planting a sprinkling of equal parts of slacked lime and bone dust (½ lb. of each to square yard) is mixed through the upper six inches of soil, most satisfactory results will likely follow.

Cultivation must be continued right through the season. Should the vines show signs of exhaustion during the later season they may be stimulated by the application of manure water or nitrate of soda. These may be applied where they will do the most good by boring a shallow furrow on each side of the row at a distance of about six inches from the vines. Into this the liquid manure or nitrate of soda may be put. One ounce of the soda may be dissolved in a pail of water. Apply once a fortnight.

Keep Bloom Picked.

Bloom must be removed before it has reached the stage where the seed pods began to form. If this is not attended to the plants will soon leave the bloom.

Pruning the vines has been done with good results by a Peterboro gentleman. When the bloom becomes scarce and the flower stems short, he cuts the vines down to within a foot or two of the ground. The vines send out new growth and the blooming season is considerably lengthened.

Sweet peas should be grown in the open to get the best results. If against the wall or fence intense heat and lack of air are liable to injure them. If planted well out from any obstruction they will do best. While they may be most naturally and gracefully trained to brush supports, coarse, soft string or poultry wire may be used. The latter, however, draws the heat and is liable to scorch the tender tendrils and injure the vines.

It has been found a good plan to plant dwarf nasturtiums on the sunny side of the rows, a few inches away from the vines. The nasturtiums, with their large leaves and close growth, will shade the roots of the sweet peas and keep them cool and moist. The piling of lawn clippings about the roots of sweet peas will also keep them cool and moist.

Asters From Seed.

Asters may be grown by the hundreds at less outlay than will be necessary to secure a few dozen plants from the florist. A sunny, well prepared spot in the garden, a couple of square yards in extent, will be sufficient. The soil should be rich and finely prepared by spading and raking free of all lumps and foreign matter such as sticks, stones, etc. Plant the seed in shallow drills, which may be fairly close together, cover lightly and press the soil down hard over the seed. Water only when necessary. When the plants have produced three or four leaves they are ready to transplant to permanent beds.

PRONOUNCED DEAD BUT IS STILL LIVING

One-Time Canadian Thinks Dying Must be a Very Delightful Sensation.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., April 21.—Says John C. Wheeler, an aged resident of Grand Rapids, Mich., but who was born in Kent County, Ont.:

"I believe I have the most wonderful experience of any human being living," he said. I have practically died and lived again. Not long after graduation I was swimming with a number of companions when I suddenly went down. It was several minutes before my friends missed me, and when they finally located my body I was unconscious.

"A doctor was summoned from half a mile away, and when he arriver he pronounced me dead. I was taken to my boarding house and another doctor, who lived a mile away, was sent for. He too pronounced me dead.

"While the fact that I regained consciousness after so many hours is not so remarkable, it is remarkable that, while apparently dead, I was never more fully alive in my life. But I was apart distinct from my body. I could tell the persons about me and everything that happened while I was unable to move. During those hours I discovered many things. Much was revealed to me that would sound preposterous to relate. But the one thing I do remember is the queer sensation of dying.

Views Own Body from Above.

"Dying is delightful; of that I am sure. After losing consciousness my body, I am told, sank to the bottom of the lake, but the other self seemed to float away from my body and soar above the water. I looked down and could see my body. I saw the rescuers find it and place it on the bank. I then seemed to return to the fleshy prison and again became a part of it, but was incapable of giving it volition.

"I exerted all my strength, but I could cause no movement of the muscles. Finally I seemed to secure a firmer grasp on things, and almost instantly regained consciousness. In the fleeting moment between the conscious and the unconscious state the thought of returning to life was repugnant. It seemed like a return to prison after a tour of the outside.

"Prior to that experience I had been an agnostic, disbelieving in a hereafter or a spiritual state of existence; but now my whole point of view of life is changed. I have never since doubted the spiritual existence. A man is double, and the body is not a part of him. I don't want to be classed as a spiritualist; in fact, I don't care to be labelled at all, although theosophy comes nearest to my belief. I believe in reincarnation and that death simply turns a man inside out.

"I teach the divinity of every human being. Had God endowed some with virtues and created others with a tendency toward crime, it would have been an injustice. Each man is endowed the same as every other, and the responsibility of making the most of life is thrown on the individual."

It was this philosophy that Mr. Wheeler set out to teach in his lecturing tour. His ideas on eugenics, social problems and religion were not always taken kindly, and in thirty small towns he encountered mob violence. On one occasion he was attacked with clubs and shot at.

In 1903 he came to Grand Rapids in failing health. With money contributed by friends a home was built for the kindly old philosopher in Ivanrest and there he has lived ever since. Every day, winter or summer, he has walked the eight miles to Grand Rapids, spent several hours reading in the Ryerson public library, and walked home again. His scholarly appearance is accentuated by a high, bold forehead, while a snowy beard and white fringe of hair give him a very venerable appearance. He is slight of build, wiry and quick of motion, and he believes he will reach the century mark.

HAVE NOBLE TRADITIONS

Englishmen Have Responsibilities in Coming to This Country

Lord Bishop of Kingston Preaches at the St. George's Day Service

The St. George's Day service held by St. George's Society in St. John's Church last evening was well attended, the congregation including representatives from the Sons of England, St. George's Society, and the City Council. Rev. Jas. Price had charge of the service. Rev. Canon Allen, of Millbrook, and Rev. Mr. Greaves, of Bobcaygeon, read the lessons, and the special pracher was the Lord Bishop of Kingston.

Choristers from St. George's Church joined the St. John's choir for the occasion.

In a sermon that could not fail but inspire those to whom he particularly had in mind, the Lord Bishop pictured the glorious and noble traditions which Englishmen brought with them in coming from the old country to the new land—the traditions of Nelson and of Henry Lawrence, who rather than have his achievements recorded on the tombstone that would mark his grave, asked that these simple words be inscribed "Here lies one who tried to do his duty."

"The noblest traditions the world has ever seen and known belong some fo them to our race," said the preacher. "If the captain of the steamer be British, he will either be the last man to leave the ship or he will go down. It's the power of a noble tradition and we thank God that it is."

The text was from the second epistle of St. Paul to the Thessalonians, 15 the verse: Therefore brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught.

The Trumpet Call.

Paul knew of the many temptations and inducements before the Christians to go back—to fall away from the high standard. It was one of the persistent anxieties of Paul's work, so he sent out his magnificent trumpet call. He bade them to show two great qualities—steadfastness and power to hold to the tradition.s They were to understand that in connection with the reception of Jesus Christ, there was a pledge to live up to the standard of Christ's gospel, even though it called for the sacrificing of their lives. The atmosphere was that of the cross. The Saviour died not only to save mankind but to show that death is preferable to dishonor. The tradition was being formed that the Christians must never betray Christ.

"We have a great lesson today and thank God that we come of a race that has noble traditions," said the preacher.

"We know that we have our failings but having inherited these traditions we must know what responsibilities we have. We must give loyalty to our noble traditions and that steadfastness that is characteristic of the English people.

Tradition and Religion.

"And we bring with us another great tradition—that we are not ashamed to base our national life upon religion. We bring that as a contribution to this new land. The basis of all national life is that religious conviction. Some come here to improve their fortunes which is very laudible but we must not shut our eyes to the debt which we owe to the country to which we come. We owe a great debt.

Taking, freedom, honor and loyalty as three great basic ideas of religion, the preacher pointed out how Englishmen could contribute of these. They should fully see their responsibility.

Come Not as Aliens.

Let us wipe out the reproach that we have come here as aliens and do not fit in with the life of the country—that we are too fond and there is some truth in this of comparing things in the old land with things in the new, to the disadvantage of the new, for after all we come here for our own advantage.

"No one will blame us if some of us cannot forget the old land—of our thoughts sometimes go back to the old spots with which the old land is covered. And don't you think of something in the centre, the dear old village church? Let us try to bring that quality with us from the old land. May you realize more and more what your responsibilities are; may you realize this call of God; may you stand fast and hold to the traditions you have been taught in England because they are the finest in the land."

The hymn after the sermon and benediction was the National Anthem, which was enthusiastically sung.

OLD BOOKS OWNED BY TORONTO MAN

Two old books are among the heirlooms of the Gooch family, and are now in the possession of F. H. Gooch, 120 Crescent Road, Toronto. The volumes are a Book of Common Prayer, bearing the date 1629, and a Bible of the date 1653. The first book is much worn and apparently has never been rebound. The cover, which was of some dark leather is much worn. On the fly leaf can be traced in faint letters the name Gooch. The second old book is a Bible of the date 1653, and the place of publication marked as London. This volume is about the size of an ordinary abridged dictionary and has been rebound. The paper of both these books is yellow with age and the printing is in old characters, which are hard to decipher.

Mr. Gooch is also the possessor of a large Book of Common Prayer of the date 1732, as well as many other books of the 18th century. In addition there is an old-fashioned snuff box, engraved with the name Robert Gooch, Norwich, and dated 1756. This box was made of charred wood, preserved from the great fire of London in 1666, in the reign of Charles II. Two other heirlooms consist of old-fashioned cut wine-glasses engraved with the thistle, rose and shamrock, and were said to be identical with those used at the wedding of the Princess Charlotte, with the exception that those of the princess bore the crown as well. These have been in the family since 1832.

Mr. Gooch has also a file of old Toronto, then York, newspapers, published in 1832 and 1833. These include the "Courier of Upper Can- include the "Courier of Upper Canada," the "Patriot and Farmers' Monitor," the "Colonial Advocate," and also some copies of the following Hamilton papers: "The Western Mercury, 1832," and the Hamilton Free Press."

LABRADOR TO BE BOOMED BY DR. GRENFELL

LONDON, April 21.—A vigorous campaign for the development of Labrador will be started soon by Dr. Wilfred Grenfell, the missionary explorer, who sailed on the Mauretania yesterday for a lecture tour in America. He said:

"I am bent on developing my adopted country, the Norway of the American continent. The most important commercial task before me is to start reindeer farms to meet the demand for reindeer meat in Canada. I hope to surpass the meat suplies of Alaska.

"The Canadian Government is building two large harbors on the east coast, whence the frozen reindeer meat will be brought to this country as well.

"I am also going to work for the preservation of the valuable fur-bearing animals; martens, minks, foxes and seals have been hunted almost to extinction.

"For a pleasure trip the southern part of Labrador offers great attractions."

TAMPICO IS A BED OF MALARIA

Town is Near Sea Level and Full of Germs

Tampico, Mexico, is a most unattractive place. Lying just within the tropics, it has all the bad qualities of both zones and the good of neither. It stands on a flat, alluvial plain, scarcely above tide level, with a climate resembling the hot steam room of a Turkish bath plus fifty-seven varieties of malaria.

The Panuco and Tamesi rivers flow past the town to the Fulf, and south of the town is the northern end of the long littoral lagoon, which they call the Lake of Tamiahua. Periodically the rivers flood the town, and you go about the street in boats. There is a seaside resort known as La Barra, six miles away, at the mouth of the Panuco. The same "northers" which sweep the roadstead of Colon frequently visit Tampico and make the weather more endurable, but they play the mischief with the shipping.

Tampico has about 17,000 population, and is the next gulf port after Vera Crux in importance. It is the chief commercial outlet of Tamaulipas, the big northeastern state of the Mexican Republic, and lies at the extreme southern end of that state's coast, as Matamoras lies at the extreme north. Tamaulipas is a state of vast but only slightly developed wealth in agriculture and minerals. It is a great oil producing region, and Tampico is the oil headquarters and port, with fragrant and slightly reminders of Hunter's Point and Constable Hook. There is much commerce in oil and other commodities, and the customs receipts are large.

Vera Cruz.

Vera Crux is the chief point of Mexico, and is one of the oldest cities founded by the Spaniards, dating from the days of Cortes. It has often before this been a storm centre. Privateers pillaged it more than once in the old days, and on that account the famous castle of San Juan de Ulloa was erected for its defence. The French seized it in 1838, and on March 29, 1847, General Scott (U.S.A.) landed there and made the place on the basis of his march to the City of Mexico. The French took it again in 1861 in Louis Napoleon's attempted conquest of Mexico under the mask of the ill fated Maximilian.

Like Tampico, the city lies on a level plan, only two or three feet above tidewater, and is hot and unhealthful, though sanitary conditions have been greatly improved in late years. Yellow fever, once a perennial scourge, has vanished.

The railroads connect the place with the City of Mexico, 263 miles away, and there are several other coast terminals. Despite the natural disadvantages of the site, Vera Crus is an exceedingly interesting city. It contains many fine buildings and is rich in historic lore. The great parochial church is the most picturesque edifice in the city.

SPRING FISHING

Fish Are Always Hungry in Algonquin Park

According to advertisements all fishing resorts are alike, they are the best ever, but if fishing is better anywhere than it is in Algonquin Park, we do not know where it is. There is a great variety of fish in these waters and they are always hungry. The one place where you can afford to fish is where the fish are numerous, big and delicious in flavor, and that point is Algonquin Provincial (Ontario) Park, so the fishermen say. Speckled trout may be caught after May 1st and the open season for salmon trout is from December 1st to October 31st the following year. Drop a line to Manager, Highland Inn, Algonquin Park Station, Ont., for booklet and all particulars, or get in touch with Grand Trunk Agents. As this territory is a popular one for Spring Fishing, write early to secure accommodation.

Mr. Culverwell has been interested in choirs all his life, having as a boy sung in a vested choir in Toronto. Mr. Culverwell is an Anglican.

UNITED STATES FORCES MAY TAKE ACTION WITHIN NEXT FEW HOURS

Congress Gives Almost Unanimous Support to President Wilson.

PUNISH HUERTA

Custom Houses Will Be Seized Without Delay.

WASHINGTON, April 21. — In thirty-six hours, possibly less, the United States Government will have taken possession of the Mexican custom houses at Tampico and Vera Cruz.

Detailed plans for landing of marines at these two important coast towns were completed at a conference at the White House between President Wilson, Secretaries Bryan, Garrison and Daniels, Major-General Wood and Rear Admirals Fiske and Blue and John Lind.

"No order to the army and navy will be issued to-night," was the announcement made after the conference, action temporarily being referred until Congress acts on the joint resolution approving the President's purpose of using the armed forces of the United States to enforce its demands against Huerta, growing out of the arrest at Tampico of American bluejackets.

The resolution passed the House last night by a vote of 337 to 37, after a spirited debate. For several hours it was considered by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, with prospects of an all-night session of the Senate or a recess until early to-day.

The House adjourned until to-day, and President Wilson, worn out by the day's work, retired after hearing that the House had adopted the resolution.

Persons who were in touch with the President said the steps which would be taken by the United States "short of war" were of a nature which would not require formal notification to the powers in the same sense that a declaration of blockade or other preliminaries to war would. Foreign Governments will be kept informed of developments, however.

The debate in the House brought out the fact that while the navy probably would block Mexico off from commerce with the United States, it would not interfere with the passage to and fro of foreign vessels, though cargoes discharged on the shore might be held at the customs houses if they were occupied by American forces.

The joint resolution passed by the House, and which was before the Senate at a late hour last night, read as follows:

"A joint resolution justifying the employment of the armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands against Victoriano Huerta. Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, in Congress assembled, that the President of the United States is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce the demands upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives."

A bill to appropriate $50,000,000 to be expended by the President was introduced by Senator Chamberlain, chairman of the military affairs committee, to which the bill was referred.

The Chamberlain bill provides:

"That the President of the United States be and he is hereby authorised to expend in his discretion for the national defence and for each and every purpose connected therewith the sum of fifty million dollars out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum shall remain available until expended."

This is identical with the bill passed before the war with Spain.

Justification Strong.

LONDON, April 21.—The Times, in an editorial on the Mexican crisis, says this morning:

"The crisis has come in a form which, as sincere friends of the American people, we could well have wished different. Their justification for forcible interference in Mexican affairs is far stronger than the particular pretext upon which the President decided to abandon his policy of watchful waiting.

What About Japan?

BERLIN, April 21.—The German press as a rule is remarkably sparing in comment on the Mexican situation.

The Taegliche Rundschau asks:

"What will Japan, the natural enemy of the United States, do, and what will the other powers do?"

The Boersen Courier sees in Gen. Huerta's refusal to salute "The first admission that he does not feel sure of his position and is now playing his last trump earlier than was expected—namely, the policy of rallying all elements in Mexico against the foreign aggression."

Shortest Charge to Jury.

If brevity is the soul of wit, Judge Taylor, K. C., has not many rivals among his judicial brethren. Summing up a case which lasted several hours, says the Liverpool Post, he said no more than this: "Gentlemen, you have heard both sides. It is for you to say which you believe." Even this does not represent Judge Taylor's best effort in the way of saving his breath. A few years ago he delivered himself of what is supposed to be the shortest summing up on record. He turned to the jury, raised his eyebrows inquiringly, and remarked: "Well, gentlemen?" The art of brevity could no further go.

J. W. MOYES' OVERTURES TO THE MUNICIPALITIES TURNED DOWN

Special Meeting of Local Bodies Concerned In Affairs of West Shore Railway is Called to Consider Proposal From Promoter, But Representatives Insist That the Probe Be Continued.

KINCARDINE, April 21—John W. Moyes, promoter of the West Shore Railway, which is now under the probe of the Ontario Railway Board, has made an offer of settlement to the municipalities concerned. This offer was considered at a meeting of representatives of the municipalities yesterday and was rejected, the representatives agreeing unanimously to press the inquiry and take chances on the final outcome.

The offer from Mr. Moyes is to return to the municipalities $178,000 worth of unguaranteed bonds secured and $2,000 in cash, plus the railroad as it stands at present. In the latter is included the right-of-way, the steel and ties laid, the value of grading and other work done, and the equipment at present on the road. There was nothing to indicate what was wanted in exchange, but it is understood that had the proposition been accepted the inquiry, so far as the municipalities are concerned, would have been dropped.

The proposition, which was in writing, had been given to Mr. Wm. Proudfoot, K.C., M.P.P., and was read by him at the meeting, which was held in Kintail, the central point for all the representatives in the heart of the district affected by the railroad.

After the offer was considered the following resolution, moved by James Brown, of Huron, and seconded by Charles Stewart, of Ashfield, was carried unanimously: "That the offer of settlement now made by Mr. Moyes be not accepted, and that the solicitors be instructed to press the inquiry to a conclusion as speedily as possible."

The investigation resumes before the Ontario Railway Board to-day.

RAILROAD MAN HAD TO LAY OFF

Until He Took GIN PILLS

Buffalo, N. Y.

"I have been a Pullman conductor on the C. P. R. and Michigan Central for the last three years.

About four years ago, I was laid up with intense pain in the groin, a very sore back, and suffered most severely when I tried to urinate.

I treated with my family physician for two months for Gravel in The Bladder but did not receive any benefit. About that time, I met another railroad man who had been similarly affected and who had been cured by GIN PILLS, after having been given up by a prominent physicians who treated him for Diabetes. He is now running on the road and is perfectly cured. He strongly advised me to try GIN PILLS which I did—with the results that the pains left me entirely."

WILL ANNULLED

Abraham Lincoln Pieaud Was Insane Says Judge

MONTREAL, April 21.—The will of Abraham Lincoln Pacaud, who died at Verdun Asylum on Jan. 29 last worth $200, has been annulled by Justice Charbonneau on the ground of insanity.

Pacaud, who was a well-known insurance broker in the city, seemed to be under the illusion that he was a millionaire and left annuities totaling about $50,000 a year to various parties, including young ladies the testator had known many years ago in Chicago. After the deaths of the parties named the estate was to go to McGill University to found a department for the cure of malignant diseases such as cancer, to be known as the "Abraham Lincoln Pacaud Foundation."

They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a most terrible pain at the base of my skull. This pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to Inflammation of the Brain, but I took "Fruit-a-tives" steadily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking "Fruit-a-tives" and I verily believe they saved me from a disastrous illness".

BUDGET

The Vote Expected in House on Thursday

OTTAWA, April 21. — The House devoted another day to the discussion on the budget, and the debate will probably continue until Thursday. As yet no amendment has been offered to the formal motion by the Finance Minister that the House go into committee on ways and means, but it is expected that a resolution will be offered calling for free food, free wheat and free agricultural implements.

Yesterday's debate was carried on by Messrs. Turgeon (Gloucester), Smith (N. Ontario), Warnock (McLeod), Welchel (N. Waterloo), Neely (Humboldt), and Clarke (N. Wellington).

The debate was resumed by Mr. Turgeon (Lib., Gloucester, N.B.) He was followed by William Smith (Con., N. Ontario), who said that the Liberals from 1880 to 1896 had threatened the tariff with destruction, and many people had been deterred from investing in manufacturing enterprises on that account. Once in power, however, the Liberals had maintained the tariff, which they found in force, and the country had greatly prospered.

Mr. Warnock (Lib., McLeod) said reciprocity in wheat between Saskatchewan and Alberta would mean nothing at all, as both provinces were seeking an export market. He said the opposition to free wheat appealed to prejudice by saying that the demand came from American settlers. These so-called "American settlers" were in the main repatriated Canadians, who had been driven out of Canada by the fiscal policy of the former Conservative Government.

Mr. Welchel (Con., Waterloo) declared himself as favoring moderate protection as Canada's fiscal policy.

Dr. Neely (Humboldt) said if a referendum was taken in the prairie provinces 95 per cent. of the people would vote for free wheat.

GOOD PROGRESS ON WESTERN CANADA'S LATEST RAILWAY

Progress on the construction of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway which is to link up Vancouver and the Grand Trunk Pacific Main Line is rapid. Work is being pushed forward as quickly as circumstances will allow and grading and bridge building are finding employment for a large force of men.

Part of the first consignment of rolling stock ordered a short time ago by the Pacific Great Eastern Railway has arrived at the Coast. Fifty box cars and one hundred flat cars were purchased by the Company. Ten of the former and thirty of the latter are due to arrive early in June, as well as a second consignment of freight cars.

The engineers who are conducting a reconnaisance of the proposed route north of Prince George to the Peace River Country are still in the field, but are understood to have nearly completed their preliminary observations. On their return to Prince George parties of locating engineers will start out to map the course of the proposed extension.

GEN COTTON DIES

Ex-Inspector General of Militia Passes Away at Almonte

ALMONTE, Ont., April 21.—Maj.-Gen. W. H. Cotton, former inspector-general of the Canadian Militia, died suddenly at the residence of his son-in-law, Alex. Rosamond, here last night at 11 o'clock.

The late brigadier was well known throughout Canada and especially in Ontario, having commanded No 2 military district with headquarters at Toronto, before being appointed inspector-general of the militia in succession to Gen. Sir William Otter. He was the son of the late Henry Cotton, of Montreal, and was born in that city on Jan. 7, 1848. He was educated at Quebec High School and received his commission as a second lieutenant in the Quebec Garrison Artillery in 1866.

In 1882 he was promoted commandant of the Royal Canadian Artillery, with rank of lieutenant-colonel, and 18 years later was made full colonel. In 1907 he was appointed brigadier-general. His staff service was long and varied, he having served as A. A. G. for artillery and quartermaster-general at Ottawa.

His widow, four sons and three daughters survive.

THE MARKET

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, April 20.—It was only for a brief interval today that the war outlook prevented a fresh collapse of the corn market. Holders, especially, seized the opportunity to press the sale of huge amounts, and to get in line with the sharp competition from Argentina. Prices closed weak at a loss of ⅝c to 1⅛c, compared with Saturday night. Wheat finished ⅛c off to ⅛c up, and oats a shade down to a like advance, but provisions were demoralized almost as much as corn, with declines varying from 20c to 67½c to 70c.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, April 20.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, west end market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending April 18, were 1250 cattle, 250 sheep and lambs, 3550 hogs and 1750 calves. The supply on the market this morning for sale amounted to 1100 cattle, 150 sheep and lambs, 2300 hogs and 500 calves.

A feature of the trade today was the weaker feeling in the market for cattle, and prices declined 25 cents per 100 lbs., which was attributed to the fact that offerings were much larger than expected by the trade.

There was no change in the market for small meats, prices being steady. The supply of sheep and lambs was small with a fair demand. Spring lambs sold at from $3 to $6 each, and a few extra choice ones brought as high as $8 to $10. The trade in calves was active, and offerings were ample to fill all requirements. The tone of the market for hogs was weaker.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $6.50 to $7.25; do., medium, $5.50 to $6.25; do., common, $5 to $5.50; canners, $3.75 to $4; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $4.75 to $7; do., medium, $5.75 to $6.50; do., bulls, $5 to $7.25; milkers, choice, each, $80 to $90; do., common and medium, each, $70 to $75; springers, $50 to $60; sheep, ewes, $7 to $7.50; bucks and culls, $6 to $6.50; lambs, $8.50 to $9; hogs, off cars, $9.50 to $9.75; calves, $3 to $15.

PETES STILL FOLLOWED BY COLD WEATHER JINX

BOB STERLING IS MISSING

Youngstown, April 21.—Cold and unsettled weather still continues to be the lot of Curley Blount and his Canuck band, but yesterday afternoon, despite the gloom, the squad was put through a full game, with the following line-ups:

Schettler, p., Kelly, c., O'Hearne, 1b., Miller, 2b., Schrage, 3b., Fox, ss., McClure, cf., Blount, lf., Chapdelaine, rf., Cresswell, p., Terrill, p.

Smith, p., Ryberg, c., Flanagan, 1b., King, 2b., Price, ss., Byrne, 3b., Nau, cf., Dawson, lf., Gaffney, rf.

Schettler, Cresswell and Terrill alternated on the slab for three innings, but they did not extend themselves. The catching department appears to be satisfactory, with Miller looking very sweet. He handles the pitchers like the veteran that he is and his hitting is a big asset. He meets the ball fairly and the leather travels back at cannon ball speed. Ryberg, Kelly, Chapdelaine, Flanagan and O'Hearne are coming along fine and with fine weather should show further development. The new men look and behave like real ball players.

King, who comes from the Canton club of the Interstate League, performs in clever style at the middle cushion and likewise Byrne, Schrage, Price and Fox show promise. Kid Miller, who is only a youngster, is very fast, and one and all agree that he will take some beating for an infield job. Indications point to plenty of speed and hitting ability for the outfield.

As might be expected, several of the players are nursing sore arms as a result of the decidedly unfavorable weather, but no serious results are anticipated.

Burkelow, an infielder from Sharon, Pa., is the first to say farewell, as he lacks experience, and in the face of the opposition, did not show anything that would warrant his retention with the squad.

There are plenty of aspirants for a chance to show what they have as ten or twelve semi-pros. have appeared on the scene. It is unlikely, however, that Blount will make any selections. Sterling and Swartz are still among the missing.

BASEBALLITIS

Manager Frank Shaughnessy started weeding out some of his players yesterday, starting even before they had a chance to show anything at the Chatham camp.

Durkee, the twirler recommended by Frank Smejkal, Anderson, Ed. Renfer's infielder from Elgin, and Fried, another infielder, were all tendered the order of the "can" and will not disport themselves upon the sward at Chatham. Anderson has had typhoid and asked for his release, stating at the same time that he didn't think he'd make good in as fast company as the Canadian League provided.

At the same time word was received that Joe Lill had refused his transportation at St. Louis and would not report at Chatham. Lill twirled a game recently against the St. Louis Feds and he made a hit, letting down the outlaws with only three hits. The Senators now suspect that he will jump to the outlaws. If Lill can get some control, he will be a lot of use to the Feds; if not they will probably can him within a week.

However, the champs were not counting very much on Lill. He was figured a doubtful proposition, at the best. With Rogers, Kane, Hall, Peterson and Shocker, the Senators should have a pretty fair staff of twirlers trying out, and Bernlohr is also expected to show class.—Ottawa Journal.

PEGGY SWARTZ HAS REPORTED

WORKOUT OF TWELVE INNINGS BILLED FOR THIS AFTERNOON.

Youngstown, April 21.—The weather is more favorable to-day and the Peterboro team spent two hours in batting, fielding, and infield practice this morning. Martin, a young southpaw from Pittsburg, fed the ball to the batters. Swartz has just arrived, and reports feeling fine and anticipates having a good season. He worked out at home. A twelve-innings practice game is scheduled for this afternoon.

SIR JAMES IS AT HIS OFFICE

Premier Paid Surreptitious Visit to Buildings.

TORONTO, April 21.—Although the matter has been kept secret it is learned that Sir James Whitney has paid a visit to the Parliament Buildings. The Premier was escorted to his own office and he took a seat at his desk.

The visit was made during the morning while the Premier was out for a walk with a friend. When the two neared the Parliament Buildings Sir James refused to turn back and insisted that he be allowed to go to his office. In vain his friend remonstrated. Sir James assumed the dogged manner which has been one of his chief characteristics during his career.

PROMINENT BELLEVILLE MAN PASSES

S. W. Vermilyea Was Head of The Belleville Shoe Company

BELLEVILLE, April 21.—S. W. Vermilyea, a well-known and popular citizen of this city, died yesterday morning, aged 53 years. He had been for some time in the shoe trade with his father, A. W. Vermilyea, and was also the head of the Belleville Shoe Co., a wholesale establishment.

He was a member on the A. F. & A. M., and major and paymaster of the 15th regiment. A widow, one son and two daughters survive.

Poachers Must Beware.

BROCKVILLE, April 21.—Pothunters are finding inspectors along the St. Lawrence river active this spring. Game Warden Stewart of Brockville made a big seizure of guns, boats and decoys belonging to parties who were duck shooting near Mallory Town Landing.

UNEMPLOYED

Montreal Civic Officers Besieged by Workless Army

MONTREAL, April 21.—Mayor Martin's rush invitation to out-of-works to call at the City Hall yesterday morning was answered by fully 5,000 men of all classes. By 10 o'clock it needed about 100 policemen to handle the mob. The recently-elected mayor promised work for 2,000 on street cleaning and repairs, and there ensued a wild scramble for tickets entitling the bearer to work nine hours for the city for $2.25.

A detachment of three to four hundred disappointed ones rushed one of the entrances and forced its way to the door of the mayor's office. All that he promised them was that they might be employed later on in the spring.

Huron Goes Dry May 1.

GODERICH, Ont., April 21.—Uncertainty in regard to the license situation in Huron County has been cleared up by a message from Hon. Mr. Hanna to the effect that the Government will carry out its pledge. This means that licenses throughout the county will be cut off on May 1st next.

Some men couldn't generate personal magnetism with a high-power dynamo.

SWP

SWP means Sherwin-Williams Paint, Prepared. This is the best paint for you to use because it is made of pure materials—pure lead, pure zinc, pure Linseed Oil, and pure coloring pigments which are thoroughly mixed and ground in scientific proportions by powerful machinery.

It is better — It is better than the old fashioned hand-mixed paint because the materials are put together according to correct chemical formulae which have been tested out in a practical way. Its fine grinding makes it cover nearly 50% more surface than hand-mixed paint.

It is more economical — SWP is an economical paint because it will cover the greatest amount of surface, wear longest, and look best.—Ask us for color cards.

Child Is Killed.

ST. CATHARINES, April 21.—While Mrs. Chauncey Dittrick of this city was visiting Sunday with relatives in Buffalo, her three-year-old son Chauncey was killed by the accidental discharge of a revolver in the hands of his cousin, who was in the act of cleaning it.

The child climbed on the young man's knee, moving the trigger by accident, the bullet entering his temple, passing through his brain and coming out at the back of his head.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

PEARCE—LOVEGROVE.

A pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Pearce, 213 Merton street, on Wednesday, April 15, when their nephew, Mr. S. J. Pearce, of Peterboro, was married to Miss Hattie Lovegrove, second daughter of the late Wm. Lovegrove and of Mrs. Lovegrove, of Toronto.

The bride entered the parlor on the arm of her brother-in-law, Mr. Wm. Jacobs, to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march, played by Mr. J. Dickson. Her wedding dress was of white silk, heavily draped with shadow lace and pearls, and she wore a veil of tulle and orange blossoms and carried a spray of carnations. She was attended by her sisters, Mrs. W. Jacobs, as matron of honor, who wore a dress of white crepe de chene and corsage bouquet of sweet peas, and Miss Minnie Lovegrove, as bridesmaid, in a dress of white voile and corsage bouquet of roses. The groom was assisted by Mr. E. Jacobs. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Sims, of the Church of the Messiah.

Mr. and Mrs. Pearce will reside on Merton street.—Toronto Star.

BULGER-BONE.

On Wednesday afternoon a very pretty wedding took place at St. Michael's Church, when Mr. James Bulger, Jr., of town, and Miss Mercy Bone, Toronto, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony by Rev. Monsignor Murray. Mr. Vincent Bulger was best man and Miss Julia Bulger acted as bridesmaid. After the ceremonw the happy couple left on the 4.30 train for points east. They will reside in Cobourg.—Cobourg World.

C.M.B.A. AT HOME.

The "At Home" held last night in St. Alphonsus Lyceum under the auspices of the Sacred Heart Branch No. 509 of the C.M.B.A., furnished a most enjoyable evening. Cards, refreshments and dancing were enjoyed, the winners at the former being Mrs. (Dr.) Gallivan and Mr. S. Houlihan.

The rendition of music for the dancing was in the capable hands of Miss M. McDonald, and she performed most acceptably. Every number was enthusiastically encored.

The committee in charge were: Messrs. W. Grady, D. Gleason, H. McDonald, W. O'Keefe, J. Christopher, C. Brady and W. Boyle.

Mrs. John Allan gave an interesting address last night at the Young People's Guild in St. Paul's Church on Novels and Novel Reading.

Miss M. Loucks, of Campbellford, was in the city yesterday.

CASE ADJOURNED FOR EVIDENCE OF RESIDENTS

Magistrate Wants Evidence Other Than That of Constables.

SOME BAD BOYS.

"I am not going to take these cases just on the contable's evidence," said Magistrate Dumble at this morning's session of Police Court. The case which occasioned the remark from His Worship was that of six youths ranging from fourteen to seventeen years of age, charged with disorderly conduct on Romaine Street.

The case was enlarged until Friday in order that residents of the street on which the disorderly conduct was staged can be secured for witnesses. Mr. V. J. McElderry appeared for the youths, who pleaded not guilty.

Constable Reid gave evidence to the effect that he had received information regarding the affair and had found the youths in court acting disorderly and using bad language and kicking up a general racket which was strenuously objected to by the entire neighborhood.

Neck Shaving an Old Custom.

A study of the many necks to be seen on the walls of the National Portrait gallery enables one to state that the custom of neck shaving, although said to have been imported from America, was undoubtedly known and most likely popular in the days of Agincourt. The portrait of Henry V. shows quite clearly that his neck was shaved, and if the king did it, it must have been fashionable.—London Cor. New York Sun.

First Blow in Punitive Measures Against Huerta—Actual War May Be the Next Step—Garrison Hopes This Will Be the Last Clash.

Canadian Press Despatch

Washington, D.C., April 22.—A despatch from the Consul for Canada says boats from Admiral Bedgers' fleet landed reinforcements at four-thirty this morning, and ships shelled the southern part of the city. As boats approached they were met by a general snapping from the sharpshooters occupying the roofs of buildings.

Washington, D.C., April 22.—A despatch from the consul for Canada sent from Vera Cruz at nine o'clock, says he expected fighting to cease in one hour. The American force, aggregating three thousand was well into the heart of the city, and had command of the situation.

Washington, D.C., April 22.—The Mexican charge d'affaires Algara has been instructed by Huerta to request his passports from Secretary Bryan. The House of Representatives this morning without debate and almost unanimously concurred in the Senate resolution, justifying the President in the use of armed forces in Mexico. A report from the consul for Canada at Vera Cruz, received at ten o'clock, says the American forces commenced their advance to take the entire city of Vera Cruz at eight o'clock under the guns of the warships.

Washington, April 22.—The Consul for Canada reports one hundred and fifty Mexicans killed or wounded in yesterday's skirmish.

Washington, April 22.—A despatch from the American Consul at Vera Cruz says the American forces are in complete possession of the town and no non-combatants were injured in the fighting. Firing has ceased exoept for an occasional exchange between pickets.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22.—Four United States marines killed and twenty wounded.

These are the known casualties which accompanied the landing of United States forces from the fleet of Rear Admiral Frank F. Fletcher at Vera Cruz, Mexico, and the seizure of the customs house there last evening.

The casualties may be greater. Admiral Fletcher in his report of the landing stated that desultory firing from house tops and streets by Mexican federal soldiers was in progress.

Admiral Fletcher added that the guns of the naval transport Prairie were shelling the Mexicans out of their positions. It is presumed here that the Mexicans are retreating up the line of the railroad which runs to Mexico City.

Admiral Fletcher will not attempt to pursue the Mexicans. He will establish his base at Vera Cruz and hold it. The foregoing is the initial step and first cost in the act of reprisal against Gen. Victoriano Huerta, dictator of Mexico, for his indignities to the United States.

What the next step will be whether one of war or just a mere seizure of the customs house and the holding of the same, only events can determine.

In the light of the attack from the Huertaist forces the next step may be actual war, at least with one Mexican faction.

The news that Admiral Fletcher had landed a force of marines at Vera Cruz and seized the customs house there was received by Secretary of the Navy Daniels at six o'clock. The despatch stated:

"Tuesday, in face of an approaching norther, landed marines and sailors from the Utah, Florida and Prairie and seized customs house. Mexican forces did not oppose landing, but opened fire with rifle and artillery after our seizure of custom house. Prairie shelling Mexicans out of their positions. Desultory firing from housetops and streets. Hold custom house and section of city in vicinity of wharves and consulate. Casualties four dead and twenty wounded."

When this statement had been issued Secretaries Daniels and Garrison left the White House.

"I hope it is all over," said Mr. Garrison. "I think they fired to save their faces in retreat. I do not expect any more."

Startling was the news contained in the despatch even to those officials who were familiar with the administration's plans and were prepared to receive such tidings, and despite the continued circulation of reports throughout the military departments of the Government after two o'clock yesterday afternoon that something big had happened in Mexican waters.

Immediately the Congressmen took the news to the capitol, after which there were hurried conferences. With this information went the report that President Wilson did not care what Congress did with the resolution which was introduced in the House Monday which he desired should be adopted that night, and which was still being held up in the Senate by Republican members. Consternation seemed to strike those members responsible for the delay in the passage of the resolution in the Senate. It dawned upon them that they had not taken the President's counsellors at their word when they said that a big shipment of arms and ammunition was on its way to Huerta on the Hamburg-American steamer Iraquant, and that the seizure of the customs house at Vera Cruz before last night was absolutely necessary to prevent that shipment of arms and ammunition from being delivered.

President Wilson, they admitted, did know this, as well as the fact that the arms, while going to Huerta, from a German port and from a German firm, were American made.

CALL TO LABOR AT POLICE COURT

Two Men Are Selected to Work For Magistrate Dumble

"How many men of you want work?" was the bombshell Magistrate Dumble sprung on the spectators at this morning's session of Police Court.

In response to His Worship's question, about one-third of the spectators arose to their feet.

"Pick me out a couple of good men, Chief," was the next remark. Chief Thompson did as requested, and the Magistrate informed the men to come to his residence to-day at noon and he would give them work.

CHORUS GIRL LEFT HOT IRON ON HER BED

Blaze Followed Shortly Afterwards at the Grand Hotel

One of the fair dames on the pay roll of the Red Window Company known as Miss Edna Fletcher, left the city this morning minus some of her charming gowns and finery. This young lady was doing what the boys call "fussing up," before the performance last evening in Room No. 1 of the Grand Hotel. In executing this tedious work she used an electric iron and being a few minutes late rushed out of the room about 7.30, and left the iron on the bed. Miss Fletcher was in a hurry.

The average hotel bedding is so hard that you couldn't set fire to it with kerosene, but evidently the beds at the Grand are of a better grade, for in a few minutes the iron had started a blaze. Mr. C. Schmuck, the proprietor of the hotel, rang in an alarm and then set about extinguishing the blaze by means of water basins. When the firemen arrived Mr. Schmuck had the flames well under control and a few chemicals extinguished them entirely.

Word was sent over to the Grand Opera House, but undoubtedly the garments of the Russian dancer were not meant for George Street, so the fair one didn't put in an appearance. Several of the actors rushed to the hotel, but the fire was out. The damage amounts to about fifty dollars.

One city official this morning remarked that if the actress didn't lose any more than what the majority of them wore on the street yesterday, the loss wasn't very heavy.

COMMISSIONED ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO

Mr. Jas. Stewart, McDonnel Street, Has Century Old Document.

Mr. Jas. Stewart, 240 McDonnel Street, a resident of Peterboro for half a century, is in possession of an interesting document, being the commission issued to his father in the reign of George the Third and bearing the date of the 22nd of April, 1814, one hundred years ago to-day.

Mr. Stewart left the Army in 1833 on half pay and settled in Melrose, Scotland, where he remained until 1847 when he disposed of his property and moved to Edinburgh with his wife and family of four sons and two daughters. Two of the sons passed away when young, and his wife died in 1877. The remainder of the family are all living and are enjoying good health. After his death the only one who came to Canada was the son James now residing as stated at 240 McDonnel Street.

The regimental coat and a portrait taken from an old oil painting, also his commission in a frame can be seen in the window of A. M. Laidlaw, Fashion Craft, on Hunter St.

The commission reads as follows: In the Name and on Behalf of His Majesty George III.

MOTHER JUMPED INTO CREEK TO SAVE CHILD

Norwood Youngster Was Caught by the Swift Current

Special to The Review.

Norwood, April 22.—One of the younger children of Mr. I. Bond, a clerk in Squire's Grocery and Feed Store, while playing along the bank of the creek, had the misfortune of slipping and falling into the swift current. The mother hearing the screams of the child rushed from the house and reached the creek in time to see the child floating down the creek and under the bridge. Mrs. Bond immediately went to the rescue, running along the creek and after jumping two high fences, managed to reach a shallow spot in the creek, and then waited until the child floated down to her.

Medical aid was at once summoned and after a short time the youngster recovered. Due credit is given to Mrs. Bond for her great presence of mind, which resulted in saving her little child.

PLANS DECIDED

Toronto's Union Station is Finally Nearing Start

MONTREAL, April 22—The Grand Trunk and C. P. R. have now decided on the plans for the Toronto Union Station, which, it is estimated, will cost between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000.

They will be submitted to the Dominion Railway Board about May 15, and when accepted the work will proceed at once.

Information to this effect has been given out by the Grand Trunk Railway officials, who point out that the cost of the viaduct, which is a part of the big terminal scheme for Toronto, is not included in the figures quoted.

The viaduct, which will cost $3,000,000, will be a matter for later consideration.

Railway officials who have seen the plans for the station say, when finished, the depot will be the finest of its kind in the Dominion.

Magistrate Also Lectures Autoist Who Was Drunk

"Why doesn't he go and kill himself? He has already killed two or three with his reckless drunken driving of that car of his," remarked Magistrate Dumble this morning. Tom Darcy, of Lakefield, appeared in court looking rather seedy and was charged with being drunk.

He was fined $2 and was also given a lecture by Magistrate Dumble, who said that the recklessness of these drunken autoists are killing thousands of people.

"The accident of last summer, when his companion was killed, has had no effect on him," His Worship concluded.

NEGLIGENCE WILL NOT BE TOLERATED

CITY OFFICIALS ON THE ROADS WILL HAVE TO EXERCISE CARE

ALDERMEN FEEL IT IS ADVISABLE TO SUPPORT THE CITY ENGINEER

Judging from the expressions of opinion on the part of the Aldermen, when they met in committee last night, there will be trouble coming to the city officials when they jeopardize the position of the city by not taking proper precautions to prevent accidents on the street.

The discussion grew out of a claim for damages against the city in which it appeared that negligence had been present.

It was generally felt that those in charge of road work, should be further cautioned to take precautionary steps in every case.

This may mean the closing of streets or parts of streets, so if, barricades go up this coming season, the reason will be obvious to the general public. It may be the means of saving money for the city.

The Mayor, Ald. Johnston and Duncan spoke strongly along the line of backing up the city solicitor, on what he thinks to be the best step to take to prevent accidents.

House Moving.

Ald. Duncan related an incident whereby a house was to be moved from between Hunter and Simcoe Streets, on Stewart Street to Romaine Street. This, Ald. Duncan said, would damage the trees. No permit had been applied for until that evening. Also a tree had been cut down.

The permit, he thought, should have been applied for before any action was taken. The City Engineer becoming conversant with the situation had refused to allow the house to be moved. Mr. Huffman was moving the house for Mr. Brown who was acting for a customer in Toronto. The house had been moved to the street line, so as to allow for the building operations there.

The fee for house-moving on the streets is $1 per day.

It was decided to support the City Engineer in what action he take.

A succes is a man who has reached the top and still has enough strength and ability to try to stay there.

ENTERTAINMENT OF DUKE AND PRINCESS PATRICIA

Program for Visit on June 1 is Mapped Out-stay to be Brief

MILITARY TAKE PART

Col. Clegg, Col. Young, Major Walker and Mr. B. D. Hall, president of the Board of Trade, met the committee on the whole Council last night and discussed a programme of entertainment for the Duke of Connaught and the Princess Patricia, who will visit Peterboro on the 1st of June.

It is not known how long their stay will be, but it is understood that their Royal Highnesses will arrive in the morning. They will proceed to Port Hope in the afternoon, and visit Cobourg in the evening.

The following programme was suggested, and a copy will be forwarded to Ottawa:

Civic Address, mounted escort, guard of honor, military salute, reception and luncheon.

The military will take a prominent part in the reception and entertainment of the Royal visitors.

Major Walker, Mayor Buller and the City Clerk were appointed a committee to prepare the civic address.

What action will be taken in regard to a half holiday and participation in the welcome by the school pupils is not decided.

LICENSE FOR MAPLE LEAF HOTEL IF PETITION IS O.K.

ALL OTHER LICENSES ARE RENEWED

At the meeting of the License Commissioners last evening no further action was taken in regard to the granting of a license for the Empress Hotel.

George Lipsett, of the Maple Leaf Hotel, East City, will be granted a license if the petition in the hands of the City Clerk is correct, and has sufficient force and meets with the License Inspector's approval.

The following renewals for the year were granted:

K. W. Schmuck, Grand Hotel; C. J. Graham, White House; R. P. Gollop, Snowden House; Frank Montgomery, Montgomery House; P. J. Kenny, shop license; Dennis Corkery, King George Hotel; Sam Long, American Hotel; Fred Blastorah, Palace Hotel; Elliott and Company, shop license; R. J. Munro, Munro House; J. C. Sullivan, shop license; Pat Hogan, Albion Hotel; Arthur Johnston, Windsor Hotel.

RISING FEARED

Many Believe Indian Anarchy in Mexico Will Follow Invasion

LONDON, April 22—Luigi Barzini, in a despatch from Mexico City to The Daily Telegraph, says that the conviction of authoritative Americans living in Mexico is that the moment for intervention by the United States seems to have been well chosen, when one thinks of the terrible struggle which Mexico is carrying on against the revolution, a struggle which engages all the Government forces for the maintenance of order. But if the defence of the towns should be disorganized by the new struggle against the foreigners, in the opinion of many observers, a period of terrible Indian anarchy is possible. The Indian revolt of Morelon is now clamoring at the very gates of the capital and the Indians of Sierra de Puebla are being held back with difficulty. The mob in the capital itself might rise in revolt, disregardign military organization. All the houses are being armed. The foreign legations have rifles, ammunition and food, and the foreign colonies are making arrangements for eventual defence.

ASKS $4000 FOR LOSS OF AN EYE

Cases to Come Before Chancellor Boyd Next Week

As yet three cases have been entered to come before Chancellor Boyd at the sittings of the Spring Assizes on the 28th.

Thos. Brightman, of Peterborough, claims the sum of $2,935.54 from M. J. Quigley, of Toronto, the action arising out of a loan. The plaintiff claims the above amount and also costs of action.

Hall, Medd and Davidson are representing the plaintiff, and G. N. Gordon, agent for Henderson and McGuire, of Toronto, for the defendant.

The case of Elliott vs. Elliott envolves a legal struggle which will take considerable time to unwind. George Elliott, a farmer, residing in Cavan, seeks to have certain agreements set aside and takes action against his son, Wm. Melville Elliott.

Peck, Kerr and McElderry are acting for the Plaintiff, and G. N. Gordon for the defendant.

Samuel Althouse, a laborer residing in Belmont, claims damages from the Ontario Rock Company of Belmont, to the amount of [illegible], for the loss of his right eye, which he claims was caused by [illegible] improper protections of [illegible] the defendants. The plaintiff further claims costs of action.

Peck, Kerr and McElderry are acting for the plaintiff, and Beatty, Blackstock, Fasken, Cowan and Chadwick, of Toronto, for the defendants.

WALLS FOR RESIDENCES

SOME CHANGES TO BE MADE IN THE BY-LAW.

ALD. JOHNSTON SAYS NINE INCH WALL IS SUFFICIENT

Mr. Chester Taylor has asked for permission to erect a nine-inch wall for his residence on Murray Street, but no action will be taken till the City Engineer submits to the City Council what he thinks should be contained in the building by-law, which it is felt can be improved.

The by-law calls for 14-inch walls in the fire limits, and in which Mr. Taylor is building, and a nine-inch wall outside the limits.

Ald. Johnston says a nine-inch wall is sufficient.

Ask the Builders.

The City Engineer will obtain the opinions and suggestions of building contractors, and will give the aldermen a chance to give their opinions when the whole matter is discussed at future meeting, probably in two weeks time.

self right along

Ald. Duncan has expressed himself all along that the fire limits should be extended. The boundaries he thinks should include the new C. P. R. Freight Sheds, which under the by-law is not now the case.

SWORN IN AS SENIOR JUDGE

MESSRS. HAYES AND SPOTTON ARE SWORN BY THEIR PREDECESSORS

Guelph, April 22.—Messrs. L. M. Hayes, K.C., of Peterboro, and Anson Spotton, of Harriston, are now senior judge and junior judge, respectively of the County of Wellington. They took the necessary oath of office before Judges Chadwick and Jamieson at the Court House yesterday, in the presence of a large crowd. Congratulations from the bar of Guelph followed, and suitable responses were made by the newly appointed judges, who were dined by the bar of Guelph at the Priory Club at night. On behalf of the local bar, Donald Guthrie, K.C., extended congratulations to both of the new judges. He remarked it was a most unique matter to have two new judges sworn in on the same day by their two predecessors. Both judges replied in suitable terms.

At the ceremony of swearing in there were present three sons of three previous Judges of the County of Wellington: J. R. Powell, son of Judge Powell, who was the [illegible] judge of the County; Col. A. Macdonald, [illegible] of Judge Macdonald, who [illegible] Judge Drew; and Mr. [illegible] Drew, K.C., son of Judge Drew, [illegible] Macdonald.

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 22, 1914

UNITED FARMERS OF ONTARIO.

ABOUT A MONTH AGO, a large gathering of farmers met in the Labor Temple, Toronto, with the object of organizing the farmers' societies of Ontario into one strong provincial organization, for the furthering of their common interests. It is to be called the United Farmers of Ontario, and will be a corporation resembling the Grain Growers of the prairie provinces. The function of the company will be largely co-operative, that is, it will endeavor to secure better marketing of farmers' products and cheaper buying of farmers' necessities, such as fences, machinery, seed, lumber, etc. The Grain Growers Company of Winnipeg, it was pointed out, did a business last year of between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000, had assets of $1,371,152 and earned profits of $164,000. A charter has already been secured for the proposed Ontario Company, and it will endeavor to protect the interests of the various local societies. Professor W. W. Swanson, of Queen's University, attended the gathering in Toronto, and has written an able article in the Canadian Courier on the proposed enterprise. Dr. Swanson points out that there should be no antagonism between different classes in industrial life. Manufacturers, wholesalers and railroads have each their place in the social fabric. Each is entitled to a square deal, and opposition between them will not lead to a good understanding of the rights and scope of each class. The true ideal to set before the people of this country was that of building a co-operative commonwealth, wide enough to embrace every phase of industry and commerce in Canada. Dr. Swanson regretted the intrusion of party politics into the discussion at the gathering. The convention passed a resolution condemning the re-imposition of steel bounties, as they might raise the price of fencing to the farmer. Dr. Swanson pointed out that this was a question that should be discussed on its merits and had no connection whatever with the problem of co-operation. It is not good policy for the farmers to attack the manufacturing interests in this way, for that is not the way to effect the co-operation of all industries and all people in this country to secure its highest development. Canada must work on a basis of mutual helpfulness and sympathy, placing the nation's welfare first, and party, prejudice and class last.

KEEPING THE BOY ON THE FARM.

A PETERBOROUGH MAN, Mr. Duncan Walker, said some very common-sense things at the recent meeting of the Ontario Educational Association.

> "What I believe is that an attempt should be made to place before the city boy the opportunities of the farm. This reverse action would relieve the city of a large part of its increasing burden of unemployed men, and replenish the population of the farm. "This question of keeping the boy on the farm is more or less nonsense. I mean no reflection by this on the instruction of agriculture, which is most important. But I do not see why we should attempt to keep the boy on the farm. We want good teachers and good lawyers as well as farmers."

Mr. Walker is quite right. In Tudor England men were born into their stations. That was a principle recognized in the framing of the great Elizabethan Poor Law of 1601. It was a principle and a custom from which labour was not freed until the third decade of the last century. To-day men are not born into their situations. They are not printers or lawyers by birth but by fitness or choice. No more are farmers born to the occupation of cultivating soil. There never should be any desire or movement to keep boys on the farm. Those who like farming should be farmers whether they are born in city, town or country, and the city boy should have the opportunities of the farm while the country boy should have the advantages of the city as far as possible. If education is to be a training fitting the youth of the country for that to which they are best adapted there must be no artificial barrier to the development of a child's bent or talent or faculties.

HINTS ON MOVING.

NOW THAT SPRING is assured, at least we assume that, and, as many people prefer to move rather than pay rent we have thought of a few things that may be useful to residents of Peterborough who are afflicted with the wanderlust. Always pack dishes and glassware as closely as possible and with as little paper as conscience will allow. This will permit a maximum of breakages and will entail the purchase of a new dinner or tea set. Do not consider the old man in this regard at all. Broken dishes must be replaced to preserve respectability. Use as large boxes as possible and put the heaviest things in them such as stoves, books and carpets; thus ensuring extra hard lifting for the express man who handles the household effects. The effects will be astonishing. He will be able to do a great deal of damage to the house by jamming the heavy packages against the walls and down steps, while the vocabulary he will display, although not edifying will be entertaining and truly amazing. An expressman under difficulties has usually a great command of language.

Do not worry if a breach is made in the wall of the dining room. It will have to be repaired by the landlord who delights in tinkering at his property and will provide labor for some blacksmith out of a job. Always pack preserved fruit as loosely as possible. The result will be the most beautiful mess that can possibly be imagined. If you have any clothes you want spoiled a most efficient method is to wrap them around a couple of jars of fruit and the result will be quite satisfying. Always wrap a mirror so the men won't know what it is, they will be sure to break it and will likely provide some amusement or cause for moral instruction. Never label boxes, for then you will not know where anything is and the resulting confusion will be an excellent excuse when you don't want to hunt for your husband's slippers. Always take away everything detachable except the house. Such things as clothes hooks in the closets, towel rods in the bath room, pokers for the furnace, boards on the back fence will not be required by incoming tenants, and, anyway the landlord doesn't want them. Even if you have no use for them take them away—they may come in handy some time when you build a house of your own, even though they get rusty and broken. Before you finally leave the house turn on a couple of taps—the city has more water than it knows what to do with, and if the sink gets clogged the house will be successfully flooded making more work for plasterers and carpenters. Don't sweep the house out when the furniture has all been loaded. Leave it as dirty and unprepossessing as possible and you may be able to make the landlord knock a dollar off the rent for the new tenant. Lastly, don't lock the front doors—it is quite unnecessary as there is nothing in the house that can be stolen and when you get to your new abode tell the neighbors what a dreadful landlord you had.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

WE ARE PLEASED to congratulate both Mr. Dobbin and the City of Peterborough in the election of the former to serve the latter. Mr. Dobbin has at least demonstrated his ability to come back successfully and without flourish. He will be a valuable member of the Council, having had a long experience of this city's growth and needs.

THE C. P. R. LINER Empress of Russia, which arrived at Vancouver from Yokohama, brought 510 Chinese, 150 tons of Chinese eggs and 15 cars of silk. In view of such facts the reality of the Oriental question is quite apparent. They show the effect on labor and prices and the difficulty of keeping Canada free from the influence of Chinese.

THE SALARY of City Engineer Fellows, of Vancouver, was cut $2,000 to $6,000 a year, and he was ordered to get to work at 9 a.m. after this. We imagine he could stand the cut in salary without an attack of heart failure, but to ask a city official to get to work at nine o'clock is too cruel and burdensome for words.

HOW TO LIVE comfortably on a small salary is the title of a recent literary effusion. How to get comfortably the small salary would be a distinct addition to literature.

WOMEN should not be given the ballot as long as they get off street cars facing the rear.

Strikes in Guelph.

Guelph Mercury.

There is more industrial labor trouble in Guelph just now than most people imagine. Several strikes have taken place, principally when the parlor carpet gets strung on the line, and mother hands father the broom stick.

A Distinction With a Difference.

Green: "Say, I understand that you told Blank I didn't know any more than your yellow dog." Brown: "Never said anything of the kind, old man."

Green: "Then what did you say?"

Brown: "I said that yellow dog of mine didn't know any more than you do."

Such Action Much Needed at Times.

Montreal Gazette.

Rev. Peter Bryce, pastor of Earlscourt Methodist Church, Toronto, surprised those present at a men's meeting by denouncing and naming an individual whom he did not think should be a member of the community. Details of the man's offence were made public by the clergyman and the affair has caused considerable comment. Mr. Bryce's action, while courageous, is not likely to be extensively followed. If such denunciation were common there would be much ill-feeling and many lawsuits.

Plenty of Work for Express Companies.

Industrial Canada.

The successful operation of the parcel post system in Canada should not drive the express companies into bankruptcy. There is still plenty of work left for them because they offer many advantages to shippers which are not afforded by parcel post, such as personal service, protection in transit, collection and delivery of parcels, the option of exacting C.O.D. payment from consignees and the privilege of stopping goods in transit.

The parcel post system, while it competes with the express companies to a certain degree, was principally designed to provide services which the express companies cannot give. We need all transportation systems which tend to bring into closer communication buyers and sellers. But the express companies should remember the warning given to them by the Dominion Railway Commission when it reduced their rates. If the express companies strive to furnish good service, and to make their charges reasonable for this service, they will get plenty of business at rates which should not dishearten their stockholders.

Use the Parcel Post.

La Presse.

One way in which to reduce the cost of living is to use the parcel post. In the United States this has been found to reduce the cost of living by securing direct from the farm fresh eggs, butter and fruits. The housekeeper is thus brought directly into touch with the producer, and she is not compelled to pay the profits of the middleman: she has no longer need to go to the market twice a week; her orders are delivered right to her door, and the products arrive directly under more advantageous conditions than now. And she can count upon absolutely fresh products which is of the highest importance. Here is how it is done across the border:—The postmasters draw up a list of those who are ready to supply consumers with farm products through the parcel post. These lists are consulted in the cities and towns by the consumers and they put themselves into communication with the farmers who are saved the trouble of coming into the city themselves to sell their products. Who will inaugurate in this country this admirable system of reducing the cost of living?

OLD MAIDS

By Walt Mason

All girls should marry when they can. There's naught more useful than a man. A husband has some faults, no doubt, and yet he's good to have about; and she who doesn't get a mate will wish she had one, soon or late. That girl is off her base, I fear, who plans to have a high career, who sidesteps vows and wedding rings to follow after abstract things. I know so many ancient maids who in professions, arts or trades have tried to cut a manlike swath, and old age finds them in the broth. A loneliness, as of the tomb, enshrouds the spinsters in its gloom; the jim crow honors they have won they'd sell at seven cents a ton. Their sun is sinking in the West, and they, unloved and uncaressed, must envy, as they bleakly roam, the girl with husband, hearth and home. Get married then, Jemina dear; don't fiddle with a cheap career. Select a man who's true and good, whose head is not composed of wood, a man who's sound in wind and limb, then round him up and marry him. Oh, rush him to the altar rail, nor heed his protest or his wail. "This is," you'll say, when he's been won, "the best day's work I've ever done."

Birthdays Note

WEDNESDAY, APRIL TWENTY-SECOND

REV. DR. GEORGE BRYCE, the historian of Western Canada, reaches the psalmist's three-score years and ten to-day in remarkable health and vigor. On graduating from Knox College in 1871, Dr. Bryce went direct to Winnipeg to organize a Presbyterian College there and start a church. Of the latter he became the first pastor and of the former, Manitoba College, the first professor. Since then he has been actively interested in education in the West. He helped to establish the Winnipeg school system, and had a hand in the formation of the University. In short Manitoba owes much to his zeal and energy in the cause of education and religion. Lately Dr. Bryce served on the Royal Commission on Industrial Training and Technical Education, while at present he is busy compiling a history of the West.

FICKLE FORTUNE.

Romance of a Discredited Gold and Copper Mine.

When the great mineral wealth of this nation has been finally developed a chronicler will write the "American Arabian Nights of Mining." One of the tales, all of which will be true, will run somewhat as follows:

Once upon a time there was a poor man of the name of Billy Harris, who lived at Spokane, Wash. He was a horseman, among other miscellaneous activities, and had acquired a considerable block of stock in a certain Leroi Mining company, having taken most of it in payment from those who owed him money and who had no other assets more tangible. This stock had kicked about without a sponsor for two years and was nominally quoted at around 10 cents a share.

One day a friend came along with a handsome stallion, and Billy looked upon the animal with covetous eyes. Dickering began and ended by his paying over $5,000 of the stock for the stallion. The seller, on sober reflection, became dissatisfied with his bargain and brought suit to recover the horse. He won, and Billy, with a sigh, took back his stock and bade the animal a fond farewell.

Eighteen months later Billy sold the same stock for $250,000 and the remainder of his holdings for as much again. The Leroi mine was taken over by Whitaker Wright and an English syndicate and produced $40,000,000 in gold and copper. It is not on record what the original owner of the stallion said or thought—and perhaps it is just as well.—Wall Street Journal.

Keep Right On.

"Don't stop work at seventy; do more of it," remarked Sir Gilbert Parker a few days ago, and Sir James Crichton Browne, an acknowledged authority on longevity, agrees with Sir Gilbert thoroughly.

"If you want a feeble and miserable old age, give up working," said Sir James, who, although born as long ago as 1840, is one of the busiest men in the kingdom to-day. "The most vigorous period of human life in its entirety is obviously between 25 and 40 years of age," he added; "but to say that men above the latter age are comparatively useless is to fly in the face of the biographical dictionary. Much of the best work of the world has been done by men over forty, and we should by no means stand where we are, but be back in the twilight ages, if bereft of what these men accomplished."

BREAKING ICE BARRIERS.

Dynamite and Little Tugs Lead the Assault on the Great Lakes.

Up on our great lakes winter holds those waters in a stiffened grip for several months, substantially putting an end to well nigh all traffic, but even so, it is the mission of certain of the big car ferry steamers to maintain something of an approximate schedule. However, every now and then the gathering ice packs catch and hold them despite the best the steamers can do, and it is only by using dynamite that they then succeed in breaking through these frigid barriers. Occasionally it is a veritable battle between titanic forces, and it takes courage for officers and crew to maintain the struggle. Success is not always the fruit of these strenuous efforts, because it is still fresh in the minds of many how gallant Captain McLeod and thirty others perished aboard the Marquette when that ship foundered in December, 1909.

What strikes one most forcibly, if he has seen winter conditions upon the great lakes, is the manner in which little tugs are used to break a passage clear for large steamers when their big kin are quite incapable of working their own way through the ice, notwithstanding their greater bulk and far more powerful engines. The secret lies in the fact that the tugs are able to roll about after poking their noses into the floe, and in this manner they attack the ice in a direction where it is least capable of offering effective resistance. Instead of assaulting the ice edge on where it is supported by hundreds of yards—if not, indeed, by several miles of solid pack—the small craft bear down upon a thickness of so many inches, and by sheer weight and the rapid shifting of this by a rocking motion, they force it asunder.

The big steamers upon the great lakes, especially the large car ferries, could do this very thing for themselves, and do it upon a greater scale, if they could be given the needful rolling motion, but the difficulty lies in finding a way to effect this.—Technical World Magazine.

A Useful Dunce.

During the war between the states General Sedgwick had on his staff a very dull lieutenant, who seemed never to be able to do anything without making mistakes. One day a friend asked the general:

"Why do you keep Jones on your staff? He seems a perfect dunce."

"Do you know," replied General Sedgwick, "Jones is one of the most useful members of my staff? Before I issue an order I always have Jones read it. If he can tell what it means I am sure there can be no chance that any one will misunderstand it."

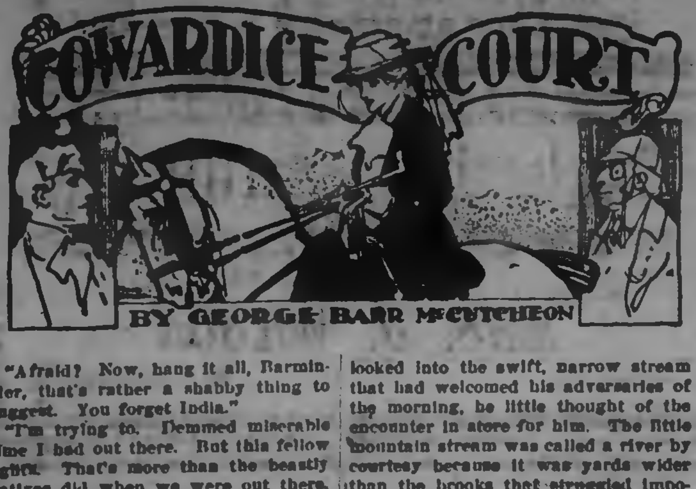
Red Rose Tea "is good tea"

891



BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON

"Afraid? Now, hang it all, Barminster, that's rather a shabby thing to suggest. You forget India."

"I'm trying to. Demmed miserable time I had out there. But this fellow fights. That's more than the beastly natives did when we were out there. Marching isn't fighting, you know."

"Confound it! You forget the time"—

"Mon Dieu! Are we to compare ze Hindu harem wiz se American feest slugger?" cried the count, with a wry face.

"What's that?" demanded two noblemen in one voice. The count apologized for his English.

"No one but a coward would permit this disagreeable Shaw creature to run affairs in such a high handed way," said her ladyship. "Of course Cecil is not a coward."

"Thank you, my dear. Never fear, ladies and gentlemen. I shall attend to this person. He won't soon forget what I have to say to him," promised Lord Bazelhurst, mentally estimating the number of brandies and soda it would require in preparation.

"This afternoon?" asked his wife, with cruel insistence.

"Yes, Evelyn, if I can find him."

And so it was that shortly after 4 o'clock Lord Bazelhurst, unattended at his own request, rode forth like a [illegible], his steed headed bravely toward Shaw's domain, his back facing his own home with a military indifference that won applause from the assembled house party.

"I'll face him alone," he had said a trifle thickly for some unknown reason when the duke offered to accompany him. It also might have been noticed as he cantered down the drive that his legs did not stick out so stiffly, nor did his person bob so exactingly as on previous but peaceful expeditions.

In fact, he seemed a bit limp. But his face was set determinedly for the border line and Shaw.

CHAPTER II.

In Which a Young Woman Trespasses.

MR. SHAW was a tall young man of thirty or thereabouts, smooth faced, good looking and athletic. It was quite true that he wore a red coat when tramping through his woods and vales, not because it was fashionable, but because he had a vague horror of being shot at by some nearsighted Nimrod from Manhattan. A crowd of old college friends had just left him alone in the hills after spending several weeks at his place, and his sole occupation these days, aside from directing the affairs about the house and grounds, lay in the efforts to commune with nature by means of a shotgun and a fishing rod. His most constant companion was a pipe, his most loyal follower a dog.

As he sauntered slowly down the river road that afternoon, smiling retrospectively from time to time as he looked into the swift, narrow stream that had welcomed his adversaries of the morning, he little thought of the encounter in store for him. The little mountain stream was called a river by courtesy because it was yards wider than the brooks that struggled impotently to surpass it during the rainy season. But it was deep and turbulent in places, and it had a roar at times that commanded the respect of the foolhardy.

"The poor devils might have drowned, eh, Bonaparte?" he mused, addressing the dog at his side. "Confounded nuisance, getting wet after all, though. Lord Bazelhurst wants war, does he? That log down there is the dividing line in our river, eh? And I have to stay on this side of it. By George, he's a mean spirited person, and it's his wife's land, too." I wonder what she's like. It's a pity a fellow can't have a quiet, decent summer up here in the hills. Still"—lighting his pipe—"I dare say I can give as well as I take. If I stay off his land they'll have to keep off of mine. Hullo, who's that? A man, by George, but he looks like a partridge. As I live, Bonaparte is pointing. Ha, ha, that's one on you, Bony!" Mr. Shaw stepped into the brush at the side of the path and watched the movements of the man at the "log," now less than 100 yards away.

Lord Bazelhurst, attired in his brown corduroys and his tan waistcoat, certainly suggested the partridge as he hopped nimbly about in the distant foreground, cocking his ears from time to time with all the aloofness of that wily bird. He was, strange to relate, some little distance from Bazelhurst territory, an actual if not a confident trespasser upon Shaw's domain. His horse, however, was tethered to a sapling on the safe side of the log, comfortably browsing on Bazelhurst grass. Randolph Shaw, an unseen observer, was considerably mystified by the actions of his unusual visitor.

His lordship paced back and forth with a stride that grew firmer as time brought forth no hostile impediments. His monocle ever and anon was directed both high and low in search of Shaw or his henchmen, while his face was rapidly resolving itself into a bloom of rage.

"Confound him," his lordship was muttering, looking at his timepiece with stern disapproval, "he can't expect me to wait here all day. I'm on his land, and I'll stay here as long as I like!" (At this juncture he involuntarily measured the distance between himself and the log.) "I knew it was all a bluff, his threat to put me off. Hang it all, where is the fellow? I won't go up to his beastly house. I won't gratify him by going up there even to give him his orders. Demmed cad, blowhard! Five o'clock, confound him! I dare say he's seen me and has crawled off into the underbrush. He's afraid of me; he's a coward. It is as I feared. I can't see the rascal. There's only one thing left for me to do. I'll pin a note to this tree. Confound him, he shall hear from me. He'll have to read it."

Whereupon his lordship drew forth a large envelope from his pocket and proceeded to fasten it to the trunk of a big tree which grew in the middle of the road, an act of premeditation which showed strange powers of prophecy. How could he, except by means of clairvoyance, have known before leaving home that he was not to meet his enemy face to face?

As Mr. Shaw afterward read the note and tossed it into the river, it is only fair that the world should know its contents while it hung unfolded to the bark of the tall tree. It said in a very scrawling hand: "Mr. Shaw, I have looked all over this end of your land for you this afternoon. You doubtless choose to avoid me. So be it. Let me state once and for all that your conduct is despicable. I came here personally to tell you to keep off my land henceforth and forever. I will not repeat this warning, but will instead, if you persist, take such summary measures as would befit a person of your instincts. I trust you will feel the importance of keeping off." To this his lordship bravely signed himself.

"There," he muttered, again holding his watch and fob up for close inspection, "he'll not soon overlook what I've said in that letter, confound him!"

He had not observed the approach of Randolph Shaw, who now stood, pipe in hand, some twenty paces behind him in the road.

"What the devil are you doing?" demanded a strong bass voice. It had the effect of a cannon shot.

His lordship leaped half out of his corduroys, turned with agonizing abruptness toward the tall young man and gasped "Oh!" so shrilly that his horse looked up with a start. The next instant his watch dropped forgotten from his fingers, and his nimble little legs scurried for territory beyond the log. Nor did he pause upon reaching that supposedly safe ground. The swift glance he gave the nearby river was significant as well as apprehensive. It moved him to increased but unpolished haste.

He leaped frantically for the saddle, scorning the stirrups, landing broadside, but with sufficient nervous energy in reserve to scramble on and upward into the seat. Once there he kicked the animal in the flanks with both heels, clutching with his knees and reaching for the bridle rein in the same motion. The horse plunged obediently, but came to a stop with a jerk that almost unseated the rider; the sapling swayed; the good but forgotten rein held firm.

"Ha!" gasped his lordship as the horrid truth became clear to him.

"Charge, Bonaparte!" shouted the man in the road.

"Soldiers!" cried the rider, with a wild look among the trees.

"My dog," called back the other. "He charges at the word."

"Well, you know, I saw service in the army," apologized his lordship, with a pale smile. "Get up!" to the horse.

"What's your hurry?" asked Shaw, grinning broadly as he came up to the log.

"Don't—don't you dare to step over that log!" shouted Bazelhurst.

"All right. I see; but, after all, what's the rush?" The other was puzzled for the moment.

"I'm practicing, sir," he said unsteadily, "how to mount on a run, demmit. Can't you see?"

"In case of fire, I imagine. Well, you made excellent time. By the way, what has this envelope to do with it?"

"Who are you, sir?"

"Shaw. And you?"

"You'll learn when you read that document. Take it home with you."

"Ah, yes; I see it's for me. Why don't you untie that hitch rein? And what the dickens do you mean by having a hitch rein anyway? No rider"—

"Confound your impudence, sir! I did not come here to receive instructions from you, dem you!" cried his lordship defiantly. He had succeeded at that moment in surreptitiously slashing the hitch rein in two with his pocketknife. There was nothing now to prevent him from giving the obtrusive young man a defiant farewell. "I am Lord Bazelhurst. Good day, sir!"

NEURALGIA

"Nearly Drove Me Wild, Until I Took Kephaldol."

Mr. Thomas Cooper, Ludley, Sussex, England, was almost frantic with Neuralgia, when he first took a KEPHALDOL Tablet.

"I am nearly 74 years of age and have suffered with Neuralgia nearly all my life. A friend told me about KEPHALDOL and I had my people get me a 2s. package. I took two tablets as soon as I got them and quickly received relief. It was a joy."

So great became the fame of KEPHALDOL Tablets abroad that their reputation spread to this country. The demand for KEPHALDOL grew so rapidly that arrangements were made to establish a Canadian office and supply all the druggists. These wonderful tablets, the prescription of Vienna's famous nerve specialist, Herr Doctor Stohr, have brought welcome relief to hundreds suffering from Neuralgia and Headaches, the ravages of La Grippe, Rheumatism, Sciatica and Lumbago, Pain in the Back, and in fact any pain.

If you cannot get the 50c. tubes at your druggist's, write Kephaldol Limited, 31 Latour Street, Montreal.

Noises and Cancer.

Muffle all unnecessary noise, brilliant lighting, disagreeable odors and touch not. Last and most important, eat and drink no poison, even though it should savor of the nectar and ambrosia of Olympus. With the revivifying of the sensory nerves all the rest will fall in and become strong again. And then we may expect to find eyeglasses, ear trumpets and all such aids cast upon the trash heap. There will be nothing to cause irritation, and so we shall have no cancer.—Dr. J. A. Guthrie in Medical Journal.

Food Habits.

"Food habits have queer boundaries," commented ex-Assemblyman Charles Sutherland at luncheon. "In Massachusetts people eat baked beans Saturday night, but not west of Worcester. Along the Connecticut shore an oyster stew is the regular Sunday morning breakfast dish. In Vermont they eat pie for breakfast—always apple pie. The scrapple habit is found only within fifty miles of Philadelphia.—New York World.

EGG ECONOMY.

Clever Ways of Eliminating Them From the Menu.

Because of the high price of eggs we must often try to get along without so many.

Try this way of mixing the old time flannel cakes.

Take a pint of sour milk and, if very thick, add a little cold water. Stir in it half a teaspoonful of baking soda or saleratus, stirring well; then add flour a little at a time, not forgetting a pinch of salt.

With the last of the flour stir in a teaspoonful of baking powder. The batter should be smooth and not too thick.

Waffle batter can be made the same way, with the addition of about one-fourth cupful of melted butter.

Homemade noodles are much better than bought ones and are easy to make. The following rule will make enough for a family of four:

Break two eggs without separating into a half pint of flour, add a little salt, mix with the fingers, adding flour enough to keep from sticking until you can work it into a ball. Separate in two parts, flour your molding board and roll out thin as paper. Lay on a clean cloth to dry, turning occasionally. They should not be too dry, or they will break in cutting. Lay them together, fold in half and then roll and cut with a sharp knife, separating the slices and tossing them about to lighten them.

Have soup stock boiling and drop into it the noodles with one hand, stirring with the other. Let boil for fifteen minutes. A little parsley added at the last is a great improvement.

JAPANESE PAPERS.

The Latest Fad In Decorations For Walls.

It has long been the custom to decry large patterned papers for the walls of dining rooms and drawing rooms. To begin with, they are considered fatal to the effect of pictures hung against them. The taste has been in favor of papering neutral in tint and unobtrusive in design. In truth, no picture can stand a large figured wall behind it. If people will have long branches and birds with big plumages sweeping across their walls they must give up the idea of seeing pictures there at the same time.

One cannot say how it will be with respect to the pictures, but it is certain that in what concerns the papering itself a complete renovation of taste is going forward. Whole landscapes, and on a big scale, are being thrown on walls, and in this China and Japan are the inspiring sources. Sometimes the whole side of the room shows you mandarins and pagodas intermixed with aggressive specimens of the flora of the celestial empire. Sometimes Chinamen, almost life size, are there also.

The note that comes from Japan is more somber—more in accordance with European taste. And it is not only the note that comes from Japan, but the material itself with which walls are now being covered. It is called Japanese papering, but it is in truth a composition more resembling leather. It is thick, presents the effect of leather and is generally of a rich hue, blending the sheen of copper, bronze and gold. Adorning walls with such lustrous metallic hues has been described as "gilding the bars of one's cage," the cage being the room.

LAUNDRY HINTS.

A little white sugar in hot water, say two lumps to a basinful, is a sufficient stiffening for delicate laces.

Use a mixture of gasoline and flour when cleaning delicate fabrics—laces, ribbons, plumes, etc. Dip the articles into the mixture and rub them thoroughly.

Torn lace can be repaired by first placing a piece of paper under the hole and then stitching on the machine back and forth until the hole is completely filled. Very fine thread should be used and the paper carefully picked out after the material is removed from the machine.

Getting It All.

"What can I bring you today, sir?"

"I hardly know. The doctor says I must have carbohydrates and proteids, and I want something nitrogenous, I think."

"Yes, sir. How about an order of hash?"—Pittsburgh Post.

SPRING WRAPS.

The Short Bolero Coat Is Again Very Much In the Lead.

GRACEFUL IN THE EXTREME.

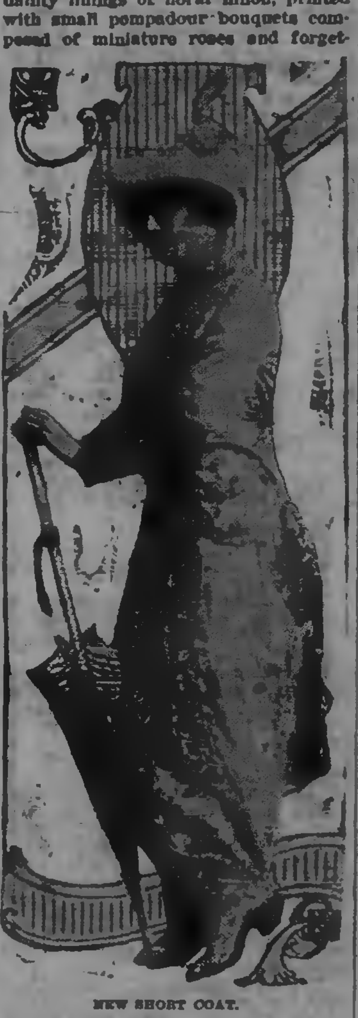
Long, Sloping Shoulder Lines With Gauntlet Cuffs Are Popular Types. Gayly Colored Porcelain Buttons Favored Decorations.

Soft woolen fabrics with ribbed surfaces which have very much the same appearance as corduroy velvets are being used extensively for the making of three-quarter length coats. These wraps are cut in loose fitting shapes and drawn in round the hips with a broad band of the same material, which gives that long waisted effect seen in the case of so many new models.

The sleeves are cut with long, sloping shoulders and finished with gauntlet cuffs, while the coats are fastened, as a rule, with large porcelain buttons. In various shades of golden brown and mustard yellow these coats are particularly smart, and they are being made also in leaf green, purple and dark crimson, as well as in pale colors for evening wear.

As to the new evening coats, they offer infinite variety alike in fabric, color and design. Some of the prettiest of all are made in chiffon velvet, with dainty linings of floral ninon, printed with small pompadour bouquets composed of miniature roses and forget-menots. Other very successful wraps are made in brocaded satin, lined with crepe de chine, left amply wide in the region of the hips, but draped closely round the figure below the knees to give the favorite pegtop effect. Some of these coats are arranged with low collars, while others are very becomingly finished with upstanding ruffles of chiffon velvet, which fit quite closely round the throat.



NEW SHORT COAT.

For very slight girls some of the new bolero coatees are sufficiently attractive—for example, one composed of stamped velvet in a rich shade of electric blue and bordered with black. The fronts were rounded, and the back hardly reached the waist line. The border of soft velvet formed a narrow collar, and it also appeared on the ends of the long, tight sleeves.

One little coat was lined with shot taffeta, which showed shades of rust red and blue, and it was to be worn over a tango tea gown of supple black satin.

A particularly smart little hat accompanied this costume. The crown was rather high and shaped like a cone, while the brim was very narrow and straight. The hat was entirely covered with wide bands of electric blue silk braid, and at one side there was a jaunty little mount made of black horsehair and jet beads.

Another admirable bolero was of similar outline. In this case the material was cardinal red velvet, and there was a collar in silk guipure of the same shade of red. This collar was bordered with velvet, and the same stuff appeared on the curved puffs which fell over the hands. It was a very smart little coat and was worn over a plaited skirt of navy blue moire.

Fashion is going to the opposite extreme of tight swathing, new coats and other wraps being voluminous.

The sleeves to jackets are kimono shaped to permit the wearer to slip the coat on over the masses of lace and embroidery which decorate every new lingerie gown.

The short coat worn with the lingerie gown shown here was of satin in a shade that harmonized with the flowered ribbon girdle just below it. The gown was one of the smartest of embroidered batistes, inset just above the hem with a band of filet lace.

Sir Walter Obeyed.

Miss Alice Wernher, writing on the centenary of the birth of Bishop Colenso, recalls an amusing incident which occurred when Colenso arrived in Durban after his visit to England in connection with the native question, which stirred such depths of bitterness forty years ago.

He was warned not to preach in his own church, St. Paul's, but persisted, and the only "demonstration" which took place was the rising of the late Sir Walter Peace to leave the church as Bishop Colenso entered the pulpit.

In trying to open the door of his pew, Sir Walter dropped his hat and heavy stick.

"Amid the clatter the bishop, all unconscious, gave out his text, 'Peace, be still,' and the astonished Peace, hit as it were between the eyes, sank back into his seat and remained there."

Huh! I wonder how many men would have a vote if they first had had to prove it would be beneficial to the community for them to have it?"

AN INTERVIEW WITH GENERAL BOOTH ON THE GREAT CONGRESS

From The Officer

'Can the Officers do anything to help you, General, in this great undertaking?'

And The General, impelled by the strength of his vision, his hopings and believings, above all by his infectious inspiration as he strove to impart to the representative of this magazine some of his own conceptions of the magnitude and purpose of the swiftly oncoming International Congress Campaign, strode from desk to window, and from window to opposite wall of his Queen Victoria Street office, until he halted for a moment to exclaim:

'Of all others, there is one thing I desire that they should do—Let them pray!'

Why our Leader was so anxiously emphatic on this point, returning to it again and again during the few minutes at his disposal for our interview, will be made abundantly clear as we endeavour to pass on his communings—for such they were rather than mere statements or remarks—with a view to the blessing and inspiring of every comrade into whose hands 'The Officer' comes, and more especially that large contingent who from every portion of our wide-flung Battlefield will assemble for the Great Event of 1914. Mention of the extent and scope of the Congress at once prompted The General to remark—

'Yes, without doubt the International Congress, subject to God's will, will be one of the most imposing and, I hope, impressive demonstrations connected with Religion which the Western Nations have ever witnessed. I say this advisedly, and I think a moment's thought will show that it will be so.

'In the first place, it will be strikingly Representative—even more so than the last Congress, which you will remember was no small affair! Representative, I mean, not only of nationalities and languages, but of every class which goes to make up the communities to which we belong.

A Democratic Assembly.

'In that sense it will also be one of the most democratic asemblies the world has ever seen. It must be remembered that the Delegates will not be haphazard selections—each of them will represent some Department of Salvation Army activity, and in that respect every individual Delegate may be regarded as having behind him a force of labour and devotion, of love to God and to man.

'That little fellow there with the shabby tunic on, stands for the Outriders of the Far West; and although we cannot see his horse or hear his favorite cry as he flies through the scattered "post" to his next appointment, we may think of him and his devoted comrades with gratitude.

'That woman with the Long-Service Badge and the sparkling eyes, and who cannot speak a word of English, could tell all the same of the heroic spirit of her companions who have given their lives to the rescue and training of the children of the East—their rescue from a fate a thousand times worse than death and their training in a vocation having the highest ends.

'Yes, this will be a thoroughly representative affair; and in that connexion it would be well to remind our Officers, as I suggested just now, that it will be eminently democratic. Here will be no silly distinctions arising from wealth or education or fame or title!

Every Social Strata.

'Here, side by side, will be those who have risen from the very lowest depths of human darkness and misery, with those who have ascended from the home of culture, the seat of learning, the place of power, in order that they might lay themselves upon the Altar set up by Jesus Christ.

'But the Congress will also be important in the mere fact of its bulk. We shall, God willing, look upon three or four thousand people gathered from the ends of the earth to wait on God, to deliberate upon His Will, to resolve solemnly upon fiercer conflicts and greater sacrifices. There will be, for instance, from the United States, between 400 and 500 Delegates; Canada will send us 400; Germany some 200; Sweden, 150; Holland, Switzerland and Italy, at least a hundred each; Australia, New Zealand, India and Ceylon, South Africa, France, Belgium, Norway, Denmark, and Finland, large contingents.

Captivating Attractions.

'There will be captivating attractions: God's Word will be read and expounded; we shall have human illustrations of the triumphs of grace; the flowers of Thy Army will be gathered in one vast and charming bouquet of splendour and fragrance. Praise and prayer will be going up at one moment in a score of different languages. We shall have the eloquent speakers and the stammering tongues; the thunders of Barnabas and the whisper of the timid girl. And we shall have books and papers and Bands and bills and Meetings, and eatings and drinkings, and life with all its meanings in The Salvation Army.

'Don't mistake me; this is not going to be a debating society. We shall have no discussions as the word is ordinarily understood, but it will be a great world-gathering with a view to meeting the world's deepest need and compassing its highest good.

'Apart from all this, however, I do not mean when I use the term "great" that the Congress will be great only in the sense of numbers or of languages—but great in the objects which it is its purpose to obtain.'

'And what, General, is the leading thought in your own mind as bearing especially on the objects of the Congress?'

'This: Salvation to the uttermost for the individual—and Salvation for the uttermost ends of the earth! It seems to me that these two thoughts are a counterpart of one another—that the further we can go in the pursuit, the power, the overwhelming fullness of that Great Salvation for ourselves, the better we shall hear the urgency of the call to go into the world and carry that mighty Salvation to every creature.

A Personal Pentecost.

'I trust we art going to experience baptisms of Light, rivers of delight, and overflowings of Grace unto Holiness in the Royal Albert Hall, in the Strand, and in the various centres where we shall congregate! God is coming amongst us! There is going to be a wonderful perception of His presence! The young men are going to see visions, and the old men to dream dreams! Amen, and Amen!

'More than this, I believe that those wonderful experiences will reach out in their glorious results to India, to Korea, to Tibet, to Fiji; to Australia, to 'Frisco; to Bolivia, to the isles of the sea. The Word of the Lord—that mighty hammer which breaketh in pieces any yet unites—is going to fall upon hearts and lives in London, but the power of the blow is going to be felt in every part of the earth. Salvation! Salvation on the spot—from all sin—from all fear—from every doubt! Salvation unto power and victory there in the Congress, but also Salvation which shall flow out like rivers of Living Water to all the desert hearts of men! That is my prayer, my hope, my faith!'

'Energize the Whole Army.'

'Will not the Cost of this Congress be very heavy?'

'It will! And surely the Lord will give us something back for the expenditure—something which shall profit and energize and influence the whole Army.'

'And what an enormous amount of Labour it will involve, General!'

'Enormous! Few people can form any idea of the strain which such undertakings entail, not only upon our Leaders, but upon the Organization itself. And here again I cry, "Surely there will be some return for it all in the lifting up of our banner and the honouring of our God!'"

It was at this interesting moment in the interview we ventured to ask if, as his loyal followers and fellow-workers, Officers generally could do anything to assist our hardly-driven Leader. The response: 'Let them pray!' was followed by the observation—

Our Great Objective.

'This effort, wonderful as it will be, judged from any standpoint—full of variety and colour, charged with power and emotion, filled with music and song, both old and new, surrounded by all that belongs to vigorous life and seething developments—will be nothing—nothing—unless the Holy Ghost comes down upon it; nothing without the Spirit which makes earth into Heaven, without the light that points poor sinners to the life and death and resurrection of Jesus Christ our Lord. Yes, less than nothing! Indeed, it will be dry, fruitless, and barren—a mere thing of sound and show and words.'

'Excuse me, sir, but is not that a little strong?'

'No, no! Already I feel it in my very bones that only God the Holy Spirit, coming down upon us in His own way, can make the Congress what I want it to be—a blazing beacon of Salvation for the next ten years, and an awakening trumpet sounding out to all the world the perils of sin, the power of Salvation, and the praises of Jehovah!

'And so I say: Pray for this! Let us ask of our Father to visit us as never before. Let us ask of God to make up to us the terrible loss we shall all feel owing to the absence of our beloved Father and Founder, who was still in our midst at the last International. Let us beseech that the gracious rains which only God can send may come down upon the thirsty souls who shall gather in His name in June and July, 1914.'

'What about your own and Mrs. Booth's part, General?'

'Oh, we shall be here, there, and everywhere! If by God's blessing we are spared, you will see abundant evidence of our presence! But I am determined that all parties shall take part in this Congress; at some time or other every Leader will be in the front of the stage.'

WOMAN'S WORK

Contributed by the Executive of the Women's Council

The Other Side.

We are increasingly aware of our persistent exposure of sin and wrong-doing in high places and in low and some of us are growing rebellious against this constant demand and supply in the matter of information regarding recent evil. Have we not grown over alert in the search for this special kind of news? It is impossible to scan a daily paper or a magazine without being constantly reminded of some form of crime.

Many may be the good effects of shining the searchlight upon dark places, but the constant glare of the searchlight bids fair to rob us of our normal vision of life. True our minds are becoming storehouses of misdeeds not our own. We are sick with iniquity.

It is not that we wish to shirk; we are not afraid of facing anything that we ought to know and we are sure we are in a great measure responsible for our neighbors' sins. But we are not so sure that we are taking the wisest way to mend them.

It is the educational aspect of the matter which especially concerns us as we think of the youth of the land. Not through loud wailing over evil can a nation be built, but through resolute dwelling with high ideals.

We are losing the vision. "Your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions," said the prophet.

Take away from youth the power of seeing visions, of dreaming dreams of noble uplifting things and you take away the future.

Faithfulness to the best and finest in the past and in the present, rather that horrified gaping at the present's worst, is the attitude that means continued and bettered life. What are we offering, in the way of concrete examples, or of finely expressed thought about virtue, to the young that will help them to form their vision of the perfect. Saint Francis with his increasing tenderness to man and beast, Father Damien at work among the lepers, might far better occupy the pages of our papers and magazines, than the pictured deeds of criminals and the achievements of contemporary multi-millionaires.

The imagination of youth—there is no power like it. We become that which we look upon, contemplate, remember; it is for this that we dread the ultimate effect of the continual picture of vice in our daily papers and magazines.

Images of evil can hardly help dimming and tarnishing the bright ideals of youth.

With all our modern wisdom can we find our way of limiting our exposure of crime to the people who can be of service in helping to check it, and keeping it from those who cannot help, but can only be silently hurt?

Many images of wrong must of necessity come to the young. Let them be crowded out by constant suggestion of noble images and noble thought, which will work both consciously and subconsciously, shaping the dream where the dreamer is least aware.

Instead of constantly presenting to the youth of our land the unholy side of life would it not be better if we were more diligent in searching history, philosophy, literature, lively, whatsoever things are of good report and in bidding the young think on these things?

REV. H. EARLE IS FIRST RECTOR AT PORT CREDIT

Port Credit, April 22.—On Thursday when the Rev. Henry Earle, M. A., formerly of Omemee, is formally inducted as rector of Trinity Anglican Church, each one of the four churches will have their own resident spiritual adviser. The service will be conducted in the church by Archdeacon Ingles, of Toronto. Sunday the rector preached twice and on both occasions the church was overcrowded.

The rector is for the present residing in the old Methodist parsonage, but this arrangement is only temporary until the new rectory, on which work has already commenced, is completed. The Methodists, who were the first to secure a resident minister, built a new parsonage last year. Rev. Father McCaffrey, the Roman Catholic priest, who came to the village about a year ago, expects to be able to move into his new parish house within a few days.

A mixture of one quart of rain water, two ounces of ammonia, one teaspoonful of saltpeter and one ounce of shaving soap cut up fine will remove grease from the finest fabrics.

Example of British Humor.

The late Lord Salisbury had a pretty wit. At the beginning of the South African war both his private secretaries volunteered, and they were followed, says the London Express, by the Duke of Norfolk, who asked to be allowed to resign his post of postmaster general and go to the front. "I suppose you may," said Lord Salisbury, "but I do hope Cross won't want to go." Lord Cross was then lord privy seal and was nearly eighty!

AMERICA'S BIG GASOLINE BILL

Motorists Pay $100,000,000 a Year to Run Cars.

There are approximately 1,000,000 automobiles in use in America alone. It is estimated that there will average 5,000 miles per year, making a total of 5,000,000,000 miles travelled by motor cars in America per year, which is equal to going around the world approximately 200,000 times.

Figuring the average miles gotten out of a gallon of gasoline for all sizes of cars at ten miles per gallon, it will take 500,000,000 gallons of gasoline per year to run the motor cars in America, which on the basis of 20 cents per gallon means $100,000,000 is America's gasoline bill for motor cars in a year.

These look like startling figures until we consider what we spend for other things; for example, our ice cream bill alone in America is said to be $200,000,000 per year. It will surprise some to note that our gasoline bill for running all these motor cars 200,000 times around the world, is not one-half of the ice cream bill, and yet they are both large figures.

HOMELY POTATO IS BASIS FOR CANDY

The mother who realizes that the desire for sweets is not only a legitimate craving of the childish appetite, but that sugar is a necessary food of great value, rejoices that a simple, useful base for candies has been discovered.

The homely potato, perhaps dug from her own garden, recommends itself at once to the thoughtful housewife. The economy and convenience both appeal to her, but still more does she appreciate the certainty of a pure and nourishing foundation for the home-made candy. The mother who is wise enough to know that candy is valuable for the sugar it furnishes, also knows that an undue amount is harmful. Vegetable candy helps to preserve the needed balance. In using vegetables in combination with sugar the candy has not only an added food value, but it has a bulk which lessens the child's temptation to overeat, because before the danger point is reached, the child's appetite is satisfied.

The potato is easily prepared, and if accuracy is observed in following the directions given, the candy will prove less difficult to prepare than any well-made confection.

The advantage of using a product always at hand recommends itself. So many times the desire for candy must go unsatisfied because of the lack of some important ingredient. This trouble is particularly felt by the family in the village or upon the farm, so vegetable candy solves the difficulty, for seldom is there a lack of sugar or potatoes.

The caramel problem is greatly simplified by the use of the Irish potato. To prepare the potatoes steam or boil them, drain and force them through a fine sieve. The fine sieve is important, because otherwise gluey spots may develop in the candy and no amount of cooking in syrup will soften the lumps. To one cupful of Irish potato so prepared add two cupfuls of granulated sugar, two cupfuls of coffee. A sugar, two teaspoonfuls of buter and two cupfuls of milk. Stir continually until the mass forms a soft ball—238 degrees. Pour upon a well-oiled marble and when cold cut in squares.

A very simple potato caramel is made with brown sugar. To one-quarter of a cupful of potato, prepared as before, add one pound of brown sugar, one cupful of milk and a piece of butter the size of a walnut. Boil the mixture until a teaspoonful dropped into cold water will form a firm ball. Stir as little as possible. Pour upon a well-oiled marble slab, and when cool cut in squares.

EXPERIMENTAL FARMS REPORT

The information contained in the annual reports of the Experimental Farms of the Dominion Department of Agriculture is so varied and complete as to render these yearly volumes almost worthy the name of "Encyclopedia of Agriculture." The Experimental Farms System embraces the Central Farm and twenty branch farms and stations, each manned by a staff of specialists. At these wide-spread, well-equipped institutions practically every phase of agriculture, from the study of suppression of plant diseases to the breeding and raising of all manner of orchard, garden and field crops and classes of farm animals, are taken up. In addition, seven outlying sub-stations carry on and report upon work of an agricultral nature.

The report for the year ending March 31st, 1913, makes a volume of nearly 700 pages, crammed with the meat of what was accomplished and found out during the year. The information is so classified and treated as to be readily available to the reader in whatever subject he may chance to be interested. A large edition has been printed so as to supply for some time at least every applicant who will drop a card for a copy to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

MOYES TO APPEAR

Promoter of West Shore Railway Will Be Examined May 1st.

TORONTO, April 22. — J. W. Moyes, the man four western Ontario municipalities have waited long months to question regarding the Ontario West Shore Railway, will appear before the Ontario Railway Board on May 1. This assnrance was given yesterday by T. Herbert Lennox, his solicitor, who said Moyes was almost recovered from his very tedious sickness. And the additional information by Chairman McIntyre was that in case he did not appear, and the board was not thoroughly satisfied that sickness was the sole cause of his absence, a subpoena would be issued, and if not effective Moyes would be committed.

P. A. Malcolmson, solicitor for Kincardine, went to the extent of asking that Moyes be ordered either to appear at once or produce the unguaranteed bonds.

The Ontario and West Shore bill passed the committee stage in the Legislature yesterday with some important amendments. It now provides that whatever control J. W. Moyes had in the road be taken away from him and transferred to a board of trustees, who shall complete it.

EARLY BUILDER OF BASSWOOD RIB CANOE

We have gone on for many years crediting the origination of the basswood built, the rib and bottom canoe to the inventive genius of Mr. John Stephenson, of Ashburnham. He was the first, or one of the first to construct this form of boat, but as to that he invented it, there may be serious doubt. In this regard, Mr. Stephenson or his friends may be heard from.

At a meeting of the Peterborough Historical Society held on February 4th, 1897, much interest was taken in a paper read by Mr. George Dunsford. Many of our older citizens will recollect him. Mr. Dunsford read the paper, having at his side a canoe built by himself in 1846. It was of fine model and lines and 20 feet in length. Now 1846 is a date about 23 years before the first basswood canoe was built in Peterborough, and if Mr. Dunsford's statements are correct, and there is no reason to doubt, we have the very beginning of the rib and bottom canoe.

This canoe was in possession of the Historical Society until the exhibits and properties of Victoria Museum were removed to the new Public Library building, when Mr. W. H. Dunsford had the boat taken over to his residence, where it now is housed in the barn. He would no doubt be pleased to show it to anyone interested in this work of the early days.

Mr. Dunsford's Paper.

"For the first five years of my Canadian life, commencing in May, 1839, I resided at my father's place called "The Beehive" on the shores of Sturgeon Lake in the township of Verulem, and having a mechanical turn of mind, I often tried my hand at building punts and other kinds of craft; there being at that time nothing available but boats and birch bark canoes for use on these waters except, perhaps that now and then one might see a common pine canoe, as both these kinds of canoes appeared to me, and in fact they were much too clumsy for one person to manage against the winds of that lake, which then one might say our only highway. So after much consideration I determined to build a canoe similar in shape to the birch bark made out of thin boards and in the year 1845 having previously left the "Beehive" to reside in Peterborough, I returned for my summer vacation and set to work to build a canoe out of the thin pine boards which, when I had finished weighed only forty pounds and appeared to me so light that I frequently carried it on my shoulders between Chemong Lake and Peterborough.

Now that was the first canoe of its kind, that I had ever seen or heard of and I found it a most perfect little conveyance and answered all my expectations and I used it both in Peterborough and in the back waters until the open season of 1849. I moved from Lindsay to Peterborough in the month of November of that year (having previously gone to Lindsay to study law) I left my nice little canoe with Wm. McDonald, who promised to take care of it until my return or else required it again. This he did until the summer of 1860 or 1861 (I forget which) when it was consumed by that dreadful fire which destroyed the greater part of the town of Lindsay. Whilst I was building this canoe my elder brother James who was interested in my work thought he could improve upon my ideas and made one larger and of still lighter wood, viz., cedar. Now this was not such an easy matter to accomplish, as one would think, as we were obliged to cross the lake, and inspect one or two cedar swamps to find a suitable tree free from knots. After much searching however we discovered a nice tall straight grained tree which my brother afterwards cut down and took to Bobcaygeon a distance of three or four miles where is was sawn into half inch boards, brought back to the Beehive and carefully piled in his workshop to dry for operations the following summer of 1846. The canoe that you now see before you is the result of his labors which when he finished he was not a little proud of and while he lived took the greatest care of it. After his death in 1882, Mrs. Dunsford lent the canoe to Mr. M. Boyd, of Bobcaygeon, who had it in his possession till last year when he returned it to her. I knowing the canoe and its history and having always a great wish to become its owner purchased it from her about two months ago.

As to how this kind of canoe came to be called the Peterborough Canoe was on account of my brother Hartley making several of them while living in Ashburnham about the same time that is to say from 1846 to 1850 some of which he disposed of to young men of Rice Lake and Cobourg. But the demandf or these canoes became so great that my brother not being able to or willing to make a business of manufacturing them persuaded some of the young mechanics of the village to try their hands at it, which they accordingly did and as they say and think improved upon them. If however they claim the idea of changing the build of the canoes from clinker or clapboard make to the smooth bottom I beg to say that I cannot aleogether admit this as a fact as we used to discuss this mode of make prior to the venture of these latter mechanics."

George Dunsford.

APSLEY NEWS

Special Correspondence.

Apsley, April 21.—Mrs. Kelly, who has been teaching here, has given up the school, and the vacancy is being filled by Mr. Colin Lees, of Peterboro.

Parties taking out timber for the Peterboro Lumber Co. journeyed to Burleigh Falls on April 8 to receive payment for their labor.

Miss Maud Lean, of Peterboro, spent Easter at her home here.

Miss M. McIlvena has returned to Toronto after spending a few days here.

Mr. Benjamin Coones has purchased a billiard table for the amusement of the public.

Miss Julia Earnshaw entertained her friends at a birthday party on April 9.

Mr. Isaac Lean held a wood bee on Wednesday of last week. In the evening the young folks tripped the light fantastic.

Mrs. Benjamin Jones visited friends in Burleigh last week.

Mrs. Dever and children, of Burleigh, were guests at Mr I. Lean's last week.

Miss Herr spent the Easter holidays at her home in Asphodel.

A number of the "Elite" of the neighborhood assembled at Mrs. Grant's on Thursday evening last to say farewell to Rev. C. Lord, who has had charge of the Anglican Mission here for about twenty years. Mr. Lord will be greatly missed, for during his time here he has done much good in many ways. It was by his untiring efforts that our village boasts of its beautiful new church. He was always prominent in all charatitable cases, and never ceased in working for the salvation of souls. On the evening above mentioned he was presented with a suit case and well filled purse as a slight token of the high esteem in which he is held. An address was read by Mr. Booth and the presentations were made by Messrs. Charles Grant and William Musgrave. Mr. Lord replied in a very feeling manner, hoping to be remembered in their prayers, as he had a wide interest in those he was leaving behind, and asked them to give his successor their aid and encouragement. He said he thought it advisable for one person not to stay too long in a place, for as we are all only human beings, what qualities one person lacked another might be able to fill. During the evening solos were given by Mrs. H. Roberts and Mr. Musgrave. Music by Miss Grant and Miss R. McKay, and readings by Miss Grant and Charles Grant.

They Learn Early.

Bessie was sitting on the hotel veranda one afternoon when another child, gaudily dressed, began to parade up and down before her, flirting her fan and swishing her skirts airily. Bessie stood it as long as she could, but finally burst out:

"Dresses an' fans does not make ladies."

"But they helps," the other flung back over her shoulder as she sauntered away.—Delineator.

LEADERS CLASH

Mr. Bonar Law Demands Inquiry Into Ulster Affair.

LONDON, April 22. — A stormy scene was created in the House of Commons yesterday, when Mr. Bonar Law, the leader of the Opposition, demanded a judicial enquiry into the naval and military movements recently contemplated by the Government in Ulster. The Unionists charged that these movements constituted a plot to provoke a rising in Ulster.

Premier Asquith refused a judicial enquiry, as he said the charges had been proved false, but challenged Mr. Law to make any accusations he wished to make in the House itself, when he would be given the fullest opportunity for discussion.

Amid the cheers and angry shouts of their supporters, the two leaders took their places alternately at the table, challenging each other.

Uproar followed Mr. Law's declaration that the statements by Premier Asquith and his colleagues had been proved untrue.

The scene ended when, amid Ministerial cries of "Take you day for discussion," Mr. Law said that after he had seen what the promised white paper contained, he would consider what steps it was worth while to take.

May Cancel Franchises.

TORONTO, April 22.—Municipalities in Ontario which are suffering from dangerous gas products, will have their interests protected by the Legislature. The municipal committee yesterday passed a bill that will allow any corporation with the assent of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to cancel a company franchise and not pay any damages therefor. The complaints from Brantford and other places against the large amounts of sulphuretted hydrogen in gas supplied by a very independent company was responsible for the action.

Advocates Canadian Model.

LONDON, April 22.—The adoption of the Canadian precedent with regard to the permissive provisions of the British North American Act is advised by H. C. Thomson, in a special article in The London Chronicle on "Can Ulster be Pacified?" as the best solution of the Irish problem.

Tents In India.

The manufacture of tents is numbered among the leading industries of India. The large demand for them is attributed to "the more or less transient character of a large part of the population and to the fact that the art of manufacturing tents has been brought to such perfection that they serve the purpose better than the average house of the poorer classes."

"So do I," she replied, with a half stifled yawn. "It's so unpleasant sometimes to have to say what one thinks."

NOVELIST DEAD

Samuel R. Crockett Passes Away in London.

LONDON, April 22. — Samuel Rutherford Crockett, the novelist, died Monday. He was born in 1860.

Mr. Crockett entered the Free Church of Scotland as a minister in 1886, but retired in 1895 to devote his time to literature. He was a voluminous writer, "The Stickit Minister" (1893) being among the best known of his works. His first work was a small volume of poems issued in 1886. His popular novels included "The Raiders," "Men of the Moss Hogs," "The Grey Man," and "Joan of the Sword Hard" and many more.

The death occurred yesterday of Sir Edwin Durning-Lawrence, aged 77, who attained celebrity by his two works, "Bacon is Shakespeare" and "The Shakespeare Myth."

Gen. Sir Henry Brackenbury died at Nice Monday, aged 77. He saw active service in many parts of the world.

Shaw Says King Is a Syndicalist.

LONDON, April 22.—George Bernard Shaw, speaking at a demonstration held for the purpose of advocating Socialist unity, referred to the presence of Keir Hardie, Mr. Hyndman and himself on the same platform.

The three of them, he said, had met on the same platform in the reign of Queen Victoria, who was a Whig; they had met in the reign of King Edward, who was a Liberal, and they had met to-night in the reign of King George, who apparently was a Syndicalist. That showed they were moving.

Things move along so rapidly nowadays the people who say "it can't be done," are interrupted by somebody doing it."

MAIN ESTIMATES BROUGHT DOWN; FINAL VOTE OF PRESENT SESSION TABLED IN THE LEGISLATURE

Present Estimates Call For $9,810,749, Which is a Slight Increase Over Main Figures a Year Ago—Bill Regarding Workmen's Debts is Thrown Out.

TORONTO, April 22.—Main estimates for 1914-15, which were tabled in the Legislature yesterday, call for an expenditure of $9,810,749. Compared with the main estimates for 1913-14 there is no great change, the principal amounts being on account of capital expenditures. The main estimates passed a year ago amounted to $9,524,387. Altogether the Legislature will be called upon to vote this session in respect of the requirements of the province for the two fiscal years $27,248,488.

The vote for civil government, which consists of salaries and contingencies, is $839,084, compared with $853,185 last year. For legislation the amount is $307,[illegible], a decrease of $27,000. In the Attorney-General's Department the vote for the administration of justice is $786,268, as compared with $882,710 in 1913-14.

For education the vote is $2,226,-053, as against $2,240,825 a year ago. Public institutions maintenance gets a sum of $1,[illegible]50,047, a decrease of $13,000. In this connection there is a vote of $12,000 for the maintenance of the Reception Hospital for Insane at Toronto. There is a vote of $60,000 in the further supplementary estimates for the current year, which will carry this work on for the current six months. For agriculture $756,766; 1913-14, $756,064.

In the grant for colonization and immigration, which is $122,800, as against $126,201 a year ago, the vote of $25,000 for bonuses to concerns bringing out domestic servants is reduced to $5,000, while the vote for assisting settlers in New Ontario is increased by $10,000, the amount now being $35,000.

For the Hydro-Electric Power Commission, in respect of general services, there is a vote of $200,000.

The labor interests of the province won a point yesterday when the local committee of the Legislature threw out the Dargavel bill, which would make one-half the indebtedness of a laboring man subject to garnishee. The present law fixes the limit of $25, which is to be exempt from any such proceeding, but the new measure would work out very seriously against the man of low wages who has serious outstanding bills against him.

The ticket scalpers' bill of George Gooderham, which prevents the sale of tickets except by authorized agents, in which case the commission must not exceed 2½ cents apiece, was also adopted by the committee.

The Opposition took a last stand against the further expenditure of $125,000 for Government House, but on the declaration of Hon. Dr. Reaume that the result would be a credit to the province from every standpoint, the motion of criticism was lost. C. M. Bowman said that it was a wanton expenditure of public money and poked scorn at the elaborate fittings. He was followed by Messrs. Mageau, McDonald, Monro and Proudfoot, each of whom repudiated such an amount of money being used.

Two Government bills, brought in by Hon. Messrs. Hanna and Pyne respectively, provide for further amendments to the Municipal Act and for permissive legislation allowing city school boards to establish special classes for defective children who cannot now secure a proper education along with normal scholars.

Expansion of the Hydro-Electric power scheme to large dimensions was indicated by Hon. Adam Beck in the Legislature in giving details of the various expenditures for which a vote of $5,000,000 in the further supplementary estimates was required. The commission would no longer be a middleman but would enter upon the development of power on a large scale.

There was no criticism from the Opposition on the merits of the various works to be carried out, but Mr. Hugh Munro (Glengarry) took the ground that the whole amount required should not be voted in a lump sum, but that the resolution should contain the actual estimates that Mr. Beck and Col Hendrie had given to the House in order that the members should know how much was intended to be devoted to each particular piece of work.

MEXICANS FROM ROOFTOPS OPPOSED MARINES' LANDING; FIGHTING IN THE STREETS

Main Body of Huerta's Troops Are Retreating to the Westward After Obstinate Stand Against the U. S. Forces—Civilians Believed to Have Done Most of the Later Fighting in the Streets.

VERA CRUZ, April 22. — Vera Cruz last night was in the hands of forces from the United States warships, but the occupation of the port was not accomplished without loss of American lives.

Four Americans, bluejackets, and marines, were killed by the fire of the Mexicans, and twenty-one fell wounded. The Mexican loss is not known, but it is believed to have been heavy.

The waterfront, the Customs House, and all important piers, including those under the terminal works, from which extend the railways to the capital, have been occupied. All the territory around the American Consulate is strongly patrolled and detachments hold other sections of the city.

The Mexican commander, Gen. Gustavo Maas, offered a stubborn resistance to the American advance, and for many hours there was fighting in the streets. Toward nightfall it was reported that the main body of the Federal garrison was in retreat to the westward.

Rear-Admiral Fletcher, in command of the United States warships, prefaced his occupation of the port by a demand, through the American Consul, W. W. Canada, for its surrender. Gen. Maas promptly declined to accede to this demand, and shortly afterward ten whaleboats were sent off from the side of the transport Prairie, loaded with marines. These boats effected a landing in the neighborhood of the Customs House before noon, and a few minutes later Captain William R. Rush of the battleship Florida, who was in command of the operations, brought his flag in.

The coming of the American forces was not heralded by any great excitement, but small crowds gathered to watch the landing. Soon the bluejackets and marines marched through the streets leading from the waterfront and along the railroad yards. Others proceeded to the American Consulate, while still others were deployed along the approaches to Central Plaza, in which Gen. Maas had concentrated his men.

These manoeuvres were effected without opposition, but suddenly Gen. Maas challenged the advance with the first shots—a volley fired from a point three blocks from the marines and two blocks south of the main plaza. The marines replied immediately, but the action ceased in a moment. There was a lull for ten minutes and then another brief exchange from the west end of Montealnos street, where a Federal outpost was stationed.

At 12.30 the firing became general, and at one o'clock the guns of the Prairie went into action.

After Gen. Maas had been driven from his position in Central Plaza, the Americans found themselves the object of fusillades from the tops of houses, where small groups of soldiers and citizens had taken up positions. It was learned only last night that the greater part of those engaged in this resistance were civilians, who refused to accept the American occupation passively. They obtained guns and stationed themselves at points of vantage and did much to prolong the action.

Towards the middle of the afternoon a large body of Mexicans evacuated their position and are now somewhere in the sand hills back in the interior, where it is reported from Mexican sources they are expecting to be joined by reinforcements sent down from the capital.

Two Hundred Mexicans Killed.

GALVESTON, Texas, April 22.—More than 200 Mexicans were killed at Vera Cruz yesterday in the fighting that followed the landing of U. S. sailors and marines, according to information received at the cable office here.

Vessel Arrives Too Late.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—Official advices reached the Navy Department at midnight that a German vessel carrying ammunition to Huerta, finding on arrival that the Vera Cruz customs house was in possession of Americans, anchored outside the harbor. The vessel, Secretary Daniels says, carries 15,000,000 rounds of shells, mostly for rapid fire guns, and 200 field guns.

Fifteen Cavalrymen Held.

DOUGLAS, Ariz., April 22.—A special to the Douglas, Ariz., International from Tombstone, Ariz., says news reached there yesterday that 15 members of troop B, tenth cavalry, were being held by constitutionalist troops at a point just below the border between Naco and Hereford, Ariz.

The troops, who were on border patrol, wandered across the line on Monday night without being aware of the fact. It is reported they were surrounded and taken prisoners by a large rebel detachment.

Troop A, tenth, left Fort Huachuca yesterday to investigate.

Appointed To R. M. C. Staff.

KINGSTON, April 22.—Charles H. Smith, demonstrator of physics and chemistry at McGill University, Montreal, has been appointed temporarily professor of physics and chemistry at the Royal Military College, to take the place of Capt. J. B. Cochrane, retired.

THE OCEAN RATES

An Amendment the Real Need of Westerners, Says Dr. Steele

OTTAWA, April 22.—The budget debate was resumed yesterday by Mr. Sinclair (Lib., Guysboro, N.S.), and was participated in by Messrs. Steele, Marcil, Murphy and Lanctot.

Mr. Sinclair declared that the policy of the Government seemed to be to spend money as fast as it was possible to borrow it. In this connection, he likened Hon. Mr. White to Nero—always fiddling and borrowing more money.

The present Government, maintained Mr. Sinclair, had accomplished practically nothing that made for the prosperity of the country, while, on the other hand, they had accomplished much that was detrimental to Canada. They had debauched the civil service and degraded the great undertaking, the National Transcontinental.

Dr. Steele (Con., N. Perth) declared that instead of discussing the advantages which might accrue from free wheat, the west would accomplish much more good for herself by encouraging the milling industry. If we had free wheat it would mean the death of that great industry.

Another feature of the western problem which Parliament would do well to turn its attention to was the high freight rates charged on the Atlantic.

In conclusion, Dr. Steele urged the establishment of a Government-owned and operated line of steamers to carry agricultural produce from Canada to Britain at fair rates.

BROODING OVER MISTAKES.

It Does No Good and is Merely Committing a Second Fault.

Mistakes are to be laughed at. If one were to take seriously every little mistake he made life would become a burden to him. Laugh at your own little mistakes and do not feel grieved if others laugh at them. Laughing will help you remember to avoid them another time quite as well as giving away to serious regrets.

Some people are forever taking themselves to task for some shortcoming. They are the overconscientious ones. If we act foolishly on the impulse of a moment it is no more fair to punish ourselves than to punish a child for a little mistake. It is right to look for the error and acknowledge it. If one has wronged another he ought to confess it and be more careful, then put it out of mind.

To grow morose and solemn is to commit a second fault. No one is doing any good to himself or others by constantly eating the bread of penitence. The only time to remember a mistake is when one is tempted again to the same fault. Daily and hourly keeping up self reproach, one is worn out. This does not mean never to listen to the warnings of conscience, but to see the fault, start afresh and keep cheerful and hopeful. — Milwaukee Journal

OLD TIME "ADS."

When 10,000 Fine Healthy Swedish Leeches Arrived In York.

When Toronto was York and York was a town, the commodities which our enterprising shop-keeping forbears retailed to an ever-growing community were doubtless as cheap as they are interesting, says H. P. Rossiter in The Toronto Star Weekly. Some little curiosity might be aroused to-day, for instance, if a merchant announced that he had just received a consignment of able-bodied leeches. Yet, rather less than 100 years ago, a local pioneer newspaper contained the advertisement of a firm stating that they had just received by express a fresh supply of 10,000 fine healthy Swedish leeches!

A brief glance shows that the following notice does not announce the sale of Pan's pipes: "One pipe and six octaves of superior Madeira. Low for cash." Two others of the same date possibly indicate that this was a sociable community; for example, "30 barrels malt whisky, 60 barrels common do, very cheap by private sale." And "4,000 gallons Scotch whisky of great strength and delicious flavor for sale by the subscribers." They were giants in those days.

While the electric light problem did not vex the early settlers, the lighting question was evidently not entirely satisfactory. For in an issue of 1830 we find: "To the dissatisfied uses of lamp oil the undersigned offer a very superior bleached elephant oil equal to sperm.

A good number of the present generation could no doubt confess to obtaining a surreptitious pinch from a grandfather's snuffbox. This advertisement would seem to indicate that snuff-taking was fairly prevalent in the early twenties: "1,000 jars Macaboy snuff and five barrels of Scotch do, very fine and fresh, for sale." It would be a nice problem to calculate the number of sneezes in that consignment. Geese, both dead and alive, are still greatly in demand when the per pound consideration is reasonable, but the notice of "live geese feathers low for cash" in the Colonial Advocate of 1833 — ugh, feather beds!

The shoe merchant seems also to have hit upon a modern method. "Mud boots and shoes. Received direct from Quebec, an extensive supply of the above, warranted waterproof when varnished. The varnish the subscriber can furnish at so low a rate as 2s. 6d. a pint."

A confectioner of York, in 1829, "respectfully informs the ladies and gentlemen that he is now supplied with 1,100 bottles of cordials of various descriptions, 200 bottles of lemon syrup, and a superior quality of confectionery neither imported from France or England, nor smuggled in from the United States, but prepared by himself. After relating his unfortunate business mishaps, he continues "by way of advice to the public he cautions them in the use of soda water, for from calculations made in New York out of 500 who died in one week 250 were the victims of strong soda-water." Alas! there are many victims of strong soda-water nowadays.

It is comforting to know that the trained flea of to-day was also the entertainer of yesterday. This advertisement was clipped from an issue of 1835: "The extraordinary exhibition of Illustrious Fleas from England, just arrived in this city, and will be open for exhibition at the Steam-Boat Hotel this day. Admittance 1s. 3d., children half-price." The flea may be industrious, but hardly illustrious.

The Correspondent and Advocate of Nov. 5, 1835, contained this pathetic note: "The absence of the Editor from the city will unavoidably occasion till his return the want of editorial matter in this and future numbers."

Offers Body For Sale.

"For sale—a man's body!" That is the substance of an advertisement that appears in a recent issue of a Toronto paper, and, according to the man who inserted the "ad," he is entirely serious about the matter. The advertisement states that he desires to will his body to the anatomical institution which makes the highest bid upon it, provided the lowest offer is not less than $100. The object of the insertion of this rather novel advertisement is to procure some ready money in order to enable the man to pay the expenses of a very serious operation, performed upon his wife at the General Hospital, and to pay his house rent. In order to do these things without accepting charity, he is willing to forego the privilege of burial upon his death. No word of the success of his scheme is yet at hand.

Society Formed To Protect Indians.

The securing of their rights by the native races of British Columbia in the present dispute with the Provincial Government was strongly urged at a luncheon under the auspices of the newly-formed society for the protection of native races in Toronto recently. One speaker said that the title of the Indians to the land in Northern British Columbia was recognized by the Dominion Government at the time that province entered the Dominion, and it is purposed to have the question settled in the courts, if the machinery for putting legal action into operation can be set going. Ottawa has been urged to act as well as Westminster.

Immigration Increase Small.

The total immigration to Canada during the 11 months, April to February, of the current year, was 363,-036, made up of 136,699 British, 97,-006 American, and 138,926 from all other countries. During the corresponding 11 months of last fiscal year the total number was 357,331, composed of 133,711 British, 134,398 American, and 99,222 from all other countries. The increase is two per cent.

A hungry man never objects to making the thirteenth at the table.

LINCOLN TOLD A STORY.

It Was So Good It Inflicted and Then Remitted a Fine.

Abraham Lincoln, during his early career as a lawyer, traveled a circuit in Illinois. Judge David Davis and Lincoln were close friends, says the author of "Lincoln's Own Stories," and the judge always showed a keen appreciation of Lincoln's stories.

"I was never fined but once for contempt of court," said a man who was a clerk of court in Lincoln's day. "Davis fined me $5. Mr. Lincoln had just come in, and, leaning over my desk, had told me a story so irresistibly funny that I broke out in a loud laugh. The judge called me to order, saying:

"'This must be stopped. Mr. Lincoln, you are constantly disturbing this court with your stories.'

"Then he said to me:

"'You may fine yourself $5.'

"I apologized to the court, but told the judge that the story was worth the money. Shortly afterward the judge called me to him.

"'What was that story that Lincoln told you?' he asked.

"I told him, and he laughed aloud in spite of himself.

"'Remit your fine!' he ordered."

Denbigh Castle.

Denbigh Castle, a noble fortress standing upon a high craggy rock overlooking the beautiful Vale of Clwyd, and built much in the style of Carnarvon Castle, is about to be handed over to the British Office of Works to be maintained as a national monument. A large sum of money is to be expended upon restoration work.

"The utmost in power ---with low fuel cost"

THAT is our idea—to produce cars that will develop more power than others selling at the same price—and that will go further on a gallon of gasoline.

That it's a good idea, is proven by the number of McLaughlin-Buicks on the road—a number that is being greatly augmented this year.

In this season's models of

THE McLAUGHLIN-BUICK

this "more power—less fuel" idea is carried out to an even more complete extent than has hitherto been attained.

We have developed and improved the McLaughlin-Buick overhead valve motor until it is very close to mechanical perfection. The saving in fuel it makes possible is a feature that has caught the attention of Canada's motoring public as no other motor car development of the year.

The McLaughlin-Buick line for this season consists of eight models—including both 4 and 6 cylinder pleasure cars and a 1,500 pound truck. From the 2 passenger Roadster at $1,250 to the 6 cylinder Touring Car at $2,750, there is not a car in the entire line that can be equalled at its price.

LAWN BOWLING CLUB MAKE READY FOR ANOTHER SEASON'S SPORT ON THE GREEN

J. P. Cunningham is the New President and T. C. Elliot is Secretary

NEW CONSTITUTION

For the past few seasons the Peterboro Lawn Bowling Club has not been featured by an enormous amount of enthusiasm, and in fact very dormant feeling has been displayed in most of their undertakings. Several reasons for this could be given, but the most prominent is the lack of a strictly adhered to constitution, and with this uppermost in their minds, the few members who attended the annual meeting held last night in the Dominion Bank Chambers, gave it no small amount of discussion.

Mr. R. M. Waddell, who, by the way, some five years ago moved that a constitution be drawn up for the Curling Club, put forth a motion that a constitution be drawn up for the Bowling Club, and that it be presented at the annual meeting, which should be held in the fall. This motion was carried unanimously, and Mr. H. R. H. Kenner and Mr. J. H. Renwick were mentioned as gentlemen possessing the qualifications to draft the constitution, as they had demonstrated their ability by their work with the Curling Club. If this motion be carried out and the officers for the ensuing year live up to the promises they made last night, the bowlers will again come to life and to use a baseball expression, some of the old "pep" will be shown.

A very discouraging feature in connection with the club was the failure of several of the members, who bowled almost daily, to pay the fee of five dollars. These delinquents have been spoken to time and time again, but they never responded. It was not surprising then to find that the meeting was generally in favor of making one of the clauses in the proposed constitution compel the members to pay their fees before going on the green, and if they do not autocatically cease being a member.

Financial Statement.

Last year's financial statement, which was read by Mr. T. Pratt, the Secretary-Treasurer, was quite satisfactory, and showed that the debt on the grounds was being gradually wiped away. It is thought that if the club goes well this season it will soon attain greater success and the complete debt, which amounts to over $100.00, will be cleared away.

The following energetic members were elected officers:

President—Mr. J. P. Cunningham.

Vice-President—Mr. J. H. Renwick.

Secretary-Treasurer—Mr. T. C. Elliot.

Executive—Messrs. J. W. Maynard, R. Best, Geo. Cairns and the President, Vice-President and Secretary-Treasurer.

Membership Committee—Messrs. D. H. Moore, T. Brightman, R. G. Cottrell, Dr. Wightman, D. Belleghem, R. M. Waddell, and J. E. A. Fitzgerald.

Green Committee—Messrs. D. Belleghem, T. Brightman and W. Gray.

Mr. R. M. Waddell, the past president, spoke very highly of the new set of officers, as did Mr T. Brightman. He assured the new President that there wasn't a member for whom the members would work harder than the same J. P. Cunningham.

The past services of Mr. T. Pratt were very highly spoken of, and a successor was reluctantly appointed. Mr. Pratt has filled the office for two years, and filled it well, but the members thought it unjust to impose upon his generosity. Upon Mr. Pratt's own suggestion, Mr. T. C. Elliot was selected to fill the office for the ensuing season.

The resignation of Mr. W. Gray, the caretaker, was accepted with regret, but the meeting decided that he was too good a man to lose sight of, so the secretary was authorized to present him with a ticket. The securing of a man for caretaker was left in the hands of the Green Committee.

The executive committee and Messrs. H. Meyers, Dr. McPherson, F. C. Weber, and G. R. Hall were decided upon as the best parties to meet the members of the Tennis Club and make arrangements for the coming season. There is some talk of having the Bowling Club and the Tennis Club two distinct organizations, but nothing definite will be done till after the above gentlemen meet the latter body.

New Lighting System.

Mr. Cunningham brought out a very good suggestion in having the older players pledge themselves to go down to the green regularly in the evening during the forepart of the season and assist in getting the younger blood enthusiastic. The bowling at night will be further assisted by the installing of a new lighting system which is to be done this spring. The exact style has not as yet been decided upon, but it can be expected that the new lights will be exclusively up-to-date.

It was decided to invite the members of the Brinton Carpet Co. Bowling Club up to the green at regular intervals, and in that way assist this new brother club. Previous to the adjournment of the meeting, a vote of thanks was moved to Mr. J. Crane for the use of the Dominion Bank Chambers.

LAWN TENNIS

The Sacred Heart Lawn Tennis Club met last evening and made the first move toward opening the season. The courts beside the church are in fairly good condition, and a few weeks of warm weather should make it suitable for play. A great deal of enthusiasm has been displayed by the members of the club, and all look forward to a banner year. The following were the officers elected:

Hon. President—Rev. J. V. McAuley.

President—Miss Julia McNichol.

Secretary—Miss Annie Fagan.

Treasurer—Miss L. Milloy.

BASEBALLITIS

The London team is having about the same weather at Marietta as the Petes run against at Youngstown.

Shag has Bramble. This time next week he'll have Harry Brant.

Get this one from Ottawa:—All the clubs appear to be entertaining a great deal of respect for the Peterboro White Caps. No wonder. Survery their pitching staff. Sterling, Tracey, Belting, Creswell and Schettler.

Nill, Ottawa's new second baseman, hit .248 and fielded .951 in 147 games with Seattle in the Northwestern League last year.

Catcher Nevitt, an Indian, is doing great work with the St. Thomas squad in their training quarters. Manager Craven predicts that he will be one of the best in the Canadian League.

The Senators have Rogers, Kane, Kubat, Lill, Bernlohr, Hall, Shockner and Peterson to select their pitching staff from.

St. Thomas Times.—The Canadian League umpires will go into training next week. With three weeks' work at a college for the blind, the porch-climbing staff should be in good shape for the opening.

Hamilton, as well as Brantford, will play an exhibition game with the Philadelphia Athletics.

Craven says the Saints will finish on top of the pile this season. Maybe Hudson Bay is full of grape juice.

Hamilton's ball park is in poor shape, and their exhibition game for next Saturday has been cancelled. The Hams will have their first real test when they tackle Niagara Falls on Sunday.

Rube Deneau is endeavoring to pick up Chubby Coose. He was a valuable man last year, playing every position on the diamond, but it is said that the Red Sox will use him at first exclusively.

Kelly Harris, formerly of the Senators, is to be given a try out by Erie.

BIG DEMAND FOR LACROSSE STICKS

Game is Taking Well at Norwood—First Lot of Sticks Sold Quickly

GAME FOR THE 24TH

Norwood, April 27.—Lacrosse has taken full swing here. Mr. Alex. Kempt, who has consented to handle the sticks, received three dozen by express on Saturday last, and all were sold by six o'clock on that day. It is expected that under the management of a few of the old veterans of the game that a good team may be put out this coming season. Numbers of young boys show good possibilities of being good men for the game. The sporting committee who are arranging the sports for the 24th of May, which will be celebrated here are trying hard to arrange a game of lacrosse on that day.

POLICE COURT

Strangers Face the Magistrate And Pay $2.

"Why do you get drunk?" asked Magistrate Dumble this morning of Jas. Haggerty, a stranger, charged with being drunk. Haggerty answered by saying this was the first time the booze ever beat him and that he was going to cut it. His Worship favored this resolution and dismissed him.

David Wheeler, charged with being drunk, was fined $2. Wheeler, said he came from Pontypool, and also had a charge of assault against Jos. O'Brien. O'Brien said that they only had an ordinary scrap. The other man admitted he did not know much about it only that he thought O'Brien had kicked him. The case was dismissed.

WHITE CAPS IN 11 INNINGS GAME

Youngstown, Ohio, April 22. — Old Sol finally consented to do justice to the Peterboro Canadian League team, and their work-out at Wright Field yesterday afternoon was under greatly improved weather conditions. Manager Curley Blount divided his squad into the following teams:

Schettler, Belting Martin, pitchers; Miller and Ryberg, catchers; O'Hearne, first; Geo. Miller, second; Rockfield, short; Fox, third; McClure, Blount and Conway, outfield.

Tirrell, Tracey, Cresswell, pitchers; Chapdelaine, Kelly, catchers; Flanagan, first; King, second; Price, short; Byrne, third; Naw, Dawson, Gaffney, outfield.

Eleven Innings Game.

The game went 11 innings, and the final score was 9-9. The pitchers took things very easy and sent very few twisters across, with the result that the outfield worked overtime. Several circus catches were effected and by their showing yesterday, Blount is going to have a big proposition ahead of him when he commences weeding his outfield. McClure, the backstop, handled himself very well in the outer garden, and if he improves a little with the stick he may be carried as third catcher and worked in the right field. The work of Conway, a Youngstown man, was very prominent. He played with that city in the Central League of 1912, participating in 122 games, batting .285 and fielding .970. He formerly played with the Washington American League team. Last season he again wore the uniform of Youngstown in the O. and P. League, which broke up, and as the season was pretty well advanced, he secured a position and has been living in Youngstown since. He si a big fellow, covers a lot of ground, and demonstrates his ability to wield the willow. If he continues to show class, Manager Blount intends signing him up.

Class to the Infielders.

Joe Byrne and Price were going extra well yesterday, and can be depended upon to land a permanent place. They work well together and cover the gap between second and third to perfection. They have also shown up well at the bat. Just who will land the other infield job is not known, but it looks like Fox or King. Both have had a little more experience than Miller, and while the latter is very speedy he may require a little more seasoning. The fight between Flanagan and O'Hearne for the initial sack is very keen. They are both very fast and cover the sack well, while their stick work is at par. Which ever one of the two stays can look after his position about as well as any first sacker in the league.

Although the weather yesterday was O.K., some of the players are hoping that it will become much warmer. A few stiff muscles are still in evidence, and will be till the weather brings them back to form. Owing to a break in the plumbing apparatus of the Tod House they were unable to get hot water yesterday, but the proprietor expects to have this rectified this evening. The absence of the hot water drove evedybody even to Willie Swartz, into a barber shop for a shave.

There is still no word from Bob Sterling, but Blount intends to wire him this afternoon if he does not arrive.

The boy from Mt. Vernon works with his brother in a tree nursery and is, undoubtedly, very reluctant about passing up a salaried job and work till May 7th for his board. Bob is sure of landing his place, and is therefore not a bit particular of getting into camp for a few days yet. It is expected that a couple of players will be let out to-night.

CELEBRATION OF PEACE CENTENARY

General Enthusiasm in Canada and the United States.

The organization of the peace centenary celebrations to take place throughout the North American continent next year are now nearing completion so far as Canada is concerned. Nearly every centre west of Ottawa has been brought into line and all that remains to be done is to make arrangements as to the programs to be held in each of the cities and towns. In Ontario there remains about fifteen places to be organized. Altogether about 100 centres will hold celebrations, a third of which will be in Ontario alone. Sixty per cent. of the total have been arranged. Quebec and the Maritime Provinces are now falling into line and reports from these eastern centres go to show that enthusiasm there will rival that of any central or Western Canada points.

Mr. E. H. Scammell, organizing secretary of the Canadian Peace Centenary Association, has returned to Ottawa from a trip through Quebec and the United States, and he says that from reports received and his own observations, the peace centenary next year will be a great success in these districts. "I expect shortly to again visit Quebec to make further arrangements regarding the centenary," said Mr. Scammell. "I recently had an interview with Sir Lomer Gouin, the premier, and found him heartily in sympathy with the movement. I have received a cordial letter from Mayor Drouin of Quebec stating that preparations for an important celebration were going on in that city, which had secured the enthusiastic approval of the city council. Sir Edward Morris, prime minister of Newfoundland, attended a recent luncheon of the American association at New York and intimated that steps would be taken to bring Newfoundland into line."

Speaking of activities on the other side of the border, Mr. Scammell said: "In the United States a most vigorous propaganda is being carried on and Mr. Stewart, chairman of the executive of the American Peace Centenary Association, informs me that pure, simple, useful base for mandies centres of celebration in the United States."

A Novelist's Singing Bird.

Mrs. Florence Barclay, the novelist, in an address at the Digbeth Institute the other evening, produced a beautifully worked little box, made of silver and studded with over a hundred pearls, emeralds, and rubies. When she touched a spring—the incident is described by Robin Goodfellow in The Birmingham Mail—the lid of the box jumped back, a silver bird popped out, and, with much realistic flapping of wings and craning of head, trilled forth a little song, with such a clear note that it was heard at the back of the hall. When the song was finished the bird dropped and the lid automatically fell.

Mrs. Barclay classes this beautiful toy among the most interesting and valuable of her possessions,. It formerly belonged to one of the most ancient families in Italy, and is about two hundred years old. Mrs. Barclay herself bought it for a good sum in Florence, when staying there on that Italian tour which produced "The Broken Halo."

WHEN CARUSO SINGS.

The Scene in His Dressing Room Before the Opera Begins.

The opera was "Aida." Caruso was to sing Rhadames, and he was in the dressing room. In his train came his two valets. Wonderful indeed were they. Celerity and deftness raised to the nth power, with silencers on their feet, they passed and repassed each other in inconceivably small spaces without once touching each other or bumping into their lord and master.

Caruso sits before a stationary wash stand, and one of the valets hands him a toothbrush and powder. Then for three solid minutes by his Swiss movement watch does Caruso cleanse and scrub and polish. The ever alert dressers stand behind him, watchful for a shrug of his shoulders, which they immediately interpret into a command.

Caruso takes a long breath, and he needs it. It must be a signal, for one of the valets has a glass of warm water in one hand and in the other a big, round pasteboard box full of little brownish crystals. Caruso takes a handful of the crystals and drops them into the warm water, where they dissolve immediately.

"That's gargling salt," he says. "I use it for my first gargle."

The gargle takes four minutes, and then comes the vaporizer. A glass of water containing bicarbonate of soda and glycerin is placed on a little stand. A rubber hose connected with the vaporizer is put into the glass, and a thin, forceful sputtering spray shoots out a full foot. Into this tiny Gatling gun spray Caruso plunges, mouth open.

Then the heavy artillery answers the little Gatling gun, for Caruso coughs back at the spray, chokes, bellows and sputters. Into each nostril, then deep down into the throat, go the bicarbonate of soda and glycerin over and over and over again until Caruso coughs no more.

The vaporizer bath has taken eight minutes by Caruso's infallible watch, but the end is not yet. There is a cold water gargle—sterilized water, please—minus the salt, to follow and that in turn by a spray for the nose only. Only about six sniffs apiece for each nostril and the spray is put away.

Then menthol and vaseline on absorbent cotton attached to long sticks and Caruso swabs out his throat with these as a gunner would a cannon.

"Dilates the throat," he says between gasps. One more gargle of cold water and the homage to the throat is finished. It has taken twenty-two minutes.

On goes his bathrobe, and he is in the corridor—smoking a cigarette! Twenty-two minutes of hard work he has given to that throat, and now he is calmly smoking a cigarette and inhaling every blessed puff of it. Shades of bicarbonate of soda, of gargling salt, of glycerin and of menthol, of what avail are you when a nervous man wants a cigarette and wants it now?—Charles Bloomingdale, Jr., in Saturday Evening Post.

Some Epigrams.

Tom Hood cast epigrams at himself in the face of death. His wife was preparing a large mustard plaster to apply to his shrunken chest. "My dear," said Hood, "that's a terrible lot of mustard for a small piece of beef."

Sir Walter Raleigh expressed himself in a similar mood after he mounted the scaffold. Feeling the edge of the axe, he said to the executioner, "This is a sharp medicine, but it is a cure for all diseases."

Charles Knight suggested that "Good Knight" would be sufficient for his memorial tablet.

A SPECIAL WEEK FOR THE SALVATION ARMY

Funds Are Needed to Carry Forward the Great Work

The Salvation Army in this city is now engaged in the annual Home and Foreign Missionary effort, and are making an appeal to the citizens in general, for, as is known, their work is undenominational. They minister to all.

The needs are great. Funds are needed to carry on the program of the year, not in Peterboro alone, not in the larger cities and not alone in Canada, but throughout the world. Citizens who may feel disposed to help, can send their contributions to Adjutant McElheney, 515 King Street.

QUEEN ZEPHRA

To-night will be your last opportunity to witness a peerless production like "Queen Zephra" at popular prices, so don't be a cave dweller, but get out and see things. The production is without a doubt one of the best that has ever visited Peterborough, and the house should be packed to its capacity. Seats are now on sale at the box office.

Combined orchestras to-night—Grand Opera House and Conservatory of Music.

MARK STREET TO-NIGHT.

Do not forget to hear the Rev. J. R. Webb at Mark Street Church tonight at eight o'clock, in connection with the W. M. S. thank offering. In addition to this, Miss M. Armstrong and Miss L. Garbutt will sing, and six young ladies will give a dialogue.

We would also ask you to thank the combined choirs for their beautiful music. We wish you and St. George's every success.

Yours sincerely,
Secretary W. G. Shiner.

TWO AFTERNOON CALLS FOR FIRE FIGHTERS

A Grass Fire and a Blaze in a House

The firemen answered a call yesterday afternoon to the residence of Mrs. Edgecombe Pearse, 586 Rubidge Street, where a grass fire burned part of the fence and a corner of the shed. The blaze was extinguished with very little damage.

At 4.50 p.m. the firemen were called to the southern end of the same street to the residence of Mr. H. C. Wilson, at103. Mrs. Wilson went out in the afternoon and left her children and several neighbors' children in charge. In some manner they set fire to a bed and the firemen had quite a little battle in getting the flames subdued, as they spread down between the walls. A few chemicals were used and the damage confined to about $200.

Lecture at Temple.

An Illustrated lecture on the Life of Christ is to be given at the Salvation Army Temple this afternoon and evening. Special music will also be rendered during the lecture.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE CASE OF THE WOODMEN

Editor of the Review:
Dear Sir:—

In last night's Review was contained an untrue report of the meeting of the Woodmen of the World held on Monday night last. The report states that Dr. Harrison, the Head Consul Commander, did not put in an appearance, and did not send any explanation. This is absolutely untrue as the explanation was given to the open Lodge. I heard it, and I was the person who gave the explanation to one of the Officers of the Lodge.

It is absolutely untrue that Camp Sherwood Forest threatened to drop the Order of the Woodmen of the World, and there was nothing in any resolution to this effect.

The report in the Review stating that if the proposed rates came into effect, the Camp would quit in a body is absolutely untrue and without the slightest foundation, and the person who gave that report to the Review, maliciously, wilfully and deliberately lied about what took place at that meeting. Such a person, whoever he may be, was either suffering from some disease such as senile paresis, affecting his mental capacity, or was so cowardly and dishonest that he deliberately misstated facts which he knew were untrue.

I have no desire to go into the question as to whether it is proper or not to increase the rates, but I do dislike to see such an untruthful and dishonest report going broadcast. Kindly give this matter some publicity in order to correct the false impression which may be made by the report in the Review.

Yours truly,
G. N. GORDON.

The report published in The Review was given by the secretary of the local Camp, and the reporter took considerable pains to impress upon this official, that he wished to give a correct report. The statements which appeared were practically dictated.

"MUTT AND JEFF" IN A NEW PLAY

Bud Fisher's now nationally famed cartoon characters, "Mutt and Jeff," are to re-appear at the Grand Opera House on Monday, April 27th in a brand new dress called "Mutt and Jeff in Panama." Gus Hill has given the new book a sumptuous production from every point of view. He has had a dazzling new set of spectacular scenery painted with some very startling mechanical effects and genuine dramatic thrills. New musical score and lyrics are furnished by Leo Edwards and the "funny business" is, of course, from the fertile brain of Bud Fisher, who knows better than anyone else what his brain folks are capable of. The offering, though new, is not in its experimental stages, as it had a thorough try-out last season under the title of "Mutt and Jeff, Special." It's reception was simply an innovation, but in spite of that fact, Mr. Hill spent his entire summer vacation perfecting the details of the play, which enables him to offer an entertainment absolutely perfect in every respect. It is an acknowledged fact that Mutt and Jeff" holds more records for phenomenal business than any other two attractions in the history of theatrical entertainment.

THEARTICAL

Of all the wondrous, charming, captivating, heart taking specimens of the female gender that inhabit this world, the widow has generally been conceded to be the most alluring, and such was proved with the presentation of the Red Widow at the Grand last evening before a fairly large audience.

With the latest musical hits, elaborate scenic effects and costumes, the company compares most favorably with any seen here for some time. The comedy, dreamy waltzes, and dances caught the audience and delighted them during the entire performance.

Carl Sherlock, the comedian in the role of the manufacturer of the famous C. H. D. Corsets was the constellation of the evening, and pulled off a number of local hits.

Lillian Ludlow, with her partner, Wm. Pruette, Jr., in the latest dances, also attracted the attention of the audience and came in for a goodly share of the applause. The leading lady, Lillian Concord, as the Red Widow displays more than average talent.

CONSTITUTIONALISTS JOIN WITH HUERTA

Americans Threatened With Violence, Concentrate at Ambassy---Embargo on Exportation of Army to Mexico Re-established

Canadian Press Despatch.

Washington, D.C., April 23.—Nelson O'Shaughnessy has been handed his passports by Huerta, and is preparing to leave Mexico City. This is believed to forecast a declaration of war upon the part of Huerta. Twelve Americans have been killed and fifty wounded at Vera Cruz, and after two days' fighting the American naval forces hold the entire city.

General Carranza, leader of the constitutionalists, has addressed a note to the American Government, resenting the seizure of Vera Cruz. He characterizes it as a "hostile act against the Mexican nation in violation of national sovereignity," and "invites" the United States to withdraw.

This was the situation which confronted the administration to-day. President Wilson, Secretaries Bryan and Marrison and General Wetherspoon, chief of the army staff were awakened at an early hour and discussed the developments.

The Mexican charge Algara has instructions from the Huerta Government to leave Washington. The determination of the United States to pause after having taken Vera Cruz may be modified by overnight developments. The navy is moving rapidly if necessary, to blockade all Mexican ports, and a big portion of the army is already scattered along the border, and is ready to move in an instant. Foreign markets were further depressed to-day by the suggestion in despatches that Carranza was ready to make a common cause with Huerta.

New York City, April 23.—A private despatch received here early this morning says that mobs were forming in the Mexican capital last night for an anti-American demonstration.

Washington, D.C., April 23.—The embargo on the exportation of arms to Mexico has been re-established. The Navy and War Departments have made plans for the early seizure of the railroad from Vera Cruz to Mexico City and two bridges on the line which are still intact must be immediately occupied and guarded if these plans are to be effective.

Washington, April 23.—Private code despatches of to-day's date from the source of unquestioned trustworthiness in Mexico City have been communicated to the Government, sating that Americans on the streets have been threatened with violence and are concentrating at the American embassy for mutual protection.

Huerta's supporters and constitutionalists at Tampico have united to oppose American operations.

NO ORDER YET FOR THE MILITIA.

Washington, April 23.—No order has yet been issued by the war department calling out the militia, and it is said that Congress must first authorise this movement and provide the large amount necessary for mobilization and concentration. In the meantime, a complete change in the military campaign may be immediately necessitated by the menacing attitude of the Constitutionalists, as a large force will be required on the northern border of Mexico. A growing turbulence and hostility towards Americans is reported from Northern Mexico. Five thousand Mexican federals who fled across the border at Fort Bliss, some months ago, are in a barbed wire enclosure at that point, insufficiently guarded, and the war department must take steps for increasing the military detachments there.

BRITISH SUBJECTS WARNED TO LEAVE.

El Paso, April 23.—British subjects in Mexico were warned to-day to leave immediately. The warning came from the British Ambassador at Washington to British Consul Myles here, who immediately wired the consuls in Mexico. There are about seven hundred Britons in Mexico.

HUERTA DELIBERATELY PLANNED INSULTS TO THE UNITED STATES

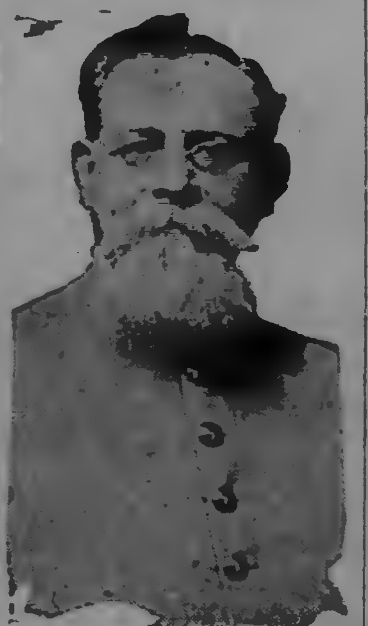
In Hope of Uniting Forces in Mexico—Carranza Resents Intervention.

WASHINGTON, April 23. — News that Gen. Venustiano Carranza, Constitutionalist chief, had regarded the seizure of Vera Cruz by the American naval forces as an act of hostility to the Mexican nation, fell like a bombshell in official circles last night.

President Wilson has especially disclaimed any act of hostility to the Mexican people, particularizing Gen. Huerta as the object of the American operations to secure reprisal for offences at Tampico and elsewhere against the American flag. Consequently the Washington Government had hoped the Constitutionalists would remain silent and not interject themselves into the imbroglio. The Carranza letter, however, confirms the fears of many officials that the Constitutionalists might side with Huerta. This was the one possibility which has been discussed in administration circles all day as the most series phase in the situation.

Should hostility on the part of the Constitutionalists crystalise the plans of the army will be changed. There were reports during the day that the joint army and navy board already had recommended the restoration of the embargo on arms.

Action by Congress approving the President's course in using the army and navy in view of the situation he had presented in his message, and the receipt of details of the fighting at Vera Cruz were the chief developments of the day.



GEN. VENUSTIANO CARRANZA.

Future steps were uncertain. The President has determined that his course shall be gradual. No orders have been issued to seize the customs-house at Tampico. It is the purpose of the administration to keep order in Vera Cruz and await the full effect upon Huerta of the first act of reprisal by the American Government.

There is every reason to believe that the railroad running inland from Vera Cruz for twenty miles, together

SIR JAMES WHITNEY.

TORONTO, April 23.—Sir James Whitney received a pleasant surprise yesterday afternoon, when a committee representing the Conservative members of the Legislature called on him and presented him with a check for $2,000 as a token of their affection and esteem. The Premier's condition was not one that would permit him to make an extended reply, but he spoke feelingly and expressed his heartfelt thanks at the kindness and sympathy of his followers in the House. The presentation was made by Mr. George H. Gooderham (South Toronto), and he was accompanied by Mr. H. C. Scholfield (South Wellington) and Mr. T. Herbert Lannox (North York).

SEWERS

Work Will Start on Monday

The sewer constructions will be commenced on Monday. At a meeting of the Board of Works last evening it was decided to add to the list, McDonnel Street from Cross to Park, Belmont to Walton on Hunter Street.

Alderman Johnston objected to sewers being laid at the latter place, saying that it would be some time before residences would be erected. It looked like a pull. There were numerous places around the city that needed sewers a hundred times worse than these people.

Alderman Green, who asked for the sewer, spoke of the dire necessity of such sewer. This particular spot in former years had suffered from epidemics of fever.

"Oh, tear away, the sewers won't go down this year, anyway," retorted Ald. Johnston as the motion was passed.

QUIT BECAUSE WORK WAS TOO HARD HE SAID

The Reply of One Man Who Obtained Street Work

"ROLL CIGARETTES"

A Discussion of Labor at the Board of Works

At the Board of Works meeting last evening, Ald. Green introduced the subject of labor.

"How many men will be needed for the sewers?" asked Ald. Green.

"About 45," remarked City Engineer Parsons.

"Well, won't that decrease this hard winter labor question?" asked Ald. Greene.

Then a discussion was launched, and it was explained that some of the Englishmen who had been raising "cain" about not getting work, had been taken on by Mr. Davis on the street work this week. Most of them had quit. Chairman Duncan who saw some of them, questioned one man as to why he quit. His answer was that the work was too hard.

"Oh, they roll cigarettes and call that work," was the remark of one of the aldermen.

"Who wants a man who is rolling cigarettes all the time, and wants his time about 4 o'clock?"

One of the men when questioned why he ceased work, said he was drunk, and had been drunk all winter.

"Some drunk," chorused the members.

Mr. Davis, of Foley and Gleason, had remarked to the City Engineer that from present indications they would have to send out for labor as the local men apparently had no taste for the job. They kept a number of Italians all the year around, owing to the fact that they were experts in their line and good men. The final decision of the Board was that Italians were making fairly good citizens on the whole, and that they were the men for the construction work.

PARENTS' CIRCLE.

A meeting of the Parents' Circle of the Queen Mary School, will be held on Friday evening in the school at 8 o'clock. All parents are urgently requested to attend.

SEND POLE QUESTION TO THE RAILWAY BOARD

C.P.R. Superintendent Writes That City Will Have to Assume Part of Cost of Removal—Means Expenditure of $1000

The matter of moving the C. P. R. poles from George Street will likely go before the Board of Railway Commissioners. At the Board of Works last evening an extract of a report read from Supt. Marshall, of the C. P. R., was to the effect that the city would have to assume the cost of $1,000 for removing the poles from the main street.

"Let her go to the Railway Board, boys," remarked Ald. Johnston, and the rest agreed.

Repairs for Bridge.

The Jackson Park Bridge on Smith Street will be repaired immediately and the Engineer will report on the estimated cost for a cement floor for the bridge which was reported in a dangerous condition.

The sidewalk on Hunter Street between Mark and Driscoll Terrace, near Lipsett's Hotel, will be filled in and a cement walk laid.

The C. P. R. drain matter at Sherbrooke Street was marked O.K. and rubbed off the slate..

Railway Extension.

It was decided that the Chairman and Engineer confer with Mr. Andrew Brown, who owns the house and lot on the corner of Charlotte and Park, which is in the way of the new project of the Street Railway Company in their extension to the boundary and down the Monaghan Road to Patterson Street.

The Peterborough Light and Power Company's offer of $60 in full of account for the leakage of gas at the Nicholl's Hospital will be accepted.

The Braund Property.

That they will have to build out on to the side walk for nine inches in order to get the full amount of their land, was the information handed the Board of Works by the Braund Bros., who are building on Charlotte Street. This information was according to Surveyor Wilkinson, of Norwood, who surveyed the property.

The Board will have the opinion of an outside surveyor on the matter.

POWER MINISTER'S STATEMENTS MADE IN THE LEGISLATURE

The Government was more than anxious to give power to the people in the central and eastern parts of the province who had been so patient, declared Mr. Beck, but progress had been hampered in the Trent Valley district by the handing out to private corporations by the Laurier Government of the splendid canal powers created there. He intimated that the Government was applying itself to the problem of removing that district from the grip of the private corporations by acquiring all the rights of the Seymour Company.—Mail and Empire.

REFUSED RENEWAL FOR SHOP LICENSE

Hastings Man Gets Three Months to Dispose of Stock

Hastings, April 23.—The license commissioners at their meeting renewed the two local hotel licenses, but gave Mr. P. M. Howard three months to dispose of his liquor stock. Deputations from Havelock, Norwood, Seymour, Percy and Hastings presented petitions against renewing the license, and the various parties addressing the board, stated that although they regarded Mr. Howard as a man who had kept the law and had no grievance against him personally they wanted the license cancelled, as they claimed it effected their municipalities. A counter petition signed by 115 ratepayers from Hastings was presented by Mr. Howard, asking for a renewal, and stating that the people here had given their verdict by vote two years ago, but despite this the commissioners could not see their way to renew the license.

GREETINGS REACH THE ST. GEORGE'S SOCIETY

Came From London, Eng., Ottawa and Hamilton.

President Walter Stocker, of the St. George's Society, is in receipt of a telegram of greetings from the Society in London, England, also from the societies in Ottawa and Hamilton. This is St. George's Day, but the local society is not holding a celebration, as fitting recognition of the day was made, by the holding of the service at St. John's Church on Monday evening.

The greetings are expressed as follows:—

President,
St. George's Society,
Peterboro, Ont.

"England expects that every man this day will do his duty."

Howard Ruff, Secretary,
Royal Society of St. George,
London, England.

The Ottawa Society wires "St. George's Society, Ottawa, sends you hearty greetings. God save the King."

"Greetings from the officers and members of St. George's Society, Hamilton," says the wire from Hamilton.

MEXICAN STOCK HAS FALLEN EIGHT POINTS

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, April 23.—All dividends on the Mexican Railway Co. loans were passed to-day, and the first preference stock fell altogether, eight points.

W.C.T.U. MEETING.

The regular monthly meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union will be held in the Y.W.C.A., Simcoe Street, to-morrow afternoon at 3.30. Everyone is cordially invited.

THANK OFFERING

W. M. S. of Two Methodist Churches Hold Annual Service.

The thankoffering service of George Street Methodist Church W. M. S. was held last night instead of the regular prayer meeting, and the service was of interest to the large gathering. Rev. R. G. Peever conducted the meeting, Mr. D. W. Dumble lead in prayer, and Mrs. A. R. Campbell offered the consecration prayer.

The thank offering amounted to $146, an increase of about $50 over last year.

The programme as previously announced was carried out.

At Mark Street.

The thank offering service held last evening in Mark Street Methodist Church under the auspices of the W. M. S. was a grand success. Rev. J. R. Webb, of the Murray Street Baptist Church, delivered an exceptionally fine address on the life and work of Dan Crawford. The speaker dealt with the subject in a very instructive manner, and related several interesting instances in the life of this great missionary.

Miss M. Armstrong and Miss L. S. Garbutt rendered a very impressive duet, "Only Jesus."

A dialogue was also very well rendered, the characters being taken by Mrs. Speer, Misses M. Succee, M. Mesley, A. McIntyre, R. Record, and M. Cook.

The thank offering amounted to something over $60.00.

Rev. C. E. Cragg, pastor of Mark Street, was chairman.

MR. BURNHAM IN OPPOSITION TO THE EDWARDS CO. BILL

An application by W. C. Edwards and Co. of Ottawa, to secure power to generate electricity and dispose of their surplus of power was held up by the private bills committee to-day until the Hydro Electric Commission of Ontario has had an opportunity to express its opinion of the bill.

As soon as the order was called in committee, J. H. Burnham of West Peterborough asked if anybody had gone into the question of rivalry or competition on the part of this company with respect to the Hydro Commission.

"This is a serious question," said Mr. Burnham, "for if anybody desired to upset the whole hydro contract for Ottawa this would be one way of going about it."

"Why not let them produce it; they might sell to the Hydro Electric Commission," said Hon. George Perley.

"Yes, but it also involves this, that they might upset the whole hydro electric undertaking in eastern Ontario," retorted Mr. Burnham. "The Hydro Electric Commission wants power, but it wants to have control of it. These people would be absolutely independent with this charter."—Ottawa Citizen.

NEW PIPE ORGAN IS BEING INSTALLED

The large pipe organ for the Church of the Sacred Heart arrived yesterday from its makers, Cassavante Freres, St. Hyacinthe, and Messrs. E. Le Doux and R. St. Jacques, of that firm, are now in the city installing it. It is expected that it will be at least two weeks before the organ is in readiness.

The new organ for Knox Church has also been purchased from this firm, and will arrive in a few days.

Les. Stevens Unfortunate.

Mr. Les. Stevens is rather unfortunate. At Lindsay recently he injured his hand while operating an ice cream freezer, and yesterday one of his delivery horses died on Bond Street.

DUST

Men Who Will Endeavor to Keep it Down

The successful tenders for the street watering of the city, as let by the Board of Works last evening, are:

Western District—J. McNeill, $659

North-western District — Justus Blodgett, $629.29.

Northern District—Alex. O'Brien, $595.

Eastern District—J. P. Francis, $510.

Other tenders received were Albert Valois, East City, $610; Adam Cox, East City, $500.

As usual, the southern district was not tendered on, and the matter was left in the hands of the City Engineer and Chairman to make the necessary arrangements.

ADDITIONS TO WALK PROGRAM

Board of Works Recommend Some More Sidewalks

The sidewalk programme is steadily growing. Last evening the Board of Works discovered that they still had a few sidewalks to construct. The additions are:

King Street N.S. to George Street, to Water Street.

King Street S.S. Rubidge Street, to Reid Street.

Lock Street E.S. Ware Street, to Gladstone.

Hunter Street N. and S. Belmont, to Walton.

Romaine Street B.S. Park, to Monaghan Road.

CITY MAY MAKE CEMENT PIPE

Expense Would Not Be Great, Says the City Engineer

According to remarks at the Board of Works meeting last evening, the city may launch the proposition of manufacturing their own cement pipe. This would be of assistance to the city in keeping down expense.

City Engineer Parsons informed the Board that this cement pipe, as made by Taylor and Hall, was as good as the outside pipe purchased. Similar pipe could be made by the city at very little cost.

The Chairman and Engineer will look into the matter and report to the Board. Meanwhile the necessary pipe will be procured from Taylor and Hall, the members being of the opinion that they might as well patronize home industry when they can.

REAL ESTATE

TEN TRANSFERS IN ONE WEEK BY A. BROWN & CO.

Real estate is booming in Peterborough, if we may judge from reports supplied by A. Brown and Co. They report ten transfers by this one firm in a week running into many thousands of dollars. These transfers are mostly residential, and the prospects are that a large real estate business will be done this year. The people of this city are expressing confidence in its future by investing here rather than in the West, and, if the factories advance in proportion to other things, Peterborough will have a record year of growth.

LOCAL FIRM GETS CONTRACT

WM. HAMILTON COMPANY TO FURNISH POLES AND STANDARDS

The Council of the Municipality of Outremont, Montreal, Quebec, last night awarded the contract for 125 combination poles, similar to those in this city used by the Hydro-Electric and Street Railway, and 375 standards for street lighting to the William Hamilton Company, Limited, of this city. The cost is, we understand, in the neighborhood of $21,000.

MAN SENTENCED HERE IS WANTED IN BELLEVILLE

Guelph, April 23.—Sergeant Napham, of the Belleville police force, arrived in the city this morning with a warrant for the arrest of a man named O'Connell, who finished a six months' term at the prison farm for horse stealing near Peterboro. He is wanted this time for procuring goods under false pretences. He was taken back to Belleville this afternoon.

MUMPS AND PUPILS.

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, APRIL 23, 1914

PETERBOROUGH SHOULD BE THERE.

HAS THE CITY COUNCIL of Peterborough ever considered the problem of city planning in regard to this city ? What, you may ask, is city planning ? It is the exercise of foresight to permit the orderly and sightly development of a city and its environs along rational lines with the health, conveniences, commercial and industrial development of its people in view. City planning involves a plan for the city's growth. Such a plan has been found necessary from the rise of many perplexing municipal problems. Overcrowding, narrow streets, slums, unsanitary conditions, the lack of breathing spaces, the want of recreation grounds for old and young, the unhealthiness of city life, these are some of the problems that have caused the birth of the science of city planning as an answer to them.

The basis for a city plan must be a civic survey covering the facts of the physical environment of the people ; the social facts concerning the people themselves ; the economic and financial facts as to the resources that bear upon public improvements, and the facts as to the local and administrative conditions which control the local situation. A city plan thus attempts to lay out the growth of the city along the best possible lines. It aims to secure conveniences, to safe-guard health, to make the city a beautiful place in which to live. It aims to provide some outlet for the play instinct in children, and recreation grounds for all. It does not aim to provide these things haphazardly ; it aims to place the park, for example, in the most beneficial location ; it aims to overcome the evils of new surveys, such as too cheap house construction, and too close building.

In Canada we have been so absorbed in industrial development, in merely the profit side of the ledger, that we have overlooked, in a great many cases, proper provision for city growth. Thus, most of our cities have streets that intersect at right angles in the most monotonous and common place way. There has not been provision made for arteries carrying the main lines of traffic from the centre of the city to the outskirts. The bulk of traffic goes along strees, in a great many cities, that are altogether too narrow for the business. Then, the cut and dried square block design, prevents speed in going from one part to another in the city. In some cities, arteries for traffic have been provided, which have also been utilized to provide driveways and to beautify the city. There has been a great deal of development in the science of city building, with which the majority of people are not acquainted.

The city of Vienna, Austria, has a great circular drive-way like the rim of a wheel ; the city of Paris has main thoroughfares converging to several centres; many American cities have adopted plans for their business and growth, along original lines to suit their peculiar conditions, all of which shows that city planning will sooner or later, become a necessity in every fair sized city. In the very large cities, it has meant a tremendous expenditure. where city planning has begun late. In new cities like those in Canada, that are yet much smaller than they will likely be, a great amount of money will be saved future tax payers, if some definite plan is followed before the city becomes very large.

The International Conference on city planning, which is to be held in Toronto from Monday, May 25th to the 27th, will be a great benefit to those desiring to get an idea of what city planning really means. Addresses will be given by men recognized as authorities on subjects of vital interest to every Canadian city. The conference will be opened by the Governor-General in Convocation Hall. Such subjects as Provision for Future Rapid Transit, the Canadian Town Planning Act, Garden Cities, Recreation Facilities, will be discussed. The Town Planning Act is of special importance, the draught of it being prepared by a committee appointed by the Canadian Conservation Commission. The cost of membership is $5.00, which entitles the holder to attend all the sessions, the luncheons, tours of inspection, closing banquet and to receive the published proceedings. Peterborough should have a representative at this Conference; the expense is very small, and the knowledge to be gained there, will no doubt be of much interest to this city, provided of course, that the authorities put the ideas they get into practice.

FISHING FOR A POLICY.

MUCH SPECULATION is rife in Ottawa regarding the close of the Budget debate, when the Liberal Opposition is expected to announce its fiscal policy. Of late, the Liberal ship of state has been battered about with gusts from all points of the compass. It began with reciprocity to which the Liberals admitted in the House they were still committed. Then came, at different times, free wheat, free food and free agricultural implements. To the last plank the Liberal Party is committed by the Knowles resolution for which they voted in the House. There is a noticeable repetition of the word "free" in these various proposals. When the Liberals were in power Sir Wilfrid Laurier talked adequate protection when Mr. Borden supported moderate protection. Now the Liberals show a tendency to go to Free Trade. A brief survey of the Liberal party's fiscal proposals shows how shiftless their policy is and how little confidence can be placed in what they propose. Mr. Borden talked moderate protection in opposition and such he has followed in office. If the Liberals decide out and out for Free Trade as they have almost done, there will be a clear cut distinction between the policies of the two parties in Canada. Of course there is already a marked distinction in efficiency and administrative capacity, but, as far as the Laurier Opposition is concerned it appears to be fishing for a policy. Apparently the bait doesn't attract, and in the meantime, the Conservatives are acquitting themselves well.

WAR FOR A FLAG INCIDENT.

GREAT WARS turn on little causes. The murder of Benton, a British subject, was not sufficient to cause armed intervention in Mexico, nor was the killing of Americans and great damage to the property of Americans in Mexico an excuse important enough to make the United States resort to arms. A mere flag incident, a minor technical detail of the apology of President Huerta to the United States over the seizure of some American marines, has been the sufficient reason for an exchange of shots. True, war has not been declared, Mexico is just being disciplined, but one engagement has already taken place with some losses to the United States. Many people hoped that the Mexicans would fight out their own internal peace but now a flag incident has precipitated a combat with the United States. The flag of a nation may be but an emblem, its power and influence depends principally on sentiment, and, intangible as sentiment is, impossible of reduction to a concrete estimate of its scope and power, sentiment, or the flag, is quite real and strong enough to plunge two countries into the throes of war.

President Wilson is at a disadvantage in applying the strong arm to Mexico with the intention of only blockading the country, for the jingo press, of which the Hearst papers are the most powerful have been stirring the people to demand vigorous intervention. To hold force in leash when force is applied is an exceedingly difficult thing and where it will lead the United States cannot now be said.

HYDRO TO ACQUIRE SEYMOUR CO.

THE SPEECH of the Hon. Adam Beck in the Legislature has cleared the Hydro-Electric sky for Peterborough. Mr. Beck stated the Whitney Government was more than anxious to give power to the people of the central and eastern parts of the province, but progress had been hampered in the Trent Valley District by the Laurier Government handing out to private corporations the splendid canal powers which existed in that waterway. Mr. Beck said the Government was applying itself to the problem to free this waterway from the grip of private companies by acquiring all the rights of the Seymour Power Company. Citizens of Peterborough are now assured that daylight is appearing in the tangled electric problem in this city.

A MEMBER'S DUTY.

MR. BURNHAM, M.P., in writing to a friend in this city, has pointed to a recent incident which shows how absolutely necessary in the public interest it is for a member to be free of all other interests, than the public interests. The case he referred to is the application of the Edwards Lumber Company, of Ottawa, for an enlargement of its charter, enabling it to further develop and sell electric power. If the company could acquire permission to make use of public streams for this purpose, the whole plan of Hydro-Electric would or might be at the mercy of those seeking to drive it out of existence, and get the market for themselves in the future. This is the usual method of private interests. Mr. Burnham took immediate objection in committee until the Hydro-Commission was heard from. The Commission sustained the objections, and wired requesting postponement until it could be heard from. A member of parliament representing private or municipal interests would be restrained from taking such a stand to the great detriment of the public interests. A public representative should belong to no company and have no solicitorship for private or other interests, even of a semi-public kind if, as there must be, there is any chance of conflict with his duty to the state. It is for this reason also, that some urge that a sufficient sessional indemnity be paid members to give them no excuse for adopting a false or equivocal position.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE RECENT EFFORT of some of the old bondholders, to realize on the old land subsidy under the charter of the Central Railway of Canada, has nothing to do with the present railway company, which the president recently assured Mr. Burnham, would soon be finished.

New Zealand Belongs to the Empire.

Calgary Herald (Con.)

New Zealand's Premier says that dominion is not going to make any more contributions to the British navy, but will spend its money training fighting men for service either in New Zealand or England. If anyone were to suggest such a policy for Canada our Liberal friends would protest that Canada had nothing to do with wars of the empire not directly affecting this country.

To Maintain Our Honor.

Canadian Courier.

Not because we desire paternalism in our government, but because we desire to maintain our national honour at home and abroad, we need new laws to

(1) Prevent any board of directors from issuing common stock as a bonus or without adding to the resources of any company.

(2) Prevent any land speculator from selling town lots in a subdivision which has not been approved by a provincial government and countersigned by a municipality.

(3) Prevent any city or town issuing debentures which have not been approved as advisable and necessary by a provincial municipal board.

(4) Ensure that every man who acts dishonestly in the public sale of lands, stocks, bonds or securities of any description shall be speedily brought to justice by a public prosecutor.

These laws we need to protect the savings of our weaker citizens and to preserve our credit in the money markets of the world. Finally, such laws are necessary to maintain our own good opinion of ourselves and our own sense of national honour.

CHICKENS

By Walt Mason

Now man goes forth and makes his garden, a hard and painful grind; and then the crime beyond all pardon destroys his peace of mind. His neighbor keeps a string of chickens, and they, inflamed with greed, come o'er and scratch to beat the dickens, and dig up all the seed. And then the man whose wasted labor has set him seeing red, walks o'er to see that hennish neighbor and manicures his head. Thus village feuds are often started, and people raise the deuce, and men and dames are broken hearted because some hens ran loose. In any town where leggy chickens run loose, in scorn of law, you may be sure that trouble thickens, and hearts are sore and raw. Old hens and roosters have created more trouble, caused more tears, than could in seven weeks be stated by seven auctioneers. If you must keep a herd of Dorkings or other brands of fowls, oh, take them where their frantic workings won't stir up grief and howls. To some lone wilderness escort them, some desert far away; there you may cuddle them and sort them, and watched the blamed fools lay.

Birthdays of Note

THURSDAY, APRIL TWENTY-THIRD.

SIR JOHN BOYD, who has been Chancellor of Ontario for the past thirty-three years, is to-day seventy-seven years of age. He is a jurist of high repute, holding the esteem of the members of bench and bar not only in Ontario but throughout the Dominion. His ready wit, as well as kindliness of disposition, were never better displayed than on somewhat embarassing occasion a number of years ago. The Chancellor was holding Court in London and the day being excessively warm he adjourned the session in the middle of the afternoon. To seek some respite he wandered off along the banks of the Thames and finding a secluded spot, was preparing to plunge into the water when a man appeared. The latter proved to be a fussy solicitor who had tracked him to his retreat. He apologized profusely for troubling the judge but was anxious to secure an order of the court. Sir John sighed and then remarked resignedly, "Ubi jus ibi curia," which being interpreted meant that where the judge was there the court was also to be found.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ABOUT BOYS.

Editor of The Review :

Dear Sir :—

A timely article entitled "The results of educating boys in city streets," appeared editorially in one of your contemporaries recently. As the subject is of interest to a large number of readers I trust you will allow such further discussion of it as your valuable space will permit.

The article mentions the "hundreds of boys" who invade the streets first for business purposes, support of widowed mothers, etc., the depraving influences to which they are exposed and the tendency of this experience to produce such characters as the four gunmen recently put to death in New York. "They will learn," says the editor, "no more evil in the streets of New York than they may learn in the streets of Toronto, and once they require a taste for this life a thousand parks or playgrounds will not lure them away from it." He mentions, too, the cost of the state of maintaining these boys when they graduate into the criminal classes.

Now if street life and education for boys is so beset with dangers in New York and equal dangers in Toronto, are its dangers any less in Peterborough, and if so, why? Scores of boys loiter in the streets and public places of this city without any "business purposes" even. For example, a group of boys of various ages who neither go to work or school make the Brock Street Rink their regular meeting place. On the door-step or the roadside nearby they await the opening of the door. Cigarettes, hoodlum play and coarse conversation serve to pass the time until the rink is opened ; afterwards stunts of roller skates on the sidewalk, occasional war-whoops and bad language vary the pastime. Conspicuous to be seen on the finer afternoons of last week were four boys of the embryo "gunman" type. One rode a bicycle on the sidewalk at intervals for two hours making his headquarters at the rink. There is no chance for doubt about the direction in which this kind of education tends. What about the example upon younger children attracted to this vicinity by the noise ? What about the moral safety of young unprotected girls left in company with such boys in such a place ?

What is the use of abstract discussion concerning the streets of New York or Toronto while concrete cases at our doors are passed over in profound silence ? What is the motive for so carefully avoiding mention of a notorious resort for idle boys at home, while taking as an example the streets of New York and Toronto ?

To remedy this sort of thing, attention will have to be turned to the interested parties.

THE WOODMEN'S REPORT.

Editor Review, City.

Dear Sir:

In last night's Review I stated that a certain report respecting what took place at a meeting of the Woodmen of the World, was untrue.

In consulting the Secretary of the Woodmen of the World, I understand from him and others, that apparently your reporter misunderstood the purport of the conversation he had with him and the discussion which took place respecting the rates, and in that manner a report was printed as it appeared in the Review.

You can quite well understand that I do not desire to reflect upon the veracity or good name of the Secretary, who is a well known representative citizen of the community. For that reason I wish it to be understood that the fault was apparently in the report being misunderstood.

Yours truly,

G. N. GORDON.

Peterboro, April 23, 1914.

COWARDICE COURT

BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON

"Just a minute, your lordship," called Shaw. "No doubt you were timing yourself a bit ago, but that's no reason why you should leave your watch on my land. Of course I've nothing against the watch, and, while I promise you faithfully that any human being from your side of the log who ventures over on my side shall be ejected in one way or another, it would seem senseless for me to kick this timepiece into the middle of next week."

"Don't you dare kick that watch. It's a hundred years old."

"Far be it from me to take advantage of anything so old. Don't you want it any longer?"

"Certainly, sir. I wouldn't part from it."

"Then why don't you come over and get it? Do you expect me to break the rule by coming over on to your land to hand it to you?"

"I shouldn't call that trespassing, don't you know," began his lordship.

"Ah! Nevertheless, if you want this watch you'll have to come over and get it."

"By Jove, now, that's a demmed mean trick. I'm mounted. Beastly annoying. I say, would you mind tossing it up to me?"

"I wouldn't touch it for $10. By the way, I'll just read this note of yours." Lord Bazelhurst nervously watched him as he read; his heart lightened perceptibly as he saw a good humored smile struggle to the tall young man's face. It was, however, with some misgiving that he studied the broad shoulders and powerful frame of the erstwhile poacher. "Very good of you, I'm sure, to warn me."

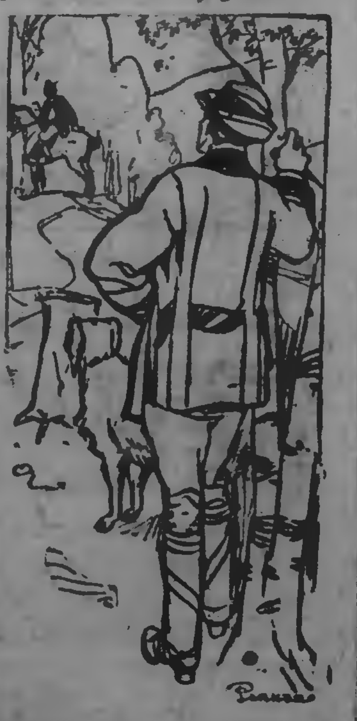
"Good of me? It was imperative, let me tell you, sir. No man can abuse my servants and trample all over my land and disturb my fish"—

"Excuse me, but I haven't time to listen to all that. The note's sufficient. You've been practicing the running mount until it looks well nigh perfect to me, so I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll step back thirty paces and then you come over and get the watch—if you're not afraid of me—and I'll promise"—

"Afraid? Demmit, sir, didn't I say I was Lord Bazelhurst? Of the guards, sir, and the Seventy-first? Conf"—

"You come over and get the watch and then see if you can get back to the horse and mount before I get to the log. If I beat you there, you lose. How's that?"

"I decline to make a fool of myself. Either you will restore my watch to me or I shall instantly go before the authorities and take out a warrant. I came to see you on business, sir, not folly. Lady Bazelhurst herself would have come had I been otherwise occupied, and I want to assure you of her contempt. You are a disgrace to her countrymen. If you ever put foot on our land I shall have you thrown into the river. Demmit, sir, it's no laughing matter. My watch, sir."



"Afraid? Didn't I say I was Lord Bazelhurst?"

"Come and get it."

"Scalawag!"

"By George, do you know if you get too personal I will come over there." Randolph Shaw advanced with a threatening scowl.

"Ha, ha!" laughed his lordship shrilly. "I dare you!" He turned his horse's head for home and moved off a yard or more. "Whoa! Curse you! This is the demdest horse to manage I've ever owned. Stand still, confound you! Whoa!"

"He'll stand if you stop licking him."

"Halloa! Hey, Bazelhurst!" came a far distant voice. The adversaries glanced down the road and beheld two horsemen approaching from Bazelhurst Villa—the duke and the count.

"By Jove," muttered his lordship, suddenly deciding that it would not be convenient for them to appear on the scene at its present stage, "my friends are calling me. Her ladyship doubtless is near at hand. She rides, you know—I mean dem you! Wouldn't have her see you for a fortune. Not another word, sir! You have my orders. Stay off or I'll—throw you off!" This last threat was almost shrieked and was plainly heard by the two horsemen.

"By Jove, he's facing the fellow," said the duke to the count.

"Ees eet Shaw? Parbleu!"

"I'll send some one for that watch. Don't you dare to touch it," said his lordship in tones barely audible. Then he loped off to meet his friends and turn them back before they came too close for comfort. Randolph Shaw laughed heartily as he watched the retreat. Seeing the newcomers halt and then turn abruptly back into their tracks, he picked up the watch and strolled off into the woods, taking a short cut for the dirt road which led up to his house.

"I had him begging for mercy," explained his lordship as he rode along. "I was on his land for half an hour before he would come within speaking distance. Come along. I need a drink."

Young Mr. Shaw came to the road in due time and paused, after his climb, to rest on a stone at the wayside. He was still a mile from home and in the loneliest part of his domain. The Bazelhurst line was scarcely a quarter of a mile behind him. Trees and underbrush grew thick and impenetrable alongside the narrow, winding road. The light of heaven found it difficult to struggle through to the highway below. Picturesque but lonely and somber indeed were his surroundings.

"Some one coming?" he said aloud, as Bonaparte pricked up his ears and looked up the road. A moment later a horse and rider turned the bend a hundred yards away and came slowly toward him. He started to his feet with an exclamation. The rider was a woman, and she was making her way leisurely toward the Bazelhurst lands. "Lady Bazelhurst, I'll bet my hat," thought he with a quiet whistle. "By George, this is awkward! My first trespasser is in petticoats. I say, she's a beauty—a ripping beauty. Lord, Lord, what do such women mean by giving themselves to little rats like Bazelhurst? Oh, the shame of it! Well, it's up to me. If I expect to 'make good' I've just got to fire her off these grounds."

Naturally he expected to be very polite about it—instinctively so. He could not have been otherwise. The horsewoman saw him step into the middle of the road, smiling oddly but deferentially. Her slim figure straightened, her color rose, and there was a—yes, there was a relieved gleam in her eyes. As she drew near he advanced, hat in hand, his face uplifted in his most winning smile—savoring more of welcome than of repellence.

MAKING GOOD STOCK.

The stock pot or saucepan must be scrupulously clean.

A dime's worth of bones and any trimmings of meat, one pound of vegetables to one gallon of water, are generally allowed for soup for eight persons.

Skim frequently during the early stages of the proceedings.

A cupful of cold water thrown in causes the scum to rise.

The vegetables must be added after the bones have been boiled for two or three hours and all scum has been removed.

The vegetables should be simmered until they are cooked, and no longer.

The seasonings should be added carefully, it being better to season too little than too highly.

Never allow the stock to cool in the pan in which it is cooked. The liquid should be poured off at once through a colander into an earthenware bowl.

When cold the fat should be removed. Never leave the fat caked on the surface. This hastens the stock turning sour and does not preserve it, as some cooks erroneously imagine.

Bacon bones, ham bones and bacon rind are all valuable assets to the stock pot.

Bedouin Thief Trackers.

A curious profession among the Bedouins is that of the "thief trackers." Being without paddocks or stables and their animals always more or less at liberty, theft of stock would appear to be an easy and frequent matter. Each tribe, however, has its little company of "trackers," and it would be either a bold or an ignorant man indeed who ventured to interfere with an Arab's live stock. There was one instance in which a camel stolen from a camp near Ismailia was, after weeks of labor, successfully tracked to the Sudan, where the beast was recaptured and summary vengeance wreaked upon the robbers. Selected for natural ability and trained from boyhood to discriminate between each animal's footprint, this faculty becomes so highly developed that a particular horse's or camel's trail is unerringly picked up from among the thousands of impressions on the dusty highway.

Lesson IV.—Second Quarter, For April 26, 1914.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xv, 1-10. Memory Verses, 8-10—Golden Text, Luke xv, 10—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

There was something in His teaching which reached the hearts of these publicans and sinners who were so despised by the self righteous Pharisees. He was full of grace and truth; they knew the truth that they were sinners and they needed the grace that was in Him. He taught as one having authority and not as the scribes; never man spake like this man (Matt. vii, 29; John vii, 46). That which the Pharisees sneeringly said of Him, "This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them," was, and still is, gloriously true. He is still saying, "If any man hear my voice and open the door I will come in to him and will sup with him and he with Me" (Rev. iii, 20).

The word here translated "receiveth" is generally translated "waiting or looking for." Weymouth's rendering is, "He gives a welcome to notorious sinners." Not only does He receive sinners when they come to Him (John vi, 37), but He is on the lookout for them. He came to seek and to save that which was lost (Luke xix, 10). If we are truly His disciples, as in the last lesson, we, too, will seek in all the world the lost ones whom He came to save, the "whosoevers" who will make up His body, the church.

Their murmuring led Him to speak the threefold parable of the lost sheep, the lost coin and the lost son, in which we see the love of the Son as the shepherd, the love of the Spirit and the love of the Father. The love of God is the greatest topic in all the Bible and was specially manifest in His giving His only Son for us that we might not perish, as it is written, "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent His only begotten Son into the world that we might live through Him." "Hereby perceive we the love of God because He laid down His life for us" (I John iii, 16; iv, 9). The story of the shepherd and the lost sheep is found also in Matt. xviii, 11-14, and the record of the Good Shepherd is found most fully in John x, where He not only cares for the sheep, but gives His life for them. In our lesson He is seen seeking till He finds; laying it on His shoulders, rejoicing, bringing it safely home and calling others to rejoice with Him.

In Heb. xiii, 20, 21, He is the Great Shepherd who, having found and saved, works in us that which is well pleasing in His sight. In I Pet. v, 1-4, He is the chief shepherd rewarding His own for faithful service. Thus we have again the threefold aspect of our relation to Him as in last lesson—saved, serving, waiting for Him. I have often been glad that when He finds His sheep He brings it home; He does not drop it by the way. And what a place it is to be on His shoulders, us and our burdens, too (Deut. xxxiii, 12; Isa. ix, 6, 7). There must be more significance than we have ever seen in these words, "The Lord is my shepherd," and if we fully believed we could not but rejoice (I Pet. i, 8).

Woman is a type of the church, both true and false, but here she represents the true church in the power of the Holy Spirit seeking diligently that which is lost. The sheep set before us one phase of the condition of the lost, as when we read, "I have gone astray like a lost sheep." "All we like sheep have gone astray" (Ps. cxix, 176; Isa. liii, 6). The piece of silver may suggest the indifference of the lost, as when we read of being dead in trespasses and sins (Eph. ii, 1). In both cases the Lord is the seeker, as He has always been ever since He sought Adam in the garden of Eden, after he had sinned, saying, "Where art thou?" (Gen. iii, 9.) He does not merely call us to come, but knowing that we are as helpless as Mephibosheth, who was lame in both feet, He sends and fetches us into His presence and by His great love causes us to fall on our faces in true penitence, then gives us all (II Sam. ix, 3, 5, 6, 7, 13).

Like the good Samaritan, He finds us helpless and wounded and tenderly cares for us and puts us in His place and brings us to a place of rest and continues to care for us (Luke x, 33-35). Like Paul in the case of Onesimus, He says to His Father concerning the sinner, "Receive him as Myself; if he hath wronged thee or oweth thee aught, put that on mine account" (Phi. xvii, 18). "God commendeth His love toward us in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. v, 8).

In the story of both the sheep and the piece of money, note the conclusion, "Joy in heaven, * * * joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth" (verses 7, 10). Does it not seem that if we really believed that, we who are saved would have a greater desire to have others know and share the great salvation? How much of the spirit of Christ have we if we have not His heart of compassion for the lost? He became poor for us and suffered in our stead for our sins. How are we proving that we are His disciples? "He that winneth souls is wise." "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever." It was Paul's ambition "by all means to save some" (Prov. xi, 30; Dan. xii, 3; I Cor. ix, 22). What does the Lord see in our hearts in this matter?

Gaucho and Gringo.

The gaucho (now nearly extinct) was the cowboy of the Argentine pampas, a half wild fellow who, dressed in his "poncho," spent his entire time looking after the great droves of cattle that roamed over the South American plains. "Gringo" is a term applied by the South Americans to a North American or Englishman and sometimes by the people of Mexico to an American.

King Edward's Memory of Faces.

On one occasion Louis Sterne, an engineer and inventor and a friend of Charles Dickens, showed King Edward when Prince of Wales his exhibits at South Kensington and the Crystal palace.

"The next time I met the prince," said Mr. Sterne, "I was crossing Piccadilly, at the top of St. James' street, before the days of refuges. In trying to escape being run down I ran directly into the arms of his royal highness. He at once recognized me and said, 'Mr. Sterne, you should give this traffic time and never cross the bows.' I expressed surprise that he should recognize me, to which he replied that he never forgot either face or name if associated with any matter of interest."—London Telegraph.

O'SHAUGHNESSY!

HE STICKS TO THE JOB AT MEXICO CITY IN THE VERY FACE OF BUTCHER HUERTA

Nelson O'Shaunessy

Until he assumed the responsibilities of charge d'affaires in Mexico a few months ago, Nelson O'Shaughnessy was more famed for his appreciation of the social amenities and his tact than for any peculiar diplomatic ability. As a matter of fact, he never had much experience as a diplomatic agent, as his duties at the various legations and embassies to which he has been attached since he entered the diplomatic service in 1904 have been more strictly social than otherwise.

There is one thing which can be said about Shaughnessy, however, on the word of his superiors, which is that he has risen to the occasion that was thrust upon him by the recall of Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, and has carried himself through a difficult situation with the utmost tact and without making a single personal enemy.

In speaking of O'Shaughnessy, his friends speak of his wife, too. Mrs. O'Shaughnessy is a remarkably handsome woman, with the social instinct just as strongly developed as it is in her husband, and, moreover, she is a woman of great force of character. Everyone says she has been of great assistance to him in his diplomatic career.

O'Shaughnessy was born in New York 37 years ago. He was educated by private tutors and at Georgetown University in Washington and at Oxford University in England. He studied international law in London and languages in various European countries. He was appointed secretary to the legation at Copenhagen in 1904, and was made third secretary at the embassy at Berlin in the following year. In 1907 he was transferred to Vienna as second secretary of the embassy, and in 1911 was sent to Mexico, also as second secretary.

It is not generally known, but O'Shaughnessy did not like Mexico. He much preferred the capitals of Europe, and he has several times applied for a transfer, but, of course, when Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson was withdrawn and O'Shaughnessy was placed in charge he gave up all thought of going back to Europe and settled down to make the best of a bad situation.

Like most of the younger men in the diplomatic corps, O'Shaughnessy has at times felt the strain upon his purse to keep up with the procession, and at the time of his transfer from Vienna to Mexico City he received a good deal of publicity through the publication of certain unpaid accounts with tailors and other tradesmen in the Austrian capital. The tailor's bill, which included numerous fancy silk waistcoats and an innumerable number of pairs of trousers, was sent to the State Department for collection, and thus gained wide circulation. It is understood that he settled in full with his creditors.

FINDS CANCER IS NOT HEREDITARY

The Idea is Disproved by Statistics—Indians Not Affected.

New York, April 23.—That statistics disprove the idea that cancer is hereditary was the point emphasized by Frederick L. Hoffman, in a lecture at the Hudson Theatre under the auspices of the League for Political Education and the American Society for the Control of Cancer. Mr. Hoffman, who is the statistician of the Prudential Insurance Company, also denied that cancer was infectious, and warned against reliance on radium or any other curative method excepting surgery.

"Because physicians have been unable to discover the cause of cancer," he said, "there is an impression that not a very great deal is known about the disease. On the contrary, excepting this mystery as to its cause, there is no disease of which so much is known. One oldtime error, particularly, which has been destroyed in scientific minds, but which still persists popularly, is that this disease is hereditary. But there is not one fact to bear out the idea that cancer can be inherited. Where several persons in the same line have been afflicted with the disease it is due to chance or coincidence."

The question of infection, where there are so-called "cancer houses" or "cancer villages" can also be explained on the basis of coincidence. "If cancer were infectious or contagious," he added, "there would be other facts in confirmation. But there is not a single case on record where one of the thousands of physicians who have handled cancerous material has contracted the disease."

Mr. Hoffman said radiotherapy had been in use for twenty years, and in the thousands of cases it had only been fairly successful in superficial cancers. He pointed out that there are 75,000 deaths from cancer a year in this country, 50,000 of whom are women. He said the disease was much more prevalent among the wealthy and overfed than among the poor.

The speaker said not a single case of cancer had been reported among the Yuma Indians or the natives of Labrador.

A PLACE TO PLAY

"Plenty of room for shops and stores,
(Mammon must have the best).
Plenty of room for the running sores
That rot in the city's breast!
Plenty of room for the lures that lead
The hearts of our youth astray,
But never a cent on a playground spent,
No, never a place to play!

Plenty of room for schools and halls
Plenty of room for art;
Plenty of room for teas and balls
Platform, stage and mart.
Proud is the city—she finds a place
For many a fad to-day,
But she's more than blind if she fails to find
A place for the boys to play!

Give them a chance for innocent sport
Give them a chance for fun—
Better a playground plot than a court
And a jail when the harm is done!
Give them a chance—if you stint them now
To-morraw you'll have to pay
A larger bill for darker ill,
So give them a place to play!"

IT'S ONLY FINE OF $5 IN TORONTO

Betting on Pool Games Cheaper Than in This City.

Toronto, April 23.—In the afternoon police court there was quite the smell of a pool room as the system of potting the ball with a bet concerning the issue was disclosed.

Louis Clavir, who was remanded last week on the charge of permitting gambling in his licensed poolroom at 906 Dundas Street, again denied that he had allowed betting to be conducted in his premises and on the night in question he was not present.

When the case was last heard John H. Chisholm, one of the police decoys, gave his evidence, and Robert Robinson, now corroborated his evidence that the two had been sent into the poolroom with the express purpose of betting and how they were allowed to conduct it.

Morris Alter, defendant's assistant, recalled, said he did not give the Crown witnesses any permission to bet on the table. "I didn't say anything about pea pool to them."

Magistrate Kingsford decided to uphold the police evidence and fined Mr. Clavir $5 without costs.

In giving his verdict his Worship stated that an employer is responsible for the actions of his employe during his absence.

ENORMOUS EARNINGS OF C.P.R. FOR 1913

The earnings on our Canadian railways during 1913 amounted, broadly, to $200,000,000. These figures include all the subsidiary lines, and other affiliations of whatever nature; but the figures are remarkable. Thirty years ago the C.P.R., which now shows gross annual earnings of $140,000,000, could hardly buy axle grease. Its 25,000,000 acres of land were worthless. The land now sells at the rate of from $5 to $35 per acre. That worthless land in its totality represents a cash value of nearly $350,000,000. The lands still to be sold will realize $200,000,000. The commissioner, which the London paper of Lord Northcliffe's called Answers sent out to investigate conditions in the Dominion, regrets in one of his letters that the C.P.R. should have sold its land—any part of it—to speculators in the early days. The company regrets that policy today itself; but at the moment there did not seem any alternative. The people could not be coaxed at the time to settle in the wilderness; and the company needed money; and the big parcels were parted with—parcels which in their unoccupied state are the wonder of the incoming settler, who has to go further back while the splendid land lies idle close to the railroad. Of course, not an acre is sold now except to the genuine settler, but the point of value is that in the course of a comparatively few years, our Canadian railways, which began in febbleness and doubt, without great faith in the future, and mocked at by critics, can show the enormous earnings, in a twelvemonth, of $200,000,000.

GOVERNMENT OFFERS FOR SALE ITS LOTS IN PRINCE GEORGE

Probably the most remarkable sale of townsite lots in the history of the North American Continent was the disposal by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway of its holdings in Prince George, the eagerly bought land bringing at auction over $2,500,000. The Government of British Columbia reserved one-fourth of the lots in Prince George and it now announces that it will sell its holdings during the coming summer. These auctions will be held at Vancouver on May 19th, 20th and 21st and at Victoria on May 26th and 27th and at Prince George on June 9th, 10th and 11th.

Prince George will become, it is conceded, the clearing house of Central British Columbia. Situated on a flat table land in the angle formed by the confluence of the Nechako and Fraser Rivers it is an important divisional town on the Grand Trunk Pacific and also the point where the Pacific Great Eastern line from Vancouver will join the Grand Trunk Pacific Main Line and proceed northwards into the rich Peace River District.

BLAZE AT HAMILTONS

ROOF OF PATTERN SHOP FIRED BY SPARK

A spark from the cupola of the Wm. Hamilton Company set fire to the roof of the pattern shop and did considerable damage yesterday afternoon, a few minutes after 4 o'clock. School children en route to their homes noticed the blaze and notified officials of the company, who in turn rang in an alarm. When the firemen arrived on the scene the flames had gained great headway, and considerable water was used before the blaze was under control. The damage is not solely confined to the building, although the fire destroyed half of the roof, but several patterns in the shop were damaged by the water. The water became heated and when it fell on the patterns they were warped, thus rendering them useless. The damage is quoted at about $700. Both the patterns and building were well covered by insurance.

BOYS LECTURED; TOLD TO BEHAVE

Will Be Heavily Fined If They Appear Again.

Nine south-end youths appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning on the charge of disorderly conduct. They pleaded not guilty and were dismissed with a warning if they ever came back, heavy penalties would result.

V. J. McElderry appeared for the defendants and G. N. Gordon for the prosecution.

Evidence by Detective Newhall and Constable Reid was to the effect that the youths were a general nuisance. They "monkeyed" with the intersection of the Radial Railway company and G.T.R. on Lock Street, and acted in a disorderly manner.

Evidently they had a pick on Conductor White and disturbed his peace of mind by numerous games such a blocking the door of the signal house, and using bad language to him was another favorite pastime.

Conductor White and Motorman McConnell failed to identify the youths, but admitted the boys were a nuisance.

After a severe lecture on the evils of such conduct by Magistrate Dumble, they were dismissed.

Of 45 Dead in Riots, Two-Thirds Were Non-Combatants

TRINIDAD, Colo., April 23.—Forty-five dead, more than two-thirds of them women and children, a score missing, and more than twenty wounded is the toll taken by the fourteen-hour battle which raged with uninterrupted fury between state troops and striking coal miners in the Ludlow district Tuesday.

The militia, which Monday drove the strikers from their tent colony and, it is charged, fired it, involving thereby the greatest loss of life, prepared for a machine gun sortie at daybreak from their position along the Colorado & Southern Railway tracks, at either side of the Ludlow station.

CAN WE BE HAPPY?

Only in Settled Conviction Can We Have Happiness, Says Mr. Burnham

(Special to The Review.)

Ottawa, April 23.—Speaking at the Family Theatre here lately, Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., of West Peterboro, after remarks relative to national integrity and honor, intimated that on a toast list at gatherings of a public or semi-public nature the name of His Majesty the King should come first always. He made a brief reference to the recent Pope-King incident at a Winnipeg banquet and a very slight one to Ulster.

Mr. Burnham was speaking on the subject, "Can We be Happy," and in part said:

"In natural history there were many curious things. The cuttle-fish laid at the bottom of the ocean preying upon all those who came near it. The lion had teeth and the tiger strong jaws to rend their fellow creatures. If those animals had to live on vegetable food they would die. They had grown to a condition where they must subsist on other animals. We must extend our knowledge, reflect on the causes of these things and we would soon realize their existence, and the sooner would we come to some conclusion as to our future.

"In indecision lies the root of unhappiness. You must be for a good cause or against it. The ancients believed that the highest point of human attainment was virtue. When we see a young girl give her life, sacrifice her youth, out of pure affection and unselfishness, for her mother, what more noble action could there be than that? Surely there must be some reward for such as that. Thereward lies in the high esteem and admiration which people hold for such as those. That being so, it is incumbent upon you to see that you are not stingy in your admiration; always ready to show that a person is deserving of your help, respect, esteem, and more. No person can be happy who does not wish to be right, to be virtuous and, unselfish. Those who sought amusement in self-gratification were not happy. Then, having reached the stage when we can see where to take the next step, it is for us to do so.

Conviction a Force.

"Only in settled conviction can we have happiness," proceeded Mr. Burnham. "It is better to go to church or an assembly where they hold positive ideas than one where you do not know where the next idea is coming from or will go. If we would be happy we must settle in our minds as to this world and the one to come. You must either convince yourself or deceive yourself. Supposing that a man thinks happiness lies in certain things and proceeds as if it were all true, and he is free from anxiety. He can say that is the best he can do. Presently he is supported by public opinion, others are convinced, and they lay down their earthly tasks and realize they are doing their best. Let us have the pluck, the courage, and manhood to do our best. Anything else but dollars and cents. We hear often of people trading something for gold which cannot be bought for gold. Honesty is worth its weight in gold. Let us, then, frown upon men who would sell their own honor, lest they sell our national honor, and we become one of the disreputable nations of the earth."

Finds Health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Creston, Iowa.—"I suffered with female troubles from the time I came into womanhood until I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I would have pains if I overworked or lifted anything heavy, and I would be so weak and nervous and in so much misery that I would be prostrated. A friend told me what your medicine had done for her and I tried it. It made me strong and healthy and our home is now happy with a baby boy. I am very glad that I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and do all I can to recommend it."—Mrs. A. B. Boscamp, 604 E. Howard Street, Creston, Iowa.

Tons of Roots and Herbs are used annually in the manufacture of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is known from ocean to ocean as the standard remedy for female ills.

REDISTRIBUTION MEASURE TO-DAY

Mr. Rowell Complains He Has Not Time to Examine Bill

TORONTO, April 23.—In the latest draft of the redistribution bill, which will probably be subject to little change, provision is made for an addition of four new members to the Ontario House. These will come from a new city riding, comprising Windsor, Walkerville and Sandwich; from Cochrane, a new electoral district in the north, and from the two new seats given to Toronto. There will be two Lincoln ridings. Monck is abolished.

Among the ridings which have had their boundaries considerably altered are the Greys, Middlesex, Victoria, the Bruces and North Oxford.

At the meeting of the committee yesterday Mr. Rowell claimed that the Liberal members had not had nearly enough time to study the situation, and quoted the division of the Victorias and North Oxford as instances of insufficient notice.

"Not much of a change there," suggested a member.

"There is only a question of one hundred Liberal majority; that is all," said Mr. Rowell. "We should have an opportunity to hear from the different parts of the province."

"That is out of the question," said Mr. Hanna.

Mr. Rowell insisted however and another meeting was arranged for to-day at 10.30 before the reporting of the bill in the House this afternoon.

William McDonald (Centre Bruce) fought strongly for the Bruces as at present distributed. He said the average difference in the Kents and other counties was greater than here. He urged that to change the makeup of the centre riding and to call it West Bruce with the municipalities grouped as proposed would destroy the "old fighting ground."

Mr. Rowell said that the inclusion of Sullivan Township in North Grey seriously hurt the Liberal cause.

Hon. Mr. Lucas stated that the bill merely sent back certain sections to where they had been before the Liberal redistribution.

PRISON COMMISSION REPORT RECOMMENDS MANY REFORMS

Permanent Commission Should be Given Charge of Control of Penitentiaries And Parole Boards Increased—Hair-Cropping, Prison Garb, "Hosing" and "Tubbing" is Condemned.

OTTAWA, April 23.—Many changes in the administration of penitentiaries are recommended by the report of the commission which has been enquiring into the management of Kingston and other penitentiaries, tabled in the House yesterday afternoon. It recommends:

That control of penitentiaries be given to a permanent commission of three, with power to appoint staff officers and heads of departments, make regulations, etc., the wardens to be given authority to employ and dismiss keepers, guards, etc. That a parole board of not less than three members be appointed for each penitentiary, to sit once a month, and that the field staff of parole organization be increased to three officers directly under the Justice Department.

That an arrangement be made with the provinces to take over the custody of first offenders and prisoners under 25 years of age. Should this be found impracticable, two reformatories for young prisoners and first offenders should be established in the east and west. That prison industries be established to supply the requirements of the Government services. That close cropping of hair be abolished, save for cleanliness. That in place of the present uniform a suit and cap of one tone material, blue or grey, be adopted. That a few copies of a carefully censored weekly newspaper be provided for the good conduct prisoners.

That moderate use of tobacco be allowed to good conduct men; that dining-rooms be provided for good conduct men, and that hosing and imprisonment in dungeons be abolished.

Other recommendations are for modern hospitals, reorganization of staffs of hospitals, school instruction, drill, and better educated guards.

At Kingston conditions were found discouraging for convicts, and the asylum ward was managed to give least trouble for those in charge. Tubbing and hosing are condemned, and responsibility put on Dr. Phelan and Inspector Stewart.

Respecting the charge of Dr. Edwards, M.P., that Deputy Warden O'Leary favored Roman Catholics in assigning posts, the commission finds the charges not sustained and due to "an unhappy spirit of distrust and suspicion." It is also found that O'Leary was not guilty of political partisanship. Overseer Wilson is exonerated.

It is also recommended that a system of classification be inaugurated, based on the conduct of the prisoners, to encourage them to habits of order, industry, etc. The report further suggests that outside work be developed to the fullest extent at each prison in farming operations, etc., and that a thorough physical and mental examination of each prisoner be made on his admission and a proper filing system be installed for records.

HON. MR. HANNA EXPLAINS THE SNIDER EPISODE IN THE HOUSE

Opposition, on Strength of Heorsay, Demand an Inquiry Into Visit of Inspector to Welland, But Provincial Secretary Makes a Full Explanation of the Affair and the Motion is Defeated by 70 to 20.

TORONTO, April 23.—For five hours the Legislature yesterday debated a motion of the Opposition to appoint a select committee to enquire into the visits of W. K. Snider, Provincial License Inspector, to Welland, Huron and Peel, prior to the vote on the Scott Act in January. The Opposition charged that an official had been employed to influence the vote, according to Government desires.

Hon. Mr. Hanna replied vigorously and frankly explained the whole affair, after which the motion was defeated by 70 votes to 20.

In support of his motion Chief Liberal Whip Bowman said that because the Scott Act made dry certain places which were wet under the Local Option Act, the contests were unusually interesting. Welland had been a testing ground, and the liquor people had spent $60,000 there to defeat the temperance bylaw. Snider, he said, went into the riding to tell the people that the Government did not want the act passed. He was repudiated at first, but afterwards acknowledged, but whether "off his own bat or not" he had acted improperly.

"He should have been brought to the carpet, and not only reprimanded, but suspended," he declared. "No official of the Government has the right to take part in elections in this way."

Hon. Mr. Hanna stated that the description of the man given to him would not warrant his identification at the time.

"Didn't you know he was there?" asked an Opposition member.

"No, I did not," was the reply.

"Was there such a close alliance between the Government and the liquor interests that the latter had pressed for Snider going for a set purpose?" asked Mr. Bowman.

"Any insinuation or suggestion involved in that statement is absolutely untrue," declared Hon. Mr. Hanna. "I will ask the hon. member a question 'Why does he ask it'."

Mr. Bowman replied that statements had been made that J. P. Haverson, counsel for the liquor interests, had visited the Minister with that end in view.

"He had not,' 'was the emphatic reply.

Mr. Bowman, in conclusion, urged that the committee asked for be appointed and the matter cleared up.

Mr. Hanna said that he and Eudo Saunders, chief license officer, had discussed the whole effect of the Scott Act on the province, and the conclusion was that a statement setting forth what the law really meant should be issued to the press as authoritative, and yet not from the Government, to avoid influencing the election. It was conceded that in unorganised districts the measure was a good one, but in old counties people should understand certain conditions to be met. Huron had most to expect and less to lose, but in Peel it was imperative that they know that when the Scott Act was passed it suspended all local option laws and the bulk of the county was under them. Snider had known of the statement to be published but not of how it was to be used. His actions he had taken to be within his duties, and afterwards affirmed that his conversation had begun and ended with the facts given in the statement.

"I say now as I said then, that I had no idea Inspector Snider was in Welland at the time," Hon. Mr. Hanna declared.

Hon. Mr. Foy said Mr. Bowman had not produced anything that would warrant his asking for a select committee of investigation. His speech was "a bundle of hearsay and newspaper scraps." He would ask him to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Rowell held that either the officer had violated the Departmental rules and deserved punishment, or that he had been sent with a purpose to discourage electors from passing the temperance measure.

Hon. Mr. Lucas said that too much could not be done nowadays to make public life inviting to good men and to stop the hurling of dirt and innuendoes across the floor.

J. G. Anderson (Lib., S. Bruce), Chas. McCrea (Con., Sudbury), and Evan Fraser (Con., Welland) also spoke.

TO VOTE TO-NIGHT.

Budget Debate Occupied House Most of Yesterday.

OTTAWA, April 23.—The budget debate is expected to conclude to-night with speeches from Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Dr. Michael Clark and Geo. H. Boivin for the Opposition and Hon. Geo. E. Foster and Hon. Arthur Meighen replying for the Government. The debate took up most of yesterday with eight speakers on the floor, three Conservatives and five Liberal.

E. W. Nesbitt (Lib., N. Oxford) charged the Minister of Finance with mismanagement of loans and extravagance which made borrowing necessary. He believed that farmers would have been satisfied with the duty on implements if they had been given wider markets.

"The Finance Minister and his supporters," declared Dr. A. Thompson (Con., Yukon), who followed, "stand for moderate protection. This party stands or falls on a policy of moderate protection." Referring to the people of the west, he said that if they entered upon manufacturing, instead of confining themselves to the one industry of agriculture, they would become protectionists, and he urged upon the Government the desirability of developing the water powers of the Prairie Provinces and thus hastening manufacturing.

At the evening sitting Levi Thompson (Lib., Qu'Appelle) argued that trade was under a restriction which was hampering the development of the west, and consequently lessening the business of eastern industrial plants.

Donald Sutherland (Con., S. Oxford) advised the farmers of the west to do more than grow wheat.

Lumbermen Ask Protection.

OTTAWA, April 23.—The Railway Commission reserved judgment yesterday after hearing arguments for and against the application of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association for an order to prevent the railways from increasing the rates on lumber from Ottawa Valley points to Montreal throughout the summer months.

The railways propose to cancel the summer schedule of tariffs on lumber early in May and maintain the winter schedule all the year around.

SENDS NOTE TO WILSON

CARRANZA DEMANDS WITHDRAWAL OF TROOPS FROM VERA CRUZ.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Gen. Carranza's note to President Wilson declaring the seizure of Vera Cruz by American forces a violation of the national sovereignty of Mexico, inviting the United States to suspend hostile operations and withdraw its forces, and suggesting that the Constitutionalist Government should receive demands for reparation of offences committed by Huerta stirred the Mexican situation to a new and acute crisis late last night.

The opposition to the American Government's action, coming from an unexpected quarter after the Washington administration had hoped for an attitude of neutrality and passive observation from the Constitutionalists, brought the Government face to face with possible hostility from the great body of Mexican forces lying in proximity to the southern tier of the United States.

Carranza agreed with President Wilson that Huerta did not represent the Mexican nation, but, on the other hand, feared the Mexican people might be inflamed and drawn into a conflict which would make them sacrifices to the usurpations of Huerta.

Gen. Carranza described the Constitutionalist successes, saying that Huerta was slowly being crushed and that the Constitutionalists soon would be in possession of the Mexico City Government. When they triumphed, he pointed out, ample reparation would be made for all offences. In the meantime he wished the United States to take no steps which would excite the Mexican populace.

The note, it was admitted by many officials, was capable of a friendly construction, but there was some doubt expressed that the subordinate officers under Gen. Carranza might not be so conservative. Apprehension over this situation was manifest in many quarters.

CHAPDELAINE LET OUT BY BLOUNT

Youngstown, April 23.—The rainy weather so prevalent during the past few days here gave away before the strong rays of Old Sol to-day, and the Peterboro Canadian Leaguers grasped their opportunity this morning to work in a real live practice. The infield was put through a strenuous session, and at last the first "hole" appears. That is at the initial sack. Both Flanagan and O'Hearne went well after they reported, and were in excellent shape, but they were at their best, with the result that when the rest of the men improved, they could not show the necessary class. Blount was building on either of the men being capable to look after the sack in proper style, but now sees that neither will do, so he is wiring for a couple of more men. Byrne and Price are sure of their positions at third and short and it now looks as though King will guard the keystone. The work of Joe Byrne is particularly prominent, and is at present showing far better form than he did at any time last year. King is very fast, and shows good judgment, while Price is as reliable as Harry Brant. The latter has practically no opposition.

There has been no weeding done yet to the pitching staff, but there will be to-morrow when Bob Sterling arrives. The receiving department was cut down one this morning, when Chapdelaine, the plucky little Frenchman, was let out. Mully Miller, Kelly, Ryberg and McClure are all showing too much class for "Chappie" to have a chance. He will, however, try and land a place with some of the other teams on the Canuck circuit. Miller and Kelly have cinched the catchers' jobs, and McClure and Ryberg will fight it out for third catcher and utility man. Both are going well, and it is difficult to say just which man will be retained, although Ryberg was very prominent in this morning's practice.

Youngstown, April 23.—Yesterday morning broke rather cool and cloudy here, so Manager Blount had his Maple Leaf squad out very early and enjoyed an hour and a half of fungo hitting, batting, and fielding practice. The speed of the aggregation to represent the Lift Lock City on Fitzgerald's circuit was shown to great advantage in the former, while in the batting practice the boys more than leaned on a few of Knut Belting's offerings. The Swede had nothing on the ball but the cover, hence the outfield was given quite a session. McClure, the catcher, tore off a couple of nifty spears, and the way it looks now, it appears as though he and Chapdelaine will battle it out for the utility job. Kelly and Mully Miller will grasp the regular berths in the catching department. Conway, the Youngstown man still continues to show the Petes that he is a fielder of no mean ability, and one Willie Swartz will have to step exceedingly fast to keep him off the team. Gaffney was going fairly well in the central garden, but will hardly land a place, and it is very probable that Paul Dawson will be seeking his home in West Virginia before many moons.

Outfielder Released.

Charles Naw, the young outgardener from Jeannette, was released yesterday. He has had trouble with his wing, and Blount decided that he could not carry him.

Joe Byrne and Price still continue to show class in the infield and might as well be marked for third and short respectively. Fox, King and Miller are all working hard, endeavoring to land the keystone job, while the battle between the two Irishmen, O'Hearne and Flanagan, for first, is steadily growing acute. Although the rivalry for places as a general rule gives cause to hard feelings among players, the White Caps get along fine.

Laborers Together.

After the morning practice Manager Blount decided that the Wright Park needed a little overhauling to make it quite right, and put his whole squad to work with spades. Needless to say, the infield was soon put in perfect condition. Some of the boys showed great ability with the spade, but everyone concluded that the Irish gang, Kelly, Conway, Flanagan and O'Hearne had it on the rest a little.

Rain began to fall while the more or less fatigued "laborers" were at dinner, and it was therefore necessary to cut out the afternoon work-out, and confine their p.m. work to a short signal practice, held in a corridor of the Tod House. After this was over the men gathered around the Rotunda and ball games of yore gone over. Willie Swartz easily held the gang when he began his yarn about the losing streak the first Peterboro Canadian League outfit had under the guiding hand of "Old Folks" Temple, and although it sounded a bit fishlike when the release of Cosy Dolan was related, they all took it as one of the many peculiarities of baseball.

A little slip of paper marked "Telegram" conveyed the pleasing information to Manager Blount that Bob Sterling would be in to-day, and Curley is rehearsing his first greeting of "Why did you make me care?"

CHIEF BENDER CELEBRATES ELEVENTH BIG LEAGUE YEAR

"Chief" Charles A. Bender, the great Indian twirler for the world's champion Athletics, celebrated on Monday the eleventh anniversary of his big league debut. It was on April 20, 1903, that Bender made his first public appearance in any league, wearing on his six feet two inches of solid red flesh a uniform which indicated that he was a member in good standing of the Philadelphia Athletics, champions of the American League. Bender was sent into the box in a game at Boston to relieve Eddie Plank, who was having an off day, and the Injun was largely responsible for the 10 to 7 victory of the Philadelphians.

The discovery of Bender is just one of a multitude of proofs that Cornelius J. McGillicuddy is crazy like a fox. Charles Albert was born on an Indian reservation at Brainerd, Minn., nearly thirty-one years ago, and was sent to Carlisle to sop up an education. He soon attained proficiency in baseball and other branches of the Carlisle curriculum, and played first base and pitched for the Carlisle nine in 1900 and 1901. The following year he went to Dickinson College, and also played with the Harrisburg Athletic club baseball aggregation. There he attracted the attention of Connie Mack, and in the spring of 1903 joined the Athletic pitching staff, which then consisted of Plank, Fred Mitchell, Ed. Waddell, and B. J. Hustings. Bender acquired the title of "chief" early in his baseball career. In the box he is calm and deliberate, and manifests the stoicism of his race. From his first appearance on a big league diamond Bender has always been imperturbale under the coval assaults of the fans, and the latter have long since learned that it is futile to try to rattle the rangy red man. Bender is a great strategist as well as a brainy pitcher, and his eagle eyes miss mighty little in the course of a game. In the 1911 world's series between the Athletics and the Giants it was rumored that Bender had "got next" to McGraw's signals and was thus able to warn his team mates of every coming move of the foe. Whether or not that rumor was based on fact, it is certain that Bender was kept on the coaching lines nearly all the time and manifested an almost uncanny wisdom in getting players around and forestalling the moves of the Giants. Last year Bender pitched and won two of the games o fhteowr the games of the world's series.

MANY NEW ACCESSORIES PROVIDE COMFORT TO AUTOISTS

During the past year a number of new accessories for motor cars were put on the market, many of which were designed for increasing the comfort of the automobilists. For instance, a new primer, designed to charge the cylinders with a rich, warm mixture for starting, consists of a small tube opening into the gasoline lead and communicating with the intake manifold. The opening into the fuel lead is controlled by a mushroom valve pressed down by a spring, through which an electric current may be sent, and which also acts as a solenoid oil. If the circuit is closed by a switch, the spring is heated, and at the same time draws down an iron core from above, to which the mushroom valve is fixed. The gasoline thus enters the space heated by the spring.

A gearshift has been brought out which comprises a mechanism operated by an individual pedal for every speed available, with such connections that the depressing of a speed pedal first throws out the clutch, then the gear which is in mesh, and finally engages the desired speed. A trouble-hunting lamp that may be attached without effort to any iron or steel portion of the car is also a new idea. The wire feeding the electric bulb is laid about a soft-iron core, which it magnetizes when the circuit is closed. The electro-magnet thus produced exerts a pull of thirteen pounds, which securely attaches the lamp to steel or iron.

Glareless Headlights.

Among the different efforts to produce glareless headlights in a design for electric lamps consisting of dome-shaped lenses of frosted glass which distribute the light evenly around the lamp and make the road ahead of the car for a sufficient distance to make driving safe. A small conical lamp at the end of a horizontal staff which pivots on a vertical rod and is turnable to either side at the driver's will is designed to indicate the direction in which the car is travelling, especially to traffic policemen. The device is installed on the radiator filled cap, and is easily visible in daytime and at night. The control is by a cable.

A device indicating when the gasoline line level in the tank sinks to a predetermined degree is constructed as follows: A float tube in the tank contains a float, an electric contact is provided in the top of the tube and an annunciator or bell operated by it is installed on the dashboard. If the float falls to the point determined, the end of a lever to which it is secured by a string is drawn down, the other end of the lever thereby lifted to make an electric contact, which causes the annunciator to give the signal.

Finding Misfires.

A device for detecting misfires without running the risk of a shock has also been put on the market recently. It consists of a long piece of steel held in an insulating handle; for use, the point of the steel is touched to any metal part of the motor, while a portion of the steel which is bent is brought into contact with the plug electrode. If the engine slows down and loses power, the plug is in proper firing condition, but if the short-circuiting makes no difference, the plug is fouled, or at any rate does not fire. Sticks of tin-solder are now on the market in 5-inch lengths. This solder is fused by the application of a match and is of service for aluminum or tin repairs and temporary ones on copper.

LAWN BOWLING

According to recent reports the Sacred Heart T. A. S. will organize a bowling club and fit up a section of their present large recreation field for that purpose. A fine baseball diamond and a couple of tennis courts are now ready for use and it is expected that the bowling green will be ready for this season. The advent of these bowlers will leave the city with three clubs and when inter-club matches are arranged for there should be no end of enthusiasm.

The annual meeting of Bowmanville Lawn Bowling Club was held with President C. H. Anderson in the chair. Principal R. D. Davidson, Secretary-Treasurer, read the financial report, which was adopted.

Election of officers resulted as follows:

President—J. S. Moorcraft.

RESIGNATION DEMANDED.

License Department Takes Quick Action With Paul Morand.

TORONTO, April 23.—At the request of the Provincial Secretary's Department, Paul Morand, license inspector for North Essex, resigned his position yesterday and a short time afterwards as a witness before the Public Accounts Committee of the Legislature explained why he had done so. Under examinatin by Liberal Whip Bowman, he admitted that while in office he had been president and largest stockholder of a canning company that borrowed money from hotel license-holders. He did not know this to be improper, he said, until told so by his Department, and had not himself collicited the loans.

HUERTA DELIBERATELY PLANNED

with a valuable trestle, will be policed by American marines and bluejackets. This section of the railroad is of supreme importance should future developments require a movement on Mexico City.

Beyond the holding of Vera Cruz and this railroad, the Washington Government does not want to act at present, but persons in the confidence of the administration admit that action by Huerta or Carranza at any time may alter completely the plans.

In this connection a high Government official made public a letter from a friend whom he regarded as trustworthy, which read as follows:

"I hear on reliable authority, from a man arriving from Mexico City, that Huerta personally, with the Mexican Foreign Minister, planned the Tampico incident with a view of bringing on armed intervention and uniting the Mexican factions with him."

The same official expressed the view that Huerta had delayed his answer to the United States for a salute to the flag pending the arrival of the shipment of ammunition on the German vessel.

Volunteers for service in Mexico will not be called for unless there is a formal declaration of war by Congress. This was announced in the House yesterday by Chairman Hay of the House military affairs committee.

Movements of the navy were continued yesterday. The Navy Department feels that a sufficient force of marines is on the way, not only to take care of the situation at Vera Cruz, but at Tampico, too, if the order is given for the seizure of the customs house there.

Foreigners Leaves Mexico City.

GALVESTON, April 23. — Communication was established yesterday afternoon with Mexico City. Charge O'Shaughnessy is safe and the city is quiet, but business demoralised. The city is completely in the hands of the Federal Government. A train left yesterday afternoon for Vera Cruz with foreigners on board, and was escorted by Federals.

FREE OF ALL THREE DISEASES

"Fruit-a-tives" Brought Him Perfect Health

AVON, ONT., May 14th. 1913.

"I am younger since I have been taking "Fruit-a-tives". I was troubled very badly with Piles, Constipation and Stomach Disorder, but I found "Fruit-a-tives" was the panacea for the whole three.

Now I am free of all these diseases and enjoying perfect health, and able to work whenever I like. Five years ago, I started taking "Fruit-a-tives". I took two every night and they worked wonders for me.

No other medicine I could get was so good and I took lots of different remedies before I found out how good "Fruit-a-tives" were.

I keep "Fruit-a-tives" on hand all the time, and am never without them. I even take them with me when I go motoring, so I can have them handy. "Fruit-a-tives" are worthy of every good word I can say about them. The fact that they cured me of Piles, was something to be everlastingly thankful for"

QUEEN ZEPHRA IS REPEATED

Small Audience Saw Final Presentation at the Grand

The final presentation of Queen Zephra under the auspices of the Conservatory of Music was given last night at the Grand. The audience was rather small compared with the former presentations, but those who were fortunate enough to be present witnessed this great musical extravaganza given at its best. The singing was particularly good and the various drills and dances were likewise worthy of great praise. Mrs. Perrin, appearing as the Princess, was the recipient of a large bouquet of flowers.

Mr. H. Booth, who staged the "Queen Zephra," is to be complimented on its success. It is regrettable to note that while there was no financial loss, his recompense for his months' work was but a trifle.

MODERN DEVICES MAKING DRIVING EASY FOR WOMEN

Handling Auto no Longer Requires Great Strength —Self-Starters and Better Equipment Make Only Quick Wits Necessary

Successful drivers among women are those who have confidence in themselves and a thorough knowledge of their car. Too many women, save Miss Frances J. Thornton, of Brooklyn, one of the few women instructors in this country, step, as it were, from the sewing machine to an automobile and expect to drive skillfully and safely.

"Come to think of it," said Miss Thornton, "as most of the women whose husbands are able to purchase automobiles have their sewing machines operated for them, they do not even possess this slight mechanical advantage." She added that the training of the average modern woman does not fit her to enter upon driving a car after an hour or two of instruction under some salesman's demonstrator. But, properly trained, there is no more reason why she should not operate an automobile than a man, which is to say none at all.

There is, in fact, no opposition today to a woman driving a car where, in the early days, there was a great deal. The few women who operated cars then were looked upon with curiosity and disapproval, which, in many ways, was justified; for the early automobile was distinctly a man's vehicle. It was no easy thing for a woman to drive, because of the expenditure of physical effort involved — the laborious work of cranking the motor, in the first place, and then, the shifting of gears, and, even the steering, which involved no small amount of real muscular labor.

To-day there are great numbers of women driving cars, and no one thinks anything of it. Self-starters, electric lighting systems, and all the labor-saving devices that now attach it within the physical possibilities of any woman. There remains, then, to, make slight repairs on the road. In this way comes that confidence in all emergencies, which, according to automobile men, has been the weak point of woman drivers all along. Through confidence the woman does not lose her wits when she is confronted by a condition that might mean accident, and, in a large majority of cases, such a poise eliminates the necessity of her ever facing such a condition.

CALIFORNIA "RAISIN DAY"

This year California "Raisin Day" is to be celebrated in the "Golden State" on April 30th. The slogan on that particular day will be "Eat Raisins." Not only in California will the day be given prominence, but many of the eastern railroads will feature it by placing on the menus of their dining cars special California raisin dishes. The Grand Trunk will add these dishes to their special menus on all their dining cars, April 30th.

MYSTERIES OF LIGHTNING AND SOME OF ITS FREAKS

Numerous and Puzzling Are the Unaccountable Ways of This Least Understood of Nature's Phenomena

In a general way we understand the theory of thunderstorms. As a matter of fact, there is no phenomenon of nature, not excepting even earthquakes, of which we know so little.

Man-made lightning, meaning by this electricity of the highest potential which we can artificially produce—will act according to certain known laws. It will, for instance, travel along a metal conductor. But a flash of lightning will frequently leap from a well defined metal path and launch itself through the air or to some adjacent object which is an infinitely poorer conductor of electricity.

This may be due to the almost inconceivable force of a flash of electricity or lightning. It is estimated that a flash a mile long represents a pressure of discharge equal to 3,000,000,000 volts. As such a flash lasts but a thousandth part of a minute, the entire energy dissipated by the discharge is equal to about 300,000 horse power. Put into other words, if we could find some means of saving and using lightning, we would be richer by a good round sum for every flash.

Lightning, as we know it, is usually accompanied by a clap of thunder which is louder the nearer the hearer is to the point of discarge, although this is not an invariable rule. There are cases on record of most destructive lightning flashes that were unaccompanied by a sound.

Freaks of Lightning.

Such a phenomenon occurred in Bradford, England, a few years ago. What are described as silent thunderbolts fell in a graveyard, destroying one monument and smashing to atoms nearly seventy glass cases containing wreaths and flowers.

In the same summer, Swanscombe, in Kent, was terrified by a freak of lightning. All of a sudden "a great mass of blue fire" swept along the street and the next moment it was seen that the fine old parish church, built nearly 700 years before, was struck. The building with all its fine old carved oak was soon a roaring furnace. Only a part of the chancel was saved.

Scientists are still hopelessly at sea as to the cause of that peculiar occurrence known as globe lightning. At Coventry some years ago, during a violent thunderstorm, it passed along the street like a soap bubble built of blue fire, and drifted into a shed where it exploded, blowing off the roof of the house. At Rheims in France, a similar fire ball came into a cobbler's shop through the open window. The solitary occupant of the place sat perfectly still paralyzed with terror—while the fearful visitant hovered for an instant overhead. Then it moved towards the fireplace and presently passed up the chimney. Next there was an explosion like a bursting shell and the upper part of the chimney came crashing down.

On "Cold Lightning."

Not long ago Count Hamilton made a record of a similar freak of electricity. He was sitting at dinner at a house on Lake Wener, in Sweden, when just after a vivid flash of lightning, a brilliant white ball appeared over the table, and after hanging poised there for some seconds, went off with a loud bang. Fortunately it did not harm anyone, although it was quite close to several people. Those who saw it stated that it was like a ball of "cold lightning."

In 1892, Sydney, Australia, was visited by a terrific dust storm, in the midst of which a perfect hail of fire balls began. These set fire to a number of houses and a most appalling panic set in. A cry was raised that the end of the world had come and people rushed out of their houses in terror, into the inky darkness of the dust-swept streets.

The most amazing and terrifying display of the power of lightning is seen on mountains. In 1905 a party was on top of a mountain in the Caucasus when a huge violet ball surrounded by vivid rays struck a rock nearby and exploded like a bomb, bursting into atoms. One of the party was severely hurt.

About the time Franklin was making his kite experiments in this country, Professor Richman, of St Petersburg, was working along the same lines. He had erected on his house an iron rod to collect electricity from the clouds during a thunderstorm. In August, 1873, during a terrific electrical storm, he was observing along with Sokolow, the indications on an electrometer, when a tremendous thunder clap burst over the neighborhood. Richman bent over his instruments and while in this position, his head being a foot from the lightning rod, Sokolow saw a globe of bluish fire, about the size of the fist, shoot from the iron rod to the professor's head with a report like that of a pistol. The shock was fatal. Richman fell back and instantly expired. Sokolow was stupified and benumbed, the red hot fragments of the rod striking and burning his clothes.

ACCIDENT AT THE BUSY CORNER

Need for Traffic Officer Is Again Demonstrated

A cyclist travelling north on George Street was struck by an auto and thrown heavily to the ground, but, in some miraculous manner, escaped serious injury.

The autoist was coming east on Hunter and is said to have been on the wrong side of the road, and in making the turn collided with the cyclist.

Passers-by were heard to remark that the need for carefulness and a traffic officer at some of the corners was being demonstrated every day, and unless something was done in regard to the matter, a serious accident, in which a loss of life will occur, will result before the city awakens to the affair.

CHEESE MAKERS PREPARING FOR THIS SEASON

First Meeting of Peterboro Cheese Board, May 20th

Next week, and the week following will see the majority of the cheese factories in this vicinity re-opening for the 1914 season. During the past few weeks the proprietors have been busily engaged in repairing their plants, and all will be in readiness when the first wheel is turned. Although it is a trifle premature to state whether the output of cheese will be up to the standard or not, some gentlemen who are closely allied with the business claim that the May production will not be very heavy, as the first month is generally given exclusively to butter. However, there is considerable butter on the local market at the present time, and this may prompt many of the makers to start in at cheese immediately.

There are no new factories which will sell on the local board. The thirty-seven of last year still remain. The first meeting of the board will take place on Wednesday May 20th.

RUSHING WORK

Why Contractor Was Entitled To Consideration

OTTAWA, April 23. — Gordon Grant, chief engineer of the Transcontinental Railway, explained to the Public Accounts Committee yesterday the settlement made with J. D. McArthur, whereby $150,000 was cut off from the contractor's estimates on account of over-classification and over-break instead of $512,000, recommended originally by the arbitrators, of whom he was one.

Mr. Grant stated that the arbitrators had not at first taken into account the fact that by the commission's orders, the work had been rushed and heavy blasting had been done. For this the contractor was not responsible, and it would be unfair to hold him to it. Witness believed that if, under the circumstances, McArthur had gone to the courts he would have won. The contractor, to avoid litigation, was willing to have $150,000 taken off. Major Leonard, Mr. Cochrane and Mr. Lynch-Staunton were aware of the settlement, which he considered fair and just.

The case was reported to the House by the committee.

Hydro Commission Opposes.

IT COST HIM $30.43.

Indian Has Till the First of June to Pay the Fine

Albert Smoke, an Indian, appeared before Magistrate Edmison this morning at eleven o'clock on the charge of being drunk in a local option district and assaulting County Constable David Montgomery, who arrested him, on Thursday, April 9th. The evidence of the constable was taken, but it went to show that Smoke did not assault him, nor yet resist the arrest.

Constable Cochrane then withdrew the charge of assault, and His Worship fined Smoke $20.00 on the charge of being drunk in a local option district, with costs which amounted to $10.43, making a total of $30.43. He was given till June 1st to pay, and if he forgets, he'll be the guest of the jailer for three months.

Smoke beat a quick retreat, faithfully promising to pay the fine.

The usual monthly meeting of the Protestant Benevolent Federation will be held this evening in the S. O. E. Hall at 8 o'clock.

NOT ENOUGH MEN TO GUARD BUSY CORNERS

Police Chief Discusses the Question of Traffic Officer

ALL THE MEN BUSY.

Appropriations Not Sufficient to Provide Another Man

"I have not sufficient men to have a traffic officer stationed at the corner of Charlotte Street and Hunter Street and George," said Chief Thompson to a Review reporter today when asked if it was his intention to station men at these points.

The chief admitted that traffic congestion was rather bad at times and there might be a possibility of an accident on account of reckless motor driving.

"Are you going to make a suggestion to the Board regarding the matter?" questioned the scribe.

"We have all the men busy now. Our appropriations would not cover the appointment of another man, anyway," remarked the head of the department.

Try the Police Court.

He said that a few police court cases would have a taming effect on the autoists who persist in breaking the law and taking the corners at high speed.

Yesterday and to-day at noon there have been two accidents. Yesterday a cyclist was knocked off his wheel by an autoist, and to-day a boy was knocked down by another car.

Bacillus coli was not present in the city water during this month.

"The water so far this season has been fine," said Medical Health Officer Dr. McPherson last evening to The Review.

Water is being used in the city in large quantities. Other places are suffering from water with a weedy taste due to chlorine in the water, such as occurs when the water is stirred up by storms or flows over the intake pipe.

WATER POWERS IN THE TRENT VALLEY DISTRICT

Hon. Adam Beck Corrects Statement of Hon. Geo. P. Graham.

Toronto, April 24.—"Erroneous and misleading," was the description applied by Hon. Adam Beck in the Legislature last night with regard to the statement made in the House of Commons on Wednesday by Hon. George P. Graham. The former Minister of Railways and Canals drew attention to what he said was a statement made in the Ontario House by Hon. Mr. Beck to the effect that the Dominion would hand over to the province the water powers on the Trent Valley Canal, in regard to which an Exchequer Court suit pended.

"The statement of the Honorable Mr. Graham was erroneous and misleading to the Right Hon. Mr. Borden," declared the Minister. "I did not refer to any water powers having any connection whatever with the matter in the Exchequer Court. What I intended to convey to the House was that the government of to-day at Ottawa was in sympathy with the Hydro-Electric movement. When application was received for power from municipalities in the Trent district—from Peterboro and Lakefield—the commission applied to the Dominion Government for the right to develop power for these municipalities on the Trent. We thought there were several not alienated from the commission and not in control of the company already there. We made a formal application for dams 4 and 8. We asked the government to lease them to us on the same terms as they would grant them to any corporation. The Government notified us that when the commission was prepared to undertake the development of these dams the lease would be issued.

"There was no question of the province claiming water rights that had any connection whatever with the case now before the Exchequer Court."

At the last executive meeting, the names of Mrs. H. Waddell, Presbyterial President, Mrs. Chisholm, Corresponding Secretary and Mrs. Ridpath, of Lakefield Auxiliary, were forwarded to Toronto as eligible for membership on the Provincial Board of the newly amalgamated society; and Mesdames Waddell, McPherson, Turner, Chisholm and Rollins were appointed a committee of five to confer with a similar committee from the Presbyterial W.F.M.S. to arrange for officers, etc., for the new society to be formed in May.

FAVOR PLAYGROUNDS AND BATHING PLACES

Judge Huycke, Mayor Buller and Police Chief Thompson Feel They Are Necessary—Magistrate Dumble Speaks on the Subject at Police Court Session

"I am strongly in favor of Public Playgrounds, and also a public bathing place."—Judge Huycke.

"We certainly need Public Playgrounds and a public bathing place."—Mayor Buller.

"Our city has been too economical to make Playgrounds."—Magistrate Dumble.

"It is easier to handle one hundred boys on playgrounds than half a dozen on the street."—Chief Thompson.

Such are a few comments on the question of playgrounds and public bathing places.

Judge Huycke Approves.

Interviewed to-day, several prominent officials of the city expressed themselves greatly in favor of public playgrounds and a public swimming pool for the city of Peterborough.

Judge Huycke said that he was strongly in favor of playgrounds and a public bathing place. The city should have had it long ago. "We have parks, but parks are not much for children to play in," His Honor remarked. "Yes," he concluded, "I am very much in favor of the project."

"Well, it's a good thing. We need it, and I am in favor of it," stated Mayor Buller to the reporter, when asked his views on the matter. Ald. W. J. Johnston has the matter in hand, and he is a live wire, and there is something sure to be done, as when he starts a thing he generally carries it through."

Mayor Buller said it was the intention of Ald. Johnston to call a meeting shortly in regard to this matter.

Magistrate Dumble.

Magistrate Dumble, at this morning's session of Police Court, spoke of the great necessity fo public playgrounds. The City Council had disposed of considerable property which would have made excellent facilities for the purpose. To the boys who had appeared before him on the charge of disorderly conduct and were dismissed, he advised strongly to get up a petition with about 1,000 names and present it to the Council. They would heed that more so than the suggestions of older folks.

"Our city has been too economical to make playgrounds," remarked His Worship. The police did not want to interfere with their playing.

Chief Thompson said he would be glad to assist the boys in getting the use of any field in the city, if possible.

Other, various city officials are evidently greatly in favor of the projects, and are willing to render any assistance possible.

The Police Chief.

Chief Thompson remarked that it is easier to handle one hundred boys on the playground than a half dozen on the streets. The matter was one of the most important steps connected with police work. It was the boys brought up on the streets that eventually became criminals. It was not the proper place for any boy. Such cases as appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning were samples of the necessity of public playgrounds. Complaints are coming in continuously of boys playing on the streets and consequently the police have to take the matter in hand. The noise of the boys annoys the residents. Another important step was the public swimming pool, which was agitated at considerable length last year. To prohibit these boys from swimming in the river without proper bathing clothes may be a hardship, but they are breaking the law.

Lack of playgrounds eventually leads the boy to frequent pool rooms where he falls in with older boys who nine times out of ten lead him astray. One instance of a similar case appeared this morning, when a juvenile appeared in court on the charge of theft. This boy had been before the court repeatedly on various charges. This was a fair example of lack of playground discipline.

Truancy is also due to their downfall to a large extent. It was encumbent on the teachers to see that the absence of scholars was reported to the truant officers.

Boy's Secretary Galley, of the Y. M. C. A., is another strong advocate of the proposition, and an earnest worker for the cause.

General Secretary Hainsworth has always displayed considerable interest in the question. Physical Director Carson, who arrives here next month to assume the duties of physical director, is supervisor of playgrounds in Winnipeg.

BOARD OF TRADE AT BIG AD. CONVENTION IN JUNE

Space Already Reserved for Displays Which Will Place Peterboro in the Spot Light—Ad. Men Will Also Visit This City

One of the biggest and greatest business mens' conferences ever held in Canada will convene in Toronto for five days, commencing Sunday, June 21, 1914. The Associated Advertising Clubs of America will invade Toronto. The Queen City has for the past five years fought hard, earnestly and consistently to bring this monster convention to Canada. So large is the gathering of brainy business men that it is absolutely imperative to hold the daily sessions in the various exhibition buildings in Exhibition Park. Fifteen thousand delegates in all are expected.

In bringing this Ad. Club Convention to Canada, it is Toronto's idea to sell them first Toronto — then Canada—because the men connected with this association represent the money spending people of the capitalization of the American continent. In reserving space in the large exhibition building its the sole interesting purpose of the local board to sell to these men "Peterborough."

.... Space for Displays.

Already at this early date the board has reserved 50 ft. space for display purposes. On this space will be erected a booth, and Peterborough at heart workers will be in charge.

Peterborough's unparalleled possibilities, advantages and opportunities will be pumped into the heart of every man attending this big convention. It is also proposed to round up a big deputation and bring them down by special train—entertaining them by a motor drive around the city and a boat trip over the lift lock. Arrangements for this will be announced at a later date.

This booth, as arranged for, will be boxed in with big signs bearing the wording "Peterborough, the Electric City of Canada," and the general scheme of decoration will be very artistic. Samples of everything manufactured within the limits of our city will be represented, and from this booth will issue answers to all questions regarding the unsurpassed advantages as well as well written literature telling about the wonderful waterways, lift lock, railroad facilities, ideal manufacturers' sites, etc.

Letters of local manufactarers telling the "whys" of locating here—and the prosperous after results will be open for inspection.

Peterborough will be well represented at this gigantic convention in such a remarkable way that every citizen connected with the local club are nursing an anticipation of attending, will be justly proud of the showing and with the way the new Board of Trade is conducting its efforts to advertise and bring prospective manufacturers into closer touch with the desirable opportunities of this great city.

The Board's slogan is advertise Peterborough—first, last, always—and advertise Peterborough it will.

MR. P. CAMPBELL, CHAIRMAN OF CLEARING HOUSE FOR THE CONVENIENCE OF LOCAL BANKS

Another strong evidence of the growth of this city is given out by the establishment of a clearing house for the convenience of local banks. Some time ago the necessary permission was obtained from the Bankers' Association, and at a recent meeting the following officers were elected:

Chairman—Mr. P. Campbell.

Vice-Chairman—Mr. J. Crane.

Secretary-Treasurer—Mr. D. D. Brown.

All the local bank managers are members of the board.

The word clearing houses explains itself. Under present methods two clerks from each bank are sent out every morning with the cheques and bills on other banks, and in this manner a form of clearing is carried on with great delay and no small amount of confusion. With a clearing house each bank will send two clerks there in the morning a few minutes before ten o'clock, and they will take their regular places at a large table. An accountant from one of the banks will act in the capacity of chairman. When he finds all the banks represented, and all have reported to him their amount, he will ring a bell and the exchange will be carried on in an orderly manner and with the assurance of its being completed in the course of a few minutes. The chair will be filled as stated above by the accountants of the various banks, each one serving for a month at a time. The idea of having the clerks report to the chairman what amount they have will enable the Board to ascertain the amount of business transacted in the city and in the course of a year can compare with the preceding year as they do in the larger system.

The room secured is the speacious room over the Bank of Montreal, and it is at present being fitted with a large table, divided off into sections, and each section will be allotted to one of the banks. It is expected that a start will be made by the first of May. The following banks will be represented: Bank of Montreal, Bank of Ottawa, Bank of Toronto, Bank of Commerce, Dominion, Union, Nova cSotia, and Royal.

BOYS ARE CHASED OFF THE STREETS

Lads Appeal to Police Chief for Playgrounds

Montreal, April 24.—"It's too bad, boys, but the law says there shall be no games played on a public thoroughfare, and that is what the Champ de Mars is. You'll have to find some other place for your games."

Then, when the six lads had filed out of his office, a little sadly, he turned and said: "There certainly should be some playgrounds for the children in the lower end of the city here. These boys and girls, after school, have not the time to go away up to Parc Lafontaine or Fletcher's Field, and many of them are too small to walk all that way. Down here there are only the narrow streets, not even a vacant lot where they can kick a ball around or get a decent chance to exercise."

The six boys had been playing football on the Champ de Mars, and a constable had driven them off. The boys had concluded that, as the Champ de Mars did not look like a street, it was not a street, and that the constable had exceeded his duty. They bravely walked over to the City Hall Annex to find out.

REPAIR WORK AT THE FLOATING BRIDGE

The first move toward repairing the floating bridge at Chemong Lake was made yesterday, and it is expected that it will take until next Wednesday to complete the work. All the ice has entirely disappeared and the residents find no trouble in crossing with a boat. The parishioners of St. Martin's on this side, who are not fortunate enough to have a boat at their disposal, will have to drive around.

CONGRATULATIONS, IT IS NOW DR. E. H. WOOD

Edward H. Wood, M.B., son of R. E. Wood, Crown Attorney, is receiving congratulations on obtaining his degree of Bachelor of Medicine at Queen's University. Dr. Wood will leave May 1st for New York, where he will take a position as house surgeon in one of the leading hospitals.

HOLD FORD DAY DEMONSTRATION

Mr. J. J. Duffus, the Local Agent and Ford Owners to Celebrate

Mr. J. J. Duffus, the well-known local agent for the Ford Automobile has about completed arrangements for the first annual Ford Demonstration Day to be held in this city tomorrow. All the owners of Ford cars living in the vicinity will be present and an informal banquet will be held in the Oriental Hotel at 1.15, followed by a few short speeches by representatives of the Ford Company and local gentlemen. After the banquet five or six loads of cars now on their way, will be unloaded and will head a parade around the city. All the Ford cars at present in use in this section of the province will likewise participate in this big parade. It is expected that every gentlemen owning a Ford car will be present for this big event. The visitors will include parties from Havelock, Norwood, Keene, Millbrook and Lakefield.

THE CASE OF THE GRAND TRUNK.

THE PRESIDENT of the Grand Trunk Railway, Mr. E. J. Chamberlain, is making the case of the Grand Trunk Pacific clear to the Government and the public. He has asked the Government for a guarantee which amounts to about $25,000,000. He has explained that this loan is not assistance in the usual form, but that it merely carries out some of the terms of the original charter granted by the Laurier Government. The terms of the charter which governs this loan are as follows :—

"The division will be built at the cost of the company—the Government aiding by guaranteeing 3 per cent. first mortgage bonds of the company, principal and interest for fifty years, to the extent of $13,000 per mile on the prairie section, and for three-quarters of whatever the cost per mile may be of the mountain section, and the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada guaranteeing an issue of 4 per cent.. mortgage bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, principal and interest, for fifty years to provide the remainder of the cost of construction.

"The company is to pay the interest on the bonds issued on the prairie section, and guaranteed by the Government from the date of the completion of the road the interest during construction being provided for in the cost of construction ; but the Government will pay the interest on the bonds guaranteed by it on the mountain section for the first seven years after the completion of the line, with no recourse on the company for the interest so paid."

The president has explained that owing to the high cost of material, advance in wages, difficulties of construction, and the general expensive nature of the mountain section, the $14,000,000 appropriated in 1905 by the government, for the purpose, was insufficient. Now the company simply asks the government to implement the original promise and undertaking of the former government. It does not ask anything new or unthought of ; it is not making fresh demands which were not contemplated, and which might cause apprehension at this time when the railway situation is so acute.

One is tempted to condemn the late government for under-estimating the cost of the mountain section of the Grand Trunk Pacific. They certainly deserve condemnation for so grossly under-estimating the total cost of the road. A gap of a hundred millions between estimate and actual cost is so great that it necessarily shows inefficiency. However, as far as the position of the present loan is concerned, the causes for under-estimating the mountain section are more reasonable than those governing the rest of the road, for, rising prices or changes in the market value of materials, can not be exactly determined for a future period of several years. While the Borden Government is bound to follow out the terms of the charter, and grant this assistance to the road, it has been intimated that very likely a new basis will be sought in regard to the government's obligations to the Grand Trunk Pacific, a procedure to which the company will not object.

SMOKING AMONG WOMEN.

ANDREW BRODER'S Cigarette Bill, while it has not become a law, has brought to light conditions that have shocked the public because they did not know such existed. The committee investigating cigarette evils will likely have as illuminating a tale of woe to tell as that which ornamented the pages of the famous Gutelius-Staunton Report. The committee has learned on good authority that high society women and prostitutes in Montreal are much addicted to cigarette smoking. Practically the same condition exists in many cities. While society women who smoke are in bad company, there does not seem to be any great reason why they should not smoke if they desire to do so. Smoking does not appear lady-like to men because they are unaccustomed in this country to see women smoke. Grant that cigarette smoking has a bad affect, have not women as much right to smoke as men ? Men get drunk, smoke, and do many things that militate, in the opinion of many, against their health and efficiency. They are, so it is said, allowed to marry and bring children into the world weakened from birth and the whole rub of sin is its consequence on the innocent. But, so long as men have a license to sin, which they have enjoyed for a long period of time in the religious and social conception of liberty, women cannot be denied the same license. Legislation might be a benefit in this country where, as far as women are concerned, the evils of cigarette smoking are not very common. Among the Spanish peoples of Central and South America women smoke as commonly as in this country they eat bon-bons. Those countries produce women that are beautiful, but who are not of high mental and physical capacity. Legislation might forestall decadent tendencies in Canada, but, up to the present time, appeal has been largely made to the sense of duty, of responsibility and of morality in the people to abstain from things having a deteriorating effect. Perhaps the time has come when the influence of religion and morality need supplementing, when individual liberty needs curtailing by legislative enactment. Local Option and restrictive legislation on various articles point that way. As far as smoking among women is concerned it is impossible to be consistent and prevent them from smoking when men are allowed to do so. Perhaps the most effective way of improving the situation would be to admit their right to do so but further at the same time a public sentiment against it.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

PRESIDENT WILSON hopes to deal with Mexico by means of a "short war." The difficulties in the way of the United States are such that the war may be of considerable duration. The physical features of Mexico are of a kind that it presents possibilities of a short war, very much as Switzerland presented to conquest by Austria. The little Alpine democracy was at one time subject to the Hapsburg line, but, after various wars, lasting through a long period of time, the Monarchy of the Danube was content to bury the hatchet with the mountaineers, whom they could not conquer. The Mexicans are a much inferior people to the Swiss ; they are decadent Spanish mixed with ancient Aztec Indian stock, and, as a people, possess the vices of both and the virtues of neither. Yet there is a sufficient population in Mexico, amounting to about 15,000,000, and the people are war-like enough to provide a very respectable war. The mountainous nature of a large part of the country gives them a great advantage in fighting an invading force. The climate is also in their favor, for in the last Mexican war about sixty years ago, malaria and yellow fever were serious enemies of the American forces. Moreover, ships of the Dreadnought type are not suitable for coast blockade ; their heavy draught puts them in danger of running on coral reefs. Smaller and lighter craft are more suitable, but here again nature provides difficulties, for the Gulf of Mexico is subject to sudden and violent storms. There are no more harbours now than there were in 1846, coral reefs are just as numerous ; and, as far as armed intervention with Mexico is concerned, it is likely to be as costly to the Navy as to the Army. However, the duration of the war will likely be determined on the success attending the blockade and on the continuance of internal dissension. Time alone will show whether President Wilson's hopes of a short war will be realized.

PROBABLY GOD AND A MAN INTERVENED.

DAY AFTER DAY there appear in the Montreal newspapers narrations of white slave captures. The other day no less than nine Parisian Frenchmen and thirteen women were caught red-handed there and punished accordingly. To further convince those "criminally innocent" people who disbelieve or pretend to disbelieve all these horrible things, it may be well to relate the story of an escape in Hamilton, Ont., last week, which excited no particular comment, although perfectly true, in view of the fact that, horrible, nay devilish, as these affairs are, they have become so common as to excite less comment than they certainly deserve.

The true story is as follows: A very pretty and modest young girl was sent by her mother to a music store or a shop where music was sold, for some music, and while there sat down to play over a tender little melody that she contemplated buying. A well-dressed woman standing by took in the situation and approaching the young girl asked her to play it again, and then professing to be greatly overcome by the sweetness of the music, told the young girl of her little bed-ridden crippled boy at home who loved music. She begged the little girl to visit him and play for him. This the girl consented to do, but not until she got her mother's consent, which would mean that the child would not be able to go on the errand of mercy till the next night. The woman made an appointment to meet the young girl at the post office corner at a certain hour and left the shop. The floorwalker had been quitely taking in the whole situation and approached the young girl, who innocently told him of what she was to do. The next evening, the floorwalker was at the post office at the appointed hour and so was the little girl. Presently a big motor car drove up, with blinds drawn, and the woman stuck her head out of the window and called to the child. But before the girl could go forward, the floorwalker stepped up, looked into the car and saw the woman and three men there. Finding that they were discovered, the car shot forward and disappeared, and the little girl burst into tears. It dawned upon her for the first time how near she had been to the mouth of hell. Surely you will say that God must have intervened. Probably, and a man also. But how many there are who disbelieving, make such things possible, and would make this hideous crime possible. Sometimes it is difficult to say whether the "innocent" or the wicked are the more guilty.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

GREAT BRITAIN'S drink bill for 1913 amounts to $835,000,000, an increase of $25,000,000 over the year 1912. In view of the merry time Britishers must have disposing of so vast an amount of booze, the recent falling off in immigration is accounted for.

Hearst Interested in Mexico.

Toronto Mail and Empire.

It is reported that when Hearst sent his photographers to Cuba he said to them, "You furnish the pictures ; we'll furnish the war," and undoubtedly his newspapers did much to bring about the struggle. Hearst will have a more selfish interest in fomenting trouble with Mexico. He is said to have millions of dollars invested in that country.

For the Man Who Made Money Out of It.

Colliers.

A man was put to death in the electric chair at Auburn, N.Y. He had murdered a policeman. But he stated that he stood ready to pay for his follies—that he had served in the American army and navy and wanted to take his punishment "as a soldier should." The newspaper adds ; Sharp, the murderer, had been addicted to the use of intoxicants and occasionally drugs, and while in a raving condition started trouble in his boarding place, May 18, 1912. When Patrolman Ford entered to learn the cause of the trouble, Sharp shot him. He also shot a civilian before he was overpowered. This man Sharp was a failure—from society's standpoint. He worked his own ruin, and brought down another man's life with his own. Yet, from the whiskey-dealing standpoint, from the drug vender's, Sharp was a success—while he lasted. He was an excellent customer.

THE GIVERS

By Walt Mason

The great, fine men are oft obscure; they have no wide, resounding fame, that experts warrant to endure until the finish of the game. Old Clinkerbeard is such a man, and though he has no store of yen, he's always doing what he can to help along his fellowmen. He has no millions to disburse, but when he meets a hungry guy, he digs a quarter from his purse, which buys the sinkers and the pie. The gifts of bloated millionaires mean nothing of a sacrifice; they sit around in easy chairs and count the scads they have on ice; if Croesus gives ten thousand bucks to help some college off the rocks, he still can have his wine and ducks—he has ten million in his box. The widow's mite, I do not doubt, in heaven made a bigger splash than sheckels Pharisees shelled out from their large wads of ill-gained cash. And so the poor man, when he breaks the only William in his pants, to buy some widow tea and cakes, is making angels sing and dance. In fertile soil he's sowing seeds, and he shall reap a rich reward; for he who gives the coin he needs, is surely lending to the Lord.

Birthdays of Note

FRIDAY, APRIL TWENTY-FOURTH

REV. DR. R. P. MACKAY, Foreign Mission Secretary of the Presbyterian Church and an ex-moderator of its General Assembly, was born sixty-seven years ago to-day in famous East Zorra Township. He is one of the conspicuous figures in the Presbyterian denomination, a man of strong character, wide knowledge and winning personality. Perhaps the most interesting thing about him is the frequency with which he is taken by devout members of the Roman Catholic Church for a priest of their communion. This is owing largely to his appearance, which is decidedly ecclesiastical. Even Catholic priests themselves have mistaken him for one of themselves, as witness once when he was riding on a train and was seated immediately in front of a priest. The latter presently leaned over and said, "Good morning, father; where is your parish?"

ENGLISH PAPERS ARE SARCASTIC

Surprise at Carranza's Note Not Creditable to U.S. Statesmen

LONDON, April 24. — The London morning papers comment in an ironical vein on the dealings of President Wilson and Secretary Bryan with Mexico.

The Standard compares them to philosophers from Mars.

The Post says:

"They ought carefully to have considered what sort and size of war they wanted before they allowed shots to be fired. President Wilson is now at war with both halves of the Mexican people. How by that war he can give the Mexicans the self-government that seems to him desirable we cannot imagine."

The Daily News says:

"If the Washington Government was really surprised at Carranza's ultimatum, its surprise is not very creditable to its statesmanship and intelligence."

Left 78 Descendants.

WINDSOR, April 24.—Mrs. Fabien Charette, who died at Sandwich East, aged 82, is survived by 10 children, 47 grandchildren, 14 great-grandchildren and one great-great-grandchild.

We don't like to be too critical, but did ever a government package of flower seeds contain any variety of seeds that anybody ever wanted to plant?

KINGSTON, Ont., April 24.—It is reported that Major R. W. Leonard will not make any further concessions in regard to his military training offer to Queen's University. He insists upon the board being composed of six members, three military and three academic. Queen's has been holding out for a majority of academic members on the board. It is said that Major Leonard wants to have some control of the scheme for two or three years in order to get it on a good basis.

At a meeting of the University trustees on the 29th, it is expected that the offer will be accepted.

COWARDICE COURT
BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON

"I beg your pardon," he said; "doubtless you are not aware that this is prescribed land."

"Then you are Mr. Shaw?" she asked, checking her horse with premeditated surprise and an emphasis that puzzled him.

"Yes, madam," he responded gravely, "the hated Shaw. Permit me," and he politely grasped the bridle rein. To her amazement he deliberately turned and began to lead her horse, willy nilly, down the road, very much as if she were a child taking her first riding lesson.

"What are you doing, sir?" she exclaimed sharply. There was a queer flutter of helplessness in her voice.

"Putting you off," he answered laconically. She laughed in delight, and he looked up with a relieved smile. "I'm glad you don't mind. I have to do it. These feuds are such beastly things, you know. One has to live up to them whether he likes it or not."

"So you are putting me off your place? Oh, how lovely!"

"It isn't far, you know—just down by those big rocks. Your line is there. Of course," he went on politely, "you know that there is a feud."

"Oh, yes; I've heard you discussed. Besides, I met Tompkins and James this morning. Pardon me, Mr. Shaw, but I fancy I can get on without being led. Would you mind"—

"My dear madam, there is no alternative. I have taken a solemn vow personally to eject all Bazelhurst trespassers from my place. You forget that I am, by your orders, to be thrown into the river and all that. Don't be alarmed! I don't mean to throw you into the river."

"By my orders? It seems to me that you have confused me with Lord Bazelhurst."

"Heaven has given me keener perception, your ladyship. I have seen his lordship."

"Ah, may I inquire whether he was particularly rough with you this afternoon?"

"I trust I am too chivalrous to answer that question."

"You are quite dry."

"Thank you. I deserve the rebuke, all right."

"Oh, I mean you haven't been in the river."

"Not since morning. Am I walking too fast for you?"

"Not at all. One couldn't ask to be put off more considerately."

"By Jove," he said involuntarily, his admiration getting the better of him.

"I beg your pardon," with slightly elevated eyebrows.

"Do you know, you're not at all what I imagined you'd be."

"Oh? And I fancy I'm not at all whom you imagined me to be."

"Heavens! Am I ejecting an innocent bystander? You are Lady Bazelhurst?"

"I am Penelope Drake. But," she added quickly, "I am an enemy. I am Lord Bazelhurst's sister."

"You—you don't mean it?"

"Are you disappointed? I'm sorry."

"I am staggered and—a bit skeptical. There is no resemblance."

"I am a bit taller," she admitted carefully. "It isn't dreadfully immodest, is it, for one to hold converse with her captor? I am in your power, you see."

"On the contrary, it is quite the thing. The heroine always converses with the villain in books. She tells him what she thinks of him."

"But this isn't a book, and I'm not a heroine. I am the adventuress. Will you permit me to explain my presence on your land?"

"No excuse is necessary. You were caught red handed, and you don't have to say anything to incriminate yourself further."

"But it is scacely a hundred feet to our line. In a very few minutes I shall be hurled relentlessly from your land and may never have another chance to tell why I dared to venture over here. You see, you have a haunted house on your land, and I"— She hesitated.

"I see. The old Renwood cottage on the hill. Been deserted for years. Renwood brought his wife up here in the mountains long ago and murdered her. She comes back occasionally, they say; mysterious noises and lights and all that. Well?"

"Well, I'm very much interested in spooks. In spite of the feud I rode over here for a peep at the house. Dear me, it's a desolate looking place. I didn't go inside, of course. Why don't you tear it down?"

"And deprive the ghost of house and home? That would be heartless. Besides, it serves as an attraction to bring visitors to my otherwise unalluring place. I'm terribly sorry the fortunes of war prevent me from offering to take you through the house. But as long as you remain a Bazelhurst I can't neglect my vow. Of course, I don't mean to say that you can't come and do what you please over here, but you shall be recognized and treated as a trespasser."

"Oh, that's just splendid! Perhaps I'll come tomorrow."

"I shall be obliged to escort you from the grounds, you know."

"Yes, I know," she said agreeably. He looked dazed and delighted. "Of course I shall come with stealth and darkly. Not even my brother shall know of my plans."

"Certainly not," he said with alacrity. (They were nearing the line.) "Depend on me."

"Depend on you? Your only duty is to scare me off the place."

"That's what I mean. I'll keep sharp watch for you up at the haunted house."

"It's more than a mile from the line," she advised him.

"Yes, I know," said he, with his friendliest smile. "Oh, by the way, would you mind doing your brother a favor, Miss Drake? Give him this watch. He—er—he must have dropped it while pursuing me."

"You ran?" She accepted the watch with surprise and unbelief.

"Here is the line, Miss Drake," he evaded. "Consider yourself ignominiously ejected. Have I been unnecessarily rough and expeditious?"

"You have had a long and tiresome walk," she said, settling herself for a merry clip. "Please don't step on our side." He released the bridle rein and doffed his hat.

"I shall bring my horse tomorrow," he remarked significantly.

"I may bring the duke," she said sweetly.

"In that case I shall have to bring an extra man to lead his horse. It won't matter."

"So this rock is the dividing line?"

"Yes; you are on the safe side now—and so am I, for that matter. The line is here," and he drew a broad line in the dust from one side of the road to the other. "My orders are that you are not to ride across that line at your peril."

"And you are not to cross it either at your peril."

"Do you dare me?" with an eager step forward.

"Goodby."

"Goodby! I say, are you sure you can find the Renwood cottage?" he called after her. The answer came back through the clatter of hoofs, accompanied by a smile that seduced his self possession.

"I shall find it in time."

For a long time he stood watching her as she raced down the road.

"At my peril," he mused, shaking his head with a queer smile. "By George, that's fair warning enough. She's beautiful."

At dinner that night the Hon. Penelope restored the watch to her brother, much to his embarrassment, for he had told the duke it was being repaired in town.

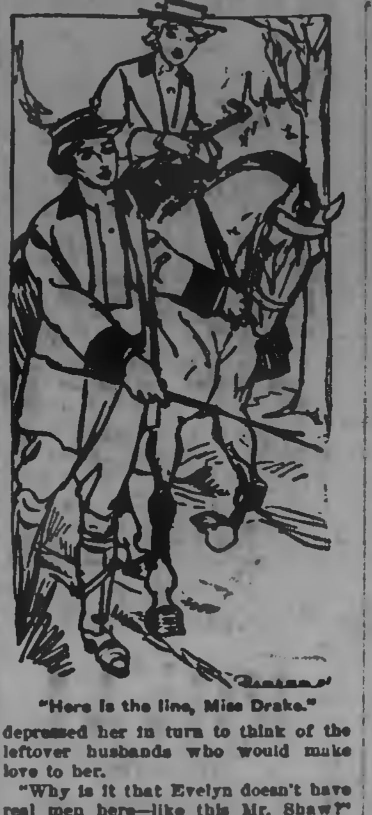
"It wasn't this watch that I meant, old chap," he announced irreverently to the duke, quite red in the face. "Where did you find it, Pen?" She caught the plea in his eye and responded loyally.

"You dropped it, I daresay, in pursuing Mr. Shaw."

The positive radiance which followed dismay in his watery eyes convinced her beyond all doubt that her brother's encounter with the tall Mr. Shaw was not quite creditable to Bazelhurst arms. She listened with pensive indifference to the oft repeated story of how he had routed the "insufferable cad," encouraged by the support of champagne and the solicited approval of two eye witnesses. She could not repress the mixed feelings of scorn, shame and pity, as she surveyed the array of men who so mercilessly flayed the healthy, fair faced young man with a gentle strength.

The house party had been augmented during the day by the arrival of a half a dozen men and women from the city, brain fagged, listless and smart. The big cottage now was full, the company complete for three weeks at least. She looked ahead, this fresh, vigorous young Englishwoman, and wondered how she was to endure the staleness of life.

There was some relief in the thought that the men would make love to the good looking young married women—at least part of the time—and—but it depressed her in turn to think of the leftover husbands who would make love to her.



"Here is the line, Miss Drake."

"Why is it that Evelyn doesn't have real men here—like this Mr. Shaw?" she found herself wondering vaguely as the night wore on.

CHAPTER III.

In Which a Dog Trespasses.

PENELOPE was a perverse and calculating young person. She was her own mistress and privileged to ride as often as she pleased, but it seemed rather odd—although splendidly decorous—that she did not venture upon Mr. Shaw's estate for more than a week after her first encounter with the feudal baron. If she found a peculiarly feminine satisfaction in speculating on his disappointment, it is not to be wondered at. Womanly insight told her that Randolph Shaw rode forth each day and watched with hawklike vigilance for the promised trespasser. In her imagination she could almost hear him curse the luck that was helping her to evade the patrol.

One morning after a rain she rode with the duke to the spot where Shaw had drawn his line in the road. She felt a thrill of something she could not define on discovering that the wet soil on the opposite side of the line was disfigured by a mass of fresh hoof prints. She rejoiced to find that his vigil was incessant and worthy of the respect it imposed. The desire to visit the haunted house was growing more and more irresistible, but she turned it aside with all the relentless perverseness of a woman who feels it worth while to procrastinate.

Truth to tell, Randolph Shaw was going hollow eyed and faint in his ceaseless, racking watch for trespassers.

WELSH CHURCH BILL.

Government Had Majority of 84, a Drop of 15.

LONDON, April 23.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—The Government is completely satisfied with Tuesday night's division on the Welsh Disestablishment Bill, although compared with last year's figures there is a drop of fifteen votes.

The figures were: For the bill, 349; against it, 265. Two Liberals abstained from voting, and one of them, Sir E. Beauchamp, voted against the bill. The Irish Nationalists attended in full force, no fewer than seventy of them supporting the Government.

This marks the third succeeding session in which the Commons have affirmed the principle of the present measure. It now only remains for the bill to be read a third time and be submitted to the Lords one month before the session is through to give it the privileges of the Parliament Act.

CHICAGO, April 23.—Rains that put a stop to the danger of drouth in that part of the country west of the Missouri River had a bearish effect today on the wheat market here. ### Austrian Emperor's Condition.

VIENNA, April 24.—The condition of Emperor Francis Joseph was not so satisfactory yesterday as had been indicated in preceding bulletins. The doctor's report, issued yesterday, said his Majesty's rest Wednesday night was disturbed by fits of coughing. The catarrhal symptoms showed no signs of abatement, but the imperial patient's strength and appetite were satisfactory.

Won't Ban Pictures.

OTTAWA, April 24.—On the suggestion of the two party leaders in the Senate, Senator Choquette yesterday dropped for this session his bill to make it a criminal offence to publish pictures of persons accused of crime. He said part of his purpose had been served by calling public attention to this question. He promised to present a similar bill next session.

Gypsies In Stouffville.

STOUFFVILLE, April 24.—A band of gypsies passed through Stouffville Wednesday. After they had gone, Mr. Stewart, of Stive Brothers, found that they had robbed him of a roll of bills. Constable Pennock followed the band and got the money back from the accused, a fortune-teller.

Speedy Warships.

LONDON, April 24.—Three ships of the home fleet, the Lion, Queen Mary, Princess Royal, and the New Zealand, are reported to have recently engaged in a speed test when the Queen Mary, steaming 34 knots an hour, won. The Lion was second and the Princess Royal third.

Duke Among the Ice.

MONTREAL, April 24.—Yesterday the Duke of Connaught was taken for a trip down the St. Lawrence as the guest of the Harbor Commission, and watched with interest the vessel plowing through the ice, which is now rapidly leaving the river.

Use warm water to sprinkle starched clothes and the effect will be twice as satisfactory.

Culinary Notes

Nourishing Drinks.

Premature old age is often caused by not knowing how and when to take food. This extreme is as bad as that which loads the body with waste, causing food poisoning, but in the main, especially among women, the rasped nerves and the tired drawn lines in the face show the marks of a poorly balanced nutrition.

The following are a few recipes prepared and of a practical nature for making nutritious food drinks:

Egg and Milk.—Put a fresh egg and a glass of milk in a shaker. Shake thoroughly, sweeten and flavor to taste. This may be taken hot or cold.

Beef and Milk.—Add a teaspoonful of good beef extract to a cup of scalding milk.

Orange Tea.—Peel and take off all of the white skin from an orange. Put a slice in each cup and pour over it a light colored hot tea. A very refreshing drink.

Sentimental Punch.—For a hot beverage, melt six teaspoonfuls of grated chocolate in a saucepan. Add to it quickly six cupfuls of boiling milk. When the chocolate is thoroughly dissolved add a tablespoonful of sherry, a teaspoonful of vanilla extract and two tablespoonfuls of good clear coffee. Sweeten to taste and serve hot, with some whipped cream if desired.

Oatmeal Nectar.—Put four ounces of oatmeal into a porcelain kettle, add six ounces of white sugar and a lemon sliced thin. Mix with a little cold water; then pour on one gallon of boiling water. When served hot or cold it is a nourishing and refreshing drink.

The Sunday Dinner.

Why Sunday should be sacred to a midday dinner and the balance of the day devoted to digestion is not evident. It does seem rather material that so much must be sacrificed to mere feeding, when it is possible to have a good hot meal that will not require more than a half hour in its preparation.

If it must be a roast, a loin of veal, a leg of pork or a pair of chickens will be just as good if they are roasted on Saturday and set away in the dripping pan and given the last half hour in a good hot oven on the day of serving. A steak needs but little time and loin chops are better than the average leg of lamb.

Potatoes, if boiled for twenty minutes in their skins, can be finished in the oven during the same half hour, or cold boiled ones can be browned in the pan with the heating roast. If chops are the choice, the frying of the potatoes in deep fat is a matter of a few minutes.

Spaghetti, with cheese or tomato sauce, is a good substitute for potatoes, and the browning can be done in a few minutes. Any of the green vegetables can be boiled the day before, drained and reheated with butter. Cauliflower or onions can be rejuvenated with their cream dressing, and those vegetables that require long cooking can safely be simmering while the housekeeper is at church.

Herb Window Garden.

A few helps to the housekeeper in the shape of garnishes for various foods are acceptable when green things are at such a premium.

A pot of sprouting chives can be kept green on the kitchen window sill for weeks and with little care will grow nicely.

Pots of parsley grow well in cold weather, if started in a warm place. A box of parsley could easily be grown in a sunny sheltered window, and proves invaluable to the housekeeper.

A pot or two of mint, which grows so easily, is also a good hint for garnishing. These are only a few of the herbs that can be grown on the kitchen window sill.

It would really be a kindness to the cook to start some of these pretty green plants growing in her kitchen, as many cooks neglect to beautify the foods by decorating, simply because they do not have the materials at hand.

The Milk Bottle.

Many people, after ordering their milk from a good dairy, think that is all that there is to be done toward securing sweet, pure milk, but the way the milk bottle is cleansed and the way the bottle is put away afterward also have much to do with the problem of good milk.

The milk bottle has ample time to be contaminated with every known kind of germ before it is delivered, and so the safest way to cleanse bottles of these germs is by putting the bottle under the faucet and giving it a good bath before it is opened.

The cap and mouth of the bottle are thus thoroughly cleansed and may then be dried with a clean towel. It is much safer not to put the old pasteboard cap on the bottle again, for ten chances to one before the setting sun it will be found missing, and, besides, it soon becomes soiled with much handling.

When Choosing Food.

In working out a ration it is necessary to consider not only the food value of each thing eaten, but it is necessary to give it conditions which will not hamper it and keep it from giving up all its power.

An unpleasant consciousness of our digestive process is all too frequently due to the unfortunate combinations we make, and in this matter we are often the abject slaves of tradition.

ALL DOGS LOOK ALIKE UNDER AMENDED BY-LAW

Some Provisions Which the Owners of Canines Should Bear in Mind.

Stringent means are being adopted by the city this year to stop the usual dog nuisance such as dogs running at large without a tag.

Some of the extracts from the dog by-law passed this year by the Council are as follows:

The owner or possessor or harbourer, of every dog in the city on or before the 1st of May in each year, cause the same to be registered in the office of the Chief Constable and obtain from him a license and a tag, hereinafter mentioned and as payment to the Chief Constable of $1 for the dog, if only one dog, and $2 for each additional dog owned, possessed or harboured by any person, or any one, in the household, and $3 for other female dogs, if only one and $5 for each additional female animal possessed, owned or harboured by one person or any person in the household, the Chief Constable shall issue to the owner, possessor or harbourer such dog a license, which shall be a receipt of said payment and a numbered metallic tag for each dog, and shall enter the name of such in the register kept for such purpose.

Owner or possessors of kennels of pure bred dogs may, if registered in the Canada Kennel Register pay $10 for such kennel as they might possess.

Every person who permits a dog to remain about his house or premises shall be deemed the owner of such dog for all the purposes of this by-law.

No person shall permit a dog owned or possessed or harboured by him to run at large without a tag and be found in any righway or public place in the City of Peterborough unless it is under control of some person and has been registered and licensed as provided in other sections and unless it has a tag.

Any dog running at large contrary to this by-law may be seized and impounded.

It shall be the duty of the police officer or officer for that purpose, to seize such dogs running at large without tags. All dogs not redeemed after forty-eight hours shall be destroyed by the police department.

Any person unlawfully removing the collar or tag from any registered and licensed dog will be deemed guilty of an offence under this by-law.

No person shall keep or possess or harbour a dog dangerous to the community which attacks or acts as a nuisance and shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful offence.

A breach of the above sections will subject the offender to a fine of $10 on being convicted of such.

LACROSSE STICKS HERE NEXT WEEK

As the Tax Collector will be asked to hand in his rolls on the 1st of May, it is desirable that all taxes be paid before that date. Prompt action will save trouble and extra expense.

ICE AT THE LAKES.

The strong winds of the past few days up north have had a great tendency, as was phophesied to hasten the ice breaking up at Stoney Lake and other lakes in the back country. Some of the lakes may hold out yet though for a few weeks but Stoney Lake will probably break up within the next two weeks according to the information received.

A painter's brush may be used to dislodge dust from cracks and crevices about the house.

REV. C. LORD RETIRES FROM APSLEY MISSION

Upwards of Twenty Years Spent in North Peterboro

Out of the north has come a laborer among men, who will justly earn the rest he will enjoy before commencing his labors anew.

Nearly twenty years has the Rev. C. Lord, spent in and about the Anglican mission of Apsley and he has been a good and faithful servant. For twenty long years in sunshine and rain, he has travelled about the northern part of the County, over a territory in the neighborhood of 800 square miles.

He was the friend of all. The night might be dark and the distance long—which many times was the case—but the duty had to be performed and Rev. C. Lord was the man who responded.

Coming from England, Mr. Lord in being stationed in the north country, was the colleague and later the successor of the late Canon Harding who served the mission faithfully, devotedly for 30 years. Rev. Mr. Hartley also had been working there very earnestly for two or three years, succeeding to Young's Point Mission that had just been partially carved out of the larger mission. Mr. Lord was then freed to give fuller attention to the Methuen and Hawley Post settlements, the latter better known perhaps now, by their respective post offices as Glenalda and Owenbrook. Between these two settlements as the church membership increased, he built a church named St. Andrew's which was erected about eighteen years ago. More recently he has built a Mission room in Methuen and still more recently a beautiful new church in the place of the old church at Apsley. During the last year or so, a new church in Lasswade has been completed to be used instead of the old and much beloved log church.

The Mission of Apsley includes the whole of Chandos, parts of Anstruther and Burleigh, with Loon Lake of considerable size in the centre of it. It includes the new Settlement Mission, lumber camps, Woods Settlement, Clanricarde Clydesdale, and Rose Island, as well as Glenalda, Owenbrook, Lasswade and Methuen already mentioned.

Recently his flock presented him with a purse of gold and a suitcase, when the following address was also read:

Dear Mr. Lord:

We, the churchwardens and members of St. George's Church, together with other friends in the mission of Apsley desired to show some tangible proof of our good will and appreciation of your long services as Rector of the Mission.

We fully appreciate your untiring energy and good will both in sickness and in health to all people irrespective of doctrine or creed.

And it is a matter of great regret to all of us that you are severing your connection with us. It is our earnest desire and wish in whatever place you may be called to go that you may have good health and be spared to work and continue your faithful ministry as heretofore.

We wish you to accept this purse and also this token of regard in remembrance of us and as you enter into a fresh field of labor, may God bless you spiritually and give you abundant strength to carry on his work here on earth.

In closing we wish you farewell with all good wishes for the future.

Arthur Musgrave,
Charlie Grant,
Churchwardens.

LADY NICOTINE IS FOREIGN TO LOCAL FAIR SEX

Peterborough women are not cigarette smokers. The announcement is that cigarette smoking is fast becoming a common practice among society women of Ottawa, Toronto and other cities.

While there may be women in the city who smoke and who think nothing of the habit, taking it as a matter of course, yet these women are probably so few in number that they in no way influence the representative society of Peterborough, and if practiced is confined to exclusive occasions.

Some of the members of the city's "select" who probably have seen the city grow from a town when there were no strangers are responsible for the remark that they never have seen a local society woman with the fair lady nicotine, that is at a social function or in public or even when a lone guest was present.

This would seem to determine pretty definitely the attitude of the women of this city as to cigarette smoking, in public at any rate.

Englishwomen probably regard smoking among members of their sex in different light from the Canadian women, thinking nothing of the habit in many instances. There are women smokers in this city, no doubt, but they certainly do not smoke at functions, confining the practice to their own homes.

Speaking of the matter of sports however, Peterborough ladies make a good showing as horsewomen, golfers, curlers, motorists, tennis players and other sports.

Roads in Ennismore.

In speaking to Rev. Father Fitzpatrick this morning, The Review learns that the roads of that township are in excellent condition, and autos can travel anywhere without the slightest trouble. This is an unusual occurrence for this season of the year.

WHY NOT FRATERNAL DAY?

How about Fraternal Day?

It has been suggested that the fraternal societies join hands some Sunday this summer and hold a big parade, and afterwards attend divine service. One church would not have sufficient accommodation, so several churches could be used.

Another suggestion is that the societies and labor men hold a demonstration and parade to one of the parks, where addresses could be given by officers of the various organizations. Fraternal Day has been in the minds of individual members of local lodges and the idea has been approved. To further the proposition, a meeting will be held in the Sons of England hall, Hunter Street, Saturday evening, and all lodges are asked to send representatives to discuss the matter.

U.S. WAR DEPARTMENT WILL SEND FORCES TO VERA CRUZ

Gen. Frederick Funston of Aguinaldo Fame Will Be In Charge of Forces Sent to Mexican Port.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—United States troops moved last night to reinforce the American navy at Vera Cruz; the embargo on arms into Mexico was formally restored, and troops were ordered to the Mexican border primarily to relieve uneasiness among border residents, but also as a precaution against hostile military operations along the international lines. Secretary Garrison announced that a brigade of infantry and some artillery under Brig.-Gen. Frederick Funston, who made a reputation in the war in the Philippines, had been ordered to embark on the four army transports at Galveston for Vera Cruz to support the expeditionary forces of marines and bluejackets there. The chance that Gen. Maas, the Federal general, might make a return attack on Vera Cruz with reinforcements, and the possibile necessity of a forward movement toward Mexico City to protect fleeing Americans and the Vera Cruz railroad, were the underlying reasons for the military movement.

Rear-Admiral Badger has requested and obtained, it is reported, permission to capture all Mexican gunboats and vessels carrying troops or ammunition for the aid of the Mexicans around Vera Cruz.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL FUNSTON.

The restoration of the embargo on arms was officially announced after the pronouncement of Gen. Carranza, the Constitutionalist chief, that he regarded the seizure of Vera Cruz as a violation of Mexican sovereignty, had been considered by the Administration. While Mexican Constitutionalists here protested that Carranza's real attitude was friendly, the American Government decided to take no chances, and abruptly stopped the shipment of all arms into Mexico.

President Wilson early in the day had issued a statement warning Gen. Carranza, the Constitutionalist chief, that the United States was dealing now and would continue to deal with those whom Huerta commands, and "those who come to his support." Both Nelson O'Shaughnessy, the American Charge d'Affaires, and Senor Algara, the Charge d'Affaires of the Mexican Embassy here, have been given their passports, thus severing diplomatic relations between the Government and Mexico. This is not regarded by the Washington Government as presaging war, but a declaration of war by Huerta would not be unexpected.

During the day a special reserve fleet, ranging from Dreadnoughts to tiny gunboats, was ordered to the Atlantic coast of Mexico. No fighting of any consequence was reported from Vera Cruz. The American land forces pushed their way three miles inland to some important breastworks to make their position secure. Rear Admiral Fletcher and American Consul Canada were occupied most of the day in Vera Cruz handling hundreds of American refugees. British and German vessels took off more than 1,200 refugees at Tampico, and a general exodus of Americans from Mexican cities was reported.

ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY MEDAL FOR G.T.R. CONDUCTOR

The Royal Humane Society of Canada and the citizens of St. Hyacinthe combined this week to honor Mr. Austin Doyle, passenger train conductor on the Grand Trunk Railway. Mr. Doyle saved the life of a young woman at St. Hyacinthe Station on Dec. 9th last at a great risk to himself.

The train of which he had charge was bound for Montreal, and was drawing into the St. Hyacinthe Station at a slow rate of speed when Miss Cecilia Beauregard attempted to cross the tracks and was struck by the locomotive. From an opposite direction a freight train was approaching, and Miss Beauregard was thrown almost under its wheels. Conductor Doyle was on the steps of a coach and the young woman lay in the space between the two tracks. When she attempted to rise a portion of the brake apparatus struck her and she was in danger of being fatally injured. The conductor sprang from the train, and, grasping Miss Beauregard, held her in a safe position until the two trains drew clear.

Col. Bruce Campbell drew the attention of the Royal Humane Society to the conductor's action, and the Society decided to present Mr. Doyle with its bronze medal. The presentation of the medal took place at St. Hyacinthe on Monday. Mr. P. Payan, the mayor of the town, made the formal presentation, but Miss Beauregard was present and pinned the medal on to the conductor's uniform.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL COMPLETE BUT OPPOSITION IS DISPLEASED

Mr. Rowell Objects to the Allotment of Ridings and When Resolutions Are Voted Down in Committee Threatens to Obstruct Measure in the House—The Hydro Radial Bill Gets Second Reading.

TORONTO, April 24.—In the final draft of the redistribution bill to be submitted to the House only two new changes have been made. Strathroy will remain in North Essex and will not be shifted to West Essex as first proposed, and the Town of Port Dalhousie will go into East Lincoln instead of into West Lincoln.

At the last meeting of the committee yesterday Mr. Rowell and his supporters objected to the new plans of the Bruce ridings. They said that the Liberals were being hived and that no necessity for any change existed. The proposed change, they said, figured on Conservative majorities. "Simply penalizing the county because at the last election it committed the crime of returning three Liberals," said Mr. Rowell.

In reply, Hon. Mr. Lucas said that the same could be said of the treatment to Conservatives in Kent and Lambton.

Mr. Rowell, in opposing the "A" and "B" seating system in Toronto, read extracts from papers, and said that the Liberals were not getting a chance. Each member should have a seat of his own.

He pointed to the Greys as a further example of where the Government was unfairly strengthening its position. In the Victorias the Liberal candidates also were having their chances imperilled.

With all of these objections the Opposition submitted resolutions of amendment, which were voted down by the committee. Mr. Rowell said he would obstruct the passage of the bill in the House.

Hon. Adam Beck in the Legislature last evening expanded further on the proposals regarding the Hydro-radial systems.

Mr. Beck began his remarks by stating that the Liberals, although they much desired to claim credit in furthering the cause of publicly-owned power, had stood aside when they were needed most. The demand for radials had followed the remarkable success of the power system. In the new arrangement the promoter and his kind would be avoided, and the commission bond guarantees would finance the municipalities to the last dollar invested. The latter would pass bylaws asking the commission to submit estimates as to construction, revenue and other matters and the people would vote before anything was done.

Messrs. Rowell and Proudfoot expressed cordial support of the bill, but said the Opposition was entitled to considerable credit for it. They could see that Mr. Beck had converted some backward colleagues before he was allowed to bring in his bill.

The second reading of the radial bill then passed.

Hon. Mr. Hanna brought in the Ottawa water bill for first reading. He explained the two systems to be tried and that immediate action had been requested.

LAURIER SKATES ADROITLY AROUND FREE FOOD ISSUE

LEADER'S POLICY IS TAME

Amendment to the Budget Demanding Free Wheat, Free Implements and a "Considerate Revision of the Tariff" is Defeated at End of Long Debate—Hon. Mr. Foster Answers Sir Wilfrid.

OTTAWA, April 24.—The budget debate did not reach its conclusion yesterday, but it reached the brow of the hill when at an early hour this morning the House voted down an amendment offered by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The Laurier amendment declared flat-footed for free wheat and free agricultural implements, but did some clean skating around the free food proposition. It demanded a "considerate revision of the tariff" in view of the high cost of living.

The debate yesterday was opened by Sir Wilfrid in an adroit arraignment of the present budget and blaming the combines and the tariff for the high cost of living.

Hon. George E. Foster followed in one of his old-time speeches, which roused the Conservative members to the highest pitch of enthusiasm. There was no lack of prosperity on Ontario farms he said and the western farmer would be prosperous also if he would take up mixed farming. Refusal of free wheat would in the end force him to do this.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in opening, said the duty on agricultural implements was lowered so little that it was simply adding insult to injury. The Government certainly wasn't offering the farming class such encouragement. It had refused to give the farmer free implements and free wheat. The two main causes of the desertion of farming as an occupation were, in the opinion of the leader of the Opposition: (1) The high cost of production, and (2) the insufficiency of markets. The cure said Sir Wilfrid was to put agricultural implements on the free list. The argument advanced by the Government was that the western farmer must pioneer the same as did our forefathers in Ontario.

"If we cannot aid the dead," said Sir Wilfrid, "let us at least help the living."

Putting wheat and implements on the free list no more meant free trade than did the Conservatives declare themselves for free trade when they put lumber on the free list in 1894.

"The policy of my party," declared Sir Wilfrid, amid applause, "is not a policy of protection, but one which has as its principle a customs tax for revenue purposes only."

In support of the Liberal free wheat policy Sir Wilfrid pointed out that although Canada produced over 200,000,000 bushels of wheat, she only used 50,000,000 herself and exported another 50,000,000 to Britain, thus leaving on her hands 100,000,000 bushels. Did not the country immediately to the south of us offer the best possible market for the over-production? We could also sell our flour there, he contended, as it was his belief that in many of the states, particularly in the east, Canadian millers could successfully compete with American producers.

In replying, Hon. George E. Foster ridiculed Sir Wilfrid's statement that agriculture was on the decline. There was not a farmer who would agree with that statement. Both Provincial Governments and the Federal Government were aiding the farmer in every way possible. The free food policy of the Opposition certainly didn't encourage the "back to the land" movement. Evidently the ex-Premier's advisers had recognized this fact, because Sir Wilfrid had right-about-faced on that issue, and, to the surprise of the House, did not embody it in his amendment.

"Now the hon. gentleman advises us," said Mr. Foster, "that if we can't get free food he will get us free bran for our breakfast table."

Continuing, Mr. Foster declared that Sir Wilfrid was prone to change his views on the tariff. From 1876 to 1896 he had opposed the national policy, but upon assuming the reins of office he had immediately formulated a protective tariff. "At the present time," said Mr. Foster, "my hon. friend is not searching for a policy for Canada; he is looking in vain for a political policy which will put him back in power again, and unfortunately for him, he can't find such a policy." (Laughter.)

Not only this but Sir Wilfrid had framed a policy which made its appeal to a particular class and only a section of that class. While the granting of the demand for free wheat would undoubtedly be injurious to the millers and other considerable industries it would also intensify the present trouble in the west by encouraging the farmers there to specialise in wheat. The crying need of the west was for mixed farming, and refusal of the extension of the wheat market at the present time would certainly have the tendency of bringing about a greater variety of crops in the west.

Canada's problem did not lie in the finding of new markets. The high cost of living demonstrated that the need of the country was to encourage selling on the Canadian market.

Dr. Clarke (Red Deer) expressed himself optimistically as to the future of the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific, but intimated that he had no faith in the Hudson Bay Railway project.

H. H. Stevens (Con., Vancouver) and G. H. Boivin (Lib., W. Shefford) also spoke.

The Laurier amendments was defeated on the following vote. Yeas, 48; nays, 88; Government majority, 42.

VILLA NOT CONSULTED

HE REPUDIATES INTENTION TO JOIN HUERTA AGAINST UNITED STATES

ALL EUROPE WOULD LAUGH AT US, HE SAYS.

EL PASO, Texas, April 24. — Gen. Francisco Villa, head of the rebel military forces, informed George C. Carothers, special agent of the State Department, that he will decline to be dragged into a war with the United States by anybody.

"Why," he smiled, "all Europe would laugh at us if we went to war with you. They would say that 'little drunkard, Huerta, has drawn them into a tangle at last'."

Villa said he was not consulted in the drafting of the Carranza note transmitted to Secretary Bryan Wednesday night, and which was regarded as somewhat hostile in tone.

Carothers took supper with Villa and canvassed the situation thoroughly.

"Honest," said the rebel general, "I hope the Americans bottle up Vera Cruz so tight they can't ever get water into it. Your admiral is doing something it would have taken us a long time to accomplish, if we could have accomplished it at all."

Has Broken With Carranza?

JUAREZ, April 24.—Gen. Pancho Villa's presence here, his statements, which have been issued without qualification and with absolute frankness, and his contradiction of Gen. Carranza's position, have caused the well-founded report to originate here that he and Carranza have at last broken over matters of policy, and Villa has taken the destiny of his revolution in his own hands and has come to the border to learn the facts, to talk with his American friends, and to let the American people know just how he feels without the enshrouding fog of diplomatic words.

Canadian Menace is Given Interim Mailing Privileges

TORONTO, April 24.—The Canadian Menace, published at Aurora, Ont., has been granted interim mailing privileges by the Postmaster-General at Ottawa. Since Hon. Mr. Pelletier stated, in the House of Commons, that this Protestant publication had been refused mailing privileges, the Postoffice Department has received many indignant letters, petitions from all sorts of Protestant associations. Members of Parliament have been actively engaged during the past few weeks in the interests of The Menace, and its being refused privileges, enjoyed by others, has proved a lively topic for debate in the corridors at Ottawa. Roman Catholic opposition to the paper has also been strong.

"The Postoffice Department had no legal grounds for refusing us mailing privileges. Its opposition was unreasonable and unwarranted from the first," said the editor, Mr. H. M. Wodson. "Our paper will maintain a high standard of journalism, and will breathe a vigorous Protestantism. We are a purely Canadian concern, in no way connected with the paper bearing the same name across the line."

SMALL TOWN FIRE-SWEPT

TWENTY-EIGHT STORES AND DWELLINGS ARE BURNED

LOSS IS $65,000

OTTAWA, April 24.—The business section of Bryson, Que., the county seat for Pontiac, was wiped out last night by a conflagration, which, starting in Goddands' hotel at the end of Main street, early yesterday morning, swept the entire street, destroying twenty-eight stores and dwellings and entailing a loss of $65,000.

Owing to the absence of any fire fighting apparatus the residents were unable to stop the progress of the flames, which swept the whole street, with the exception of the courthouse and a couple of other buildings.

Over thirty families have been rendered homeless, and tents and provisions are being rushed from Portage Du Fort, Campbell's Bay, Shawville to the stricken town. All telegraph and telephone wires were burned down and communication was completely cut off.

Blaze at Kingsville.

KINGSVILLE, Ont., April 24. — A serious fire which broke out in the business district of Kingsville did much damage to half a dozen business places and for a time threatened to become general. The flames were first discovered by the night watchman in the Hart Block, on the south side of Mann street, and he promptly gave the alarm. Hard work by the volunteer fire department confined the flames to the one block, but the loss will, it is estimated, amount to between $20,000 and $30,000, most of which is covered by insurance.

The principal losers are: Herman Ulch, harness shop; Pearsall's photograph studio; Sherman's restaurant, and Hart estate. The cause of the fire is unknown.

A Haileybury Fire.

HAILEYBURY, Ont., April 24.—The Wright Block, in Main street, the temporary quarters of the Judicial offices of the district of Timiskaming, caught fire, causing a loss of several thousand dollars, and gutting the building. In this building were situated the offices of Sheriff Caldbick and Registrar T. J. Meagher, on the ground floor, and of Judge Hartman, Crown Attorney F. L. Smiley, Magistrate S. Atkinson, and other offices on the second storey. The basement is used as a bonded room by Hamilton & Co., liquor dealers. The Wright Block is of concrete block construction and was built after the fire of August, 1906.

Pelted Woman Orator.

NEW YORK, April 24. — Marie Gans, a speaker for the Industrial Workers of the World, mounted a soap box in Franklin square, near the city hall, yesterday and denounced the war measures in Mexico, as other I. W. W. orators did Wednesday. The crowd hooted her remarks, dragged her from the box and pelted her with vegetables and fruit. She sought shelter behind an American flag and continued her harangue.

Angel food should not be stirred in the ordinary way, but folded over with a long sweep of the spoon, so that the air cells may remain unbroken.

BOB STERLING REPORTS TO MANAGER BLOUNT
HOCKEY CLUB MEEETING TO-NIGHT

ANOTHER CANDIDATE FOR FIRST SACK
MONEY MEN ORGANIZE FOR THE SEASON

WHITE CAPS' IRON MAN JOINS THE TEAM; ALSO NEW FIRST SACKER

Youngstown, April 24—Curley Blount's aggregation wound up their first week of training with a fourteen innings game yesterday afternoon, followed by a fast infield practice. The inclement weather has, it appears, departed for good, and the Canuck team is settling down to real baseball. Their regular lineup has not as yet been selected, with the exception of King at second, Price at short, and Joe Byrne at third. They have cinched their positions, but the diminutive leader is changing the rest of his men in an effort to fill up the holes.

Sterling is in Camp and in Good Shape.

Bob Sterling favored the gathering by his presence yesterday afternoon, and although not out in uniform appears to be in fine shape. He has been playing hand ball all winter, and pitched a few games around home during the past few weeks. Bob expects to have a big year, and is particularly pleased with the catching department of the Petes and also their infield. All the rest of the pitchers steamed them across yesterday, and will keep it up from now on. Knutt Belting possesses more of the ginger than ever, and is burning Mully Miller's big mit. Cresswell is also showing considerable class.

The outfield is still uncertain, but the men are all going well, and Blount is not worrying over that section, he is, however, a little troubled over the initial sack question. O'Hearne and Flanagan will not do and he is giving Buck Freeman, of Saginaw, who reported yesterday morning, a try-out. In the afternoon session Freeman was out in uniform and displayed considerable class. If he makes good the infield, pitching and catching departments will be filled and Manager Blount will then utrn to the outfield. Conway is still showing up well and may get a place. Blount will cover one of the gardens himself, and will very likely use a catcher in the other one. He would rather carry a hard hitting catcher who can play the field fairly well than carry a fielder who would bat a little better but couldn't do any receiving.

Game To-morrow and one Sunday.

Girand, one of the fastest semi-pro. teams in the State of Ohio, will be here to-morrow for a game with the White Caps. They are carrying a pitcher who is the property of Connie Mack, of the Athletics, and batting against him the ability of the Petes to connect will be learned. Sunday afternoon the Pittsburg Independents will be here and the local fans are taking a big interest in the game.

SCHOOL BASEBALL

Boys at Queen Mary School Will Have Team

Queen Mary Public School ball players have organized with the following officers:

Hon. President.—Mr. Morrow.
President.—Mr. Stacey.
Manager.—L. Williamson.
Captain.—M. Thompson.
Water Boy.—Carl Kincade.
Mascot.—M. Thompson.

Ten grey and black suits were chosen.

A broad-minded woman isn't necessarily fat.

Manager Craven Still Waiting for First Sacker

St. Thomas, April 24.— The St. Thomas Ball Club officials are more or less worrying over the non-appearance in the training quarters of First Baseman Mills, the player purchased from the Saginaw Southern Michigan club about two weeks ago.

Mills wired President Stanley, stating that he would "write," but so far no word has been received and further inquiries have not elicited any news of the big fellow. The absence of Mills makes the Saints' lineup incomplete, and although they have a couple of fairly good 'uns trying out for that position Manager Craven would heave a sigh of relief if Mr. A. Mills would roll in.

SHAG HAS HURLER FROM DETROIT CLUB

Chatham, April 24.—Urban Shocker, one of Shag's likely looking righthanders, spent the last month of the season of 1913 with the Detroit Tigers. Confidennce is his middle name. He was used a lot in batting practice hurling to the hitters, and when Cobb would come to the plate, Shocker took particular delight in putting everything he had on the ball and then laugh at the great Tyrus.

Frank Navin, in talking about Shocker's nerve, said he had the goats of pretty nearly all the heavy artillery of the Detroit team. When Cobb came up Shocker put his hand to his mouth and shouted:

"Say, you big stiff, hit this one," and would float up his slow one which Ty would swing at before it was half way to the plate. He would hand him another of the same kind, then speed through a fast one. All the unsuccessful efforts of the Georgia Peach to connect would bring a yell of derision from Shocker.

When Manager Harry Martin, of Fort Wayne, told him he was sending him to Ottawa, he said:

"You're letting your best pitcher go."

Shocker has all kinds of pep and it is with the greatest difficulty Shaughnessy can get him to leave the field after he has been working.

BANKERS READY FOR BALL SEASON

Will Enter City League or Mercantile Organization

The Bankers are ready. It matters not to them whether a Mercantile or City League be formed this year, they're going to be in the swim. A meeting of their various Banks held last night in the Bank of Montreal chambers elected the following officers:

Hon. Presidents: All the managers of local banks.
President—Mr. F. N. McCrimmon.
Vice-president—V. Corkery.
Sec'y-Treas.—C. H. Paton.
Executive: The above officers and Mr. G. Minorgan.

The money men have their last season uniforms all fussed up, and are anxiously awaiting the forming of a league.

CRICKET

The annual meeting of the Campbellford Cricket Club was held last evening. Several good players from the old country have located in Campbellford, and they will add greatly to the strength of the home team.

KELLY HARRIS HAS JOINED ERIE YANKS

Erie, April 24.—The Yannigans crossed bats with the Regulars at Perry Field yesterday in a six inning game. The Yannigans came off victors with a score of 6 to 2 in their favor. During the game all pitchers had a chance to show their ability and form.

C. Kelly Harris, the well known outfielder, reported in the morning in uniform.

"Dummy" Taylor and Jack Dawson are the only members that have not as yet reported for duty. Dawson will report in time for Saturday's game and Taylor will report for duty the first of May.

The All Stars of Buffalo, managed by Nattress, and composed of all professional players, will play the Erie Regulars Sunday afternoon at Perry Feld.

TIN CAN IS RATTLING AT YOUNGSTOWN

Catcher McClure and Outfielder Dawson Receive Blue Envelope

(Special to the Review.)

Youngstown. April 24.—Ideal weather greeted the Petes in their morning practice to-day, and the presence of Bob Sterling put lots of life in the gang. The big slab artist steamed a few across and appears to be as good as ever, and with perfect control. The three infielders, King, Price and Byrne, work well together, while Freeman, the new initial sack guadian, shows signs of being fairly good. He did not have much of an opportunity to display his goods, but will this afternon and in to-morrow's game.

Mully Miller, Jack Kelly and Ruberg will compose the White Cap's catching squad, as McClure, the fourth man trying for a place was let out this morning. He was very fast, and showed signs of development, but Manager Blount wants men with a little experience.

Dawson, the outfielder, was also given his passport for lack of experience. That will leave Conway, Gaffney and Swartz fighting it out for the two positions in the outfield. If Ryberg shows neough ability to look after on outer plot he may be used at right, Blount at centre, and one of the above three at left.

In all probability O'Hearne, Flanagan, a couple of the aspirants to the infield and Tirrell, the recruit pitcher will be let out before Monday. Curley is waiting patiently for to-morrow's and Sunday's games, after which he should know the real strength of his team.

To remove fruit and vegetable stains from the hands, dip the fingers in strong tea for a few minutes and then wash them in clear warm water.

JEFF TESREAU IS SUED FOR $25,000

New York, April 24.—Charles Monroe Tesreau, the Giants' pitcher from the Ozark country, is being sued for $25,000 for alleged breach of promise of marriage. The plaintiff is Miss Clara Young, of Perryville, Mo., who says "Big Jeff" was engaged to her when he married Miss Helen E. Blake of this city shortly before the Giants started on their world tour.

The summons and complaint were served on Tesreau when he was at practice on the Brooklyn ball field yesterday. The case will be tried in the Supreme Court here, and from the many burning love letters in the possession of Miss Young's attorney, James B. Mackie, of No. 15 Wall Street, the indications are that the baseball world will have much to talk about.

"Big Jeff's" thoughts on "our dear manager," John McGraw, and many other interesting sidelights on the Giants in particular and baseball in general are contained in the love missives.

BASEBALLITIS

Jones, the Woodstock recruit, was the first player to be released by Ottawa.

Brantford Courier: Rube Deneau's absolute denial that he called Doc Reisling of London a lemon, a man whom he had never met, should satisfy Brantford fans that the Rube is a whole hearted sport who does not believe in casting slurs on the other fellow.

Brantford Expositor: The cities in the W. O. B. L. are prophesying continually that next year Brantford and St. Thomas will be in the W. O. B. L. and out of the Canadian League. The sooner these so-called prophets forget that, the sooner will they be received with honor in their own and other towns. Brantford will be in the Canadian League as long as there is a Canadian League.

Catcher Lidgate, now with Baltimore International League club, will probably go to Hamilton. At least, this is the expectation of Manager Yates. Yates is also counting on the arrival of one of Dunn's two recruit backstops.

"Bunny" Brundage, the Chatham player, who set the Canadian League on fire at the start of last season, and who has signed to play with St. Thomas is an interested spectator at the workouts of the Senators in Chatham. Brundage has not received any word from the St. Thomas club as yet.

Once again does the Hamilton outfit change their name. They will now be known as the Athletics. That's one way of covering up the past.

M. M. Robinson, sporting editor of the Hamilton Spectator, and by the way, an old Peterboro boy, has been appointed official scorer for Jungle Town.

Jack White is sure of the left field job with the Hams, or rather the Athletics.

Harry Corns has as yet failed to appear with Dr. Yates' gang.

Bradshaw has refused to play in the Canadian League. No wonder after his work down south with the Leafs.

Old Pete Behan is going as well as ever and the Erie fans are looking on him as a second Barry. Wait till Pete lets an easy grounder get by.

The Children's Day idea did not meet with the approval of the Hamilton directors.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Gaiety and sociability were much in evidence at the Armouries yesterday, when the Independent Chapter of the Daughters of The Empire held their annual At Home from three o'clock until five in the afternoon.

The rooms were suitably decorated with the loyal colors, and tables covered with red and white, arranged for hundreds of guests, who played bridge and five hundred. The prizes were won by, Mesdames Sanderson, Young, Paul Trebilcock, Peter Campbell, and Misses Helen Davidson and Jessie Spence; "Five Hundred," Mrs. Norris; Straight Bridge, Miss Hurley.

The ladies were received by Vice-Regents Mesdames Louis Hayes and J. Mills. The caterer for the afternoon was Mr. T. Hooper, while the Daughters of the Empire served.

In the evening a greater number were present, when the rooms presented a most brilliant scene. A large number of the officers in full dress uniform adding a pleasing touch of color. Col. and Mrs. Clegg received at the entrance to the Band Room, and Mesdames D. Walker, Vincent Eastwood, (Dr.) Eastwood and others were charming hostesses. Military euchre was played and play begun at the firing of the rifle. The tables changed at the sounding of the bugle.

After refreshments had been served by the non. com's, with Mr. Hooper caterer, a dance was enjoyed by a few of the younger guests. The names of the prize winners were read by Major Walker.

Because of Disorderly Conduct They Appear in Police Court

Six local boys appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning on the charge of disorderly conduct on Romaine Street. They were dismissed with a warning. Evidence by the neighbors was to the effect that the boys annoyed them, but then they had no other place to play.

Magistrate Dumble after speaking of the great necessity of playgrounds, dismissed the case.

Youngster in Trouble.

A local fourteen year boy appeared in court this morning on the charge of theft of lead pipe. He was remanded to the Shelter for one week. The youth in question has appeared before the court on various and was at one time placed on a farm by Chief Thompson, where he stayed for fully nine months. Tiring of this, he came back to the city and once more followed his old footsteps. A favorite pastime of his, according to the police, is to take a number of boys to his home. His mother is a widow, and is forced to earn a living for her family, and their work of clearing the home of various things has caused the mother considerable worry. In all probability the youth will be given a term in some industrial school.

WILL DISCUSS RESURRECTION

Bible Lecturer to Deliver Address on "Victory O'er the Grave."

The third lecture of the I. B. S. A. series has for its subject, "Victory O'er the Grave." It will be delivered Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the Royal Theatre, by J. M. Perrin, of Cameron.

The International Bible Students' Association is this year launching the most extensive missionary campaign ever attempted. By means of touring evangelists and public Bible lecture courses, its plan is to give a thorough witness to every nation on the face of the earth before this year expires. One of the Association's special series of lectures is now being given here. The first lecturer lays the ground work, discussing God's Plan of Salvation in general and describing what lies beyond the grave. The second lecturer explains the manner and necessity of the Lord's return, which, according to the third lecturer, will bring to all an opportunity of gaining a complete victory over the grave. The fourth lecturer deals with the much discussed "Second Chance" proposition. A hearty invitation is extended to all to attend any one or all of these lectures. Admission fees are never charged, nor collections mentioned.

UNIQUE TRADITIONS AT TRINITY

VISIT OF "FATHER EPISCOPON"

This is an Annual Event in the Life of Toronto's Historic Seat of Learning—Freshmen are Called "Worms"

Unique amongst all the customs and usages of the universities of the world stands the annual visit paid to Trinity College, Toronto, by the Venerable Father Episcopon, which took place this year a few days ago. Few people have heard of the Venerable Father. He never really existed. But as a mythical personage of great importance, his coming is looked forward to by the students of Trinity with something of awe, a little of fear, and a very great deal of interest.

The Venerable Father Episcopon is said to dwell in the main tower of the college, and there, amid the oaken rafters and the dust and the cobwebs, to look down through windowpanes coated with the grime of ages, upon the life that passes in the cloistered halls, below, to note everything which he thinks deserving of adverse criticism, to store it up against the coming of the ninth of March. He has been doing this ever since 1858, when the futile imagination of P. E. Stewart, an undergraduate, brought him into being. Each year a certain undergrad. known as The Scribe, and chosen by his predecessor in office, prepares in his name a manuscript volume of comment made by one man concerning another, compiles an introduction which is more or less a resume of the events of the college year, and his own criticism thereon, and gives notice that it will be read on a certain day, usually March 9, the birth-day of the Mr. Stewart aforementioned. On this occasion the student body assembles in the dining hall, and after a glorous repast, the lights are turned out, two candles are brought and placed one on each side of a reading desk on the dais, and the Scribe produces a skull, the symbol of Episcopon, and his powers and prerogatives. With the premonitory motto: "Notandi Sunt Tibi Mores" (Publicity to Your Peculiarities!) he proceeds to read. And the quavering student, seated in the darkness and gazing at the skull and the head and shoulders of the Scribe, faintly illuminated by the flickering candle flames, gets a very fair impression of what his fellows think of him. Episcopon is just, but when it is advisable, he is also stern, not a little caustic in tone, and very emphatic.

Naturally none of the college authorities are admitted to this hallowed rite. It is necessarily private and confidential, and although there is a possibility of injustice, complaints which may be made later will secure the insertion of the material, to which objection has been taken, in the final bound volume, which goes to swell a collection kept by the Scribe that dates back to the middle of the last century. Old dog-eared volumes with yellowed pages exhibiting the handwriting of men who have passed away, and of others, too, who have since attained success in every walk of life; and with here and there a more or less expert drawing of begowned men and becrinolined women in the style of draughtsmanship long since discarded, lie in the bottom of an ancient heavily-locked chest, which the Scribe is sworn to guard jealously.

Episcopon is a tradition now. It links the past with the present in a way in which nothing else would do; it is perhaps the highest-valued institution of the college, and when each new Scribe adds his volume to the collection, he feels that he has added another chapter to an honorable history.

Trinity College has a reputation for conservatism and Anglicism. In every possible respect it is modelled after the great universities of England. The student of Trinity must wear an academic gown to lectures, meals, and to chapel, except on Sundays and holy days, when surplices are the order of the day.

The student body is divided into two great sections, the arts men and the divinity students, who used to be known as "tugs," a corruption of the appellation "theologs"; and the former confidently boast that their freer deportment is the only thing that saves the latter from absolute stagnation and narrow-mindedness. Undoubtedly the arts men have a very vivifying influence.

Freshmen are known as "worms," and are put through a series of initiations from which hasing as a feature is only debarred by the strict orders of the governing officers, and an oath which every one must take on entering. To keep the unruly young gentlemen of the first year from feeling too greatly their release from the pressure of home-ties, skilful and painstaking measures are necessary, and in most cases the second-year men, to whom the task is relegated, perform their office well. The "worms" dwell not in the college proper; their habitation is at a distance of about 150 yards in college grounds, and is known as the "Jag House," because it was at one time a private residence devoted to the cure of inebriates. The "worms" are usually a hale and hearty crew whose bill for damages at the end of their period of residence in the Jag House amounts to about two dollars a man. They break a lot of furniture in a cheerful way.

Besides the "Trinity University Review," the Literary Institute, the Glee Club, and the various theological organizations, which are of less moment, the student may amuse himself in the gymnasium or by "feeding" in his rooms, a practice for the accommodation of which the steward runs a miniature groceryshop in the basement.—S. M. Adams in Toronto Star Weekly.

SOME CHOICE SOUP RECIPES BY EXPERT CHEFS

The fast day of meatless (maigre) soups require that one should be a good vegetable cook. French cooks have invented the most of these soups, for while the best of them cook everything well, they cook vegetables in a perfection rarely reached elsewhere.

"I have at your disposal a collection of maigre soups to delight a saint," says a French writer.

The collection includes shell fish bisques, soups of other fishes, bean soups, pea soups, cabbage, carrot, bread, milk, noodle, macaroni, rice, barley soups, and so on. The sorrel soup is one of the famous "pottages" of the French springtime. Then there are the mushroom, the potato, the tomato.

Imitation Sorrel Soup.

One half-peck or a pound and a half of spinach. Pick over carefully and discard all tough stalks. Wash in many waters. Put to cook for ten minutes in a covered stew pan, adding no moisture. Sprinkle over it two teaspoons of salt and cook over a gentle fire. The moisture left on the leaves after they have been drained is sufficient to cook the spinach in, but it must be watched. It may require more than ten minutes to make it tender, but will not if the leaves are first chopped. This latter process is not necessary, but is more economical, as more of it can then be pressed through the sieve. Add one-fourth pound of butter, the unsalted is best for all such cooking, when the spinach is soft and stir thoroughly, then add the juice of one lemon, stir and then add a quart or a little less of milk, carefully stirring every moment, and put through a sieve. Before adding milk taste of the spinach. You may like your spinach for the vegetable course so seasoned. A cup full or two of mashed potato will give it an agreeable thickness and if it is poured over the yolks of from one to four eggs, stirring constantly, it will be richer. Instead of milk some flour can first be added and stirred into the butter to thicken, the whole thinned with boiling water and a few tablespoons of cream added at the last, but the soup is not so soft and agreeable as when made with easily curdled milk. This is a distinctly sour soup.—Original Recipe.

Milk and Almonds.

"I know nothing so delicate and choice," says a French writer, "as a soup of milk and almonds. A pound and a half of sweet almonds, and three dozen bitter almonds, washed, blanched, drained, pounded quickly in a mortar. In the boiling water which is put in to thin this odorous paste, put the zest of a lemon and coriander, strain through a cloth and put in a double boiler. Keep hot and pour on thin strips of toasted bread."

For half a dollar one can buy enough vegetables for half a dozen fast day soups, but to these must be added such supplies as eggs, butter, milk, or cream, by which the variety is extended or a particular soup enriched. For the class called "cream" soups, milk or cream is almost necessary, but when mashed potato and a thickening of a little butter and flour is added these may be dispensed with if necessary. The German flour soups may be added to the collection and a great variety of croutons are considered almost an essential for a finish. Plain fresh bread is excellent, without toasting or frying, with a red bean soup.

Some of the most famous of these maigre soups are: Potage a la Conde, which is a puree of red beans; potage a la Crecy, of carrots, cooked, mashed, passed through a sieve.

French Lima Bean Soup.

The delicate little green beans called flageolets in France, but French lima beans with us, make fine soups and half of the beans cooked to make the puree may be saved to be served with a generous amount of butter, when they are as soft and dainty as possible. Soak a cup of beans over night in two cups fo water. Put to boil in soaking water with as much more as needed on the slowest kind of a fire with a bit of onion and some celery stalks. When nearly done, which will be in a little more than two hours, add salt to taste. Four cups of water, in addition to that in which they were soaked, will be needed to cook them and to leave a liquid which of itself, with half of the beans put through a sieve, will make an excellent soup, with or without cream or milk, and with or without egg yolk or much butter. Equal quantities of this puree, mashed potato, and milk make a delicate soup.

Red Bean Soup.

Soak a pint of red beans over night. Put on to boil in water in which they were soaked and about four cups per cup of dry beans besides. More water may have to be added during the three hours required for cooking over a simmering burner. It is desirable to have plenty of liquid at the finish. Put to cook with the beans a carrot and other vegetables in which a few cloves are stuck, if these are to taste. When done save one-half the beans with some of the liquid for use as a vegetable, press the rest through a sieve, and then adapt as you please. With a little butter and milk, and perhaps a bit of freshly ground pepper, this is an excellent soup. Cream and egg yolks make a richer and perhaps a little more palatable soup.

Potage a la Monaco represents a variety of French soups closely related to our cream toasts thinned. It is made of slices of bread, powdered with sugar, toasted to a beautiful color, placed in a soup dish with salt and nutmeg, and boiling cream poured over them, then a yolk of egg added.

Cream of Carrot Soup.

Steam young carrots, mash, thin with milk, and add cream, butter, and seasonings to taste, or cook in any way to bring out the sweet flavor of the carrot, rather than to sacrifice it. They may be glazed just as for garnishing, or for a vegetable, by scraping, cutting in thin slices, and putting to cook in cold water to cover. To each pint of water add generous teaspoon of salt, a large tablespoon of sugar, and two ounces of butter. When the water is cooked away mash and thin with hot milk. When made with seamed carrots a little sugar may be added, although when the vegetable is cooked none of the sugar is dissolved out. Yet another way is to fry the slices of carrots to a light brown on both sides in butter and then cook in boiling water, put through sieve, and add milk or cream. For any kind of vegetable soup the frying of the vegetables in this way adds an agreeable flavor if the work is well done.

THIEVES' QUEER AIDES; SNAKES AND TERRIERS

Python Introduced in Hotel Room by One Pair of Jewel Robbers—Monkey and Crow as Helps to Robbery

Two Britishers staying at a Munich hotel, and known to be carrying jewels worth one hundred thousand dollars, were lately followed about continuously by a couple of shady characters, who even took rooms next those of the jewel owners.

Their conduct at last became so suspicious that information was given to the police, who arrested them. On a search being made of their room a half starved python was discovered. It transpired that the owners of the snake were well-known jewel thieves, and it was their intention to introduce the snake into the victims' bedroom, and steal the jewels in the excitement that followed.

Possibly these ruffins got their idea from Conan Doyle's "The Speckled Ban," in which a snake was used for the purpose of murder, although this is not the first case of the kind.

A smartly-dressed woman criminal named Stilba, who had managed to get an introduction to the best society in Paris, became acquainted with a rich Parisian.

She learnt that one day he was going to attend a picture sale, and she asked him to call on his way as she wished him to buy a particular picture for her. The Frenchman was carrying a well-filled wallet with him, and this he laid with his stick and gloves on a chair.

Suddenly he noticed a snake writhing on the heart-rug, and backing away from it was startled to see two more coming from under the table. With a wild yell he fled for his life, quite forgetting his wallet containing ten thousand dollars' worth of banknotes. Needless to say, when he returned it was only to find that the lady had vanished, as well as the snakes.

Criminals have long ago found out how useful animals can be to help them to carry out their schemes. A common trick of burglars, for example, who are afraid of burglar alarms, is to put a couple of rats through an open window and send a terrier after them.

The terrier is pretty well bound to knock against the alarm in its mad rush round after the rats, and as soon as the burglar hears the bells, he's off out of sight, leaving his unfortunate dog to bear the blame.

Dogs are easier to teach than most animals, and for that reason are favorites with criminals. A couple of pickpockets possessed an enormous mastiff which they trained to dash up to any one whom they indicated, and, apparently with a playful bound, knock him over. The two would rush up and, with profuse apologies for their dog's carelessness, raise the fallen person from the ground. While they were doing so, the victim's watch and chain and money, and anything else of value, would be skilfully taken.

One cold day in 1910, a well-dressed man, wearing a heavy overcoat, entered a jeweler's shop in the West End of London and asked to be shown some valuable rings. Those shown him, he said, were not quite good enough, and asked to be shown another tray.

As the attendant went to get it, he glanced in the mirror specially set so as to show the counter when his back was turned, and, to his amazement, he saw a long hairy arm suddenly come out of the customer's pocket, seize a couple of rings, and vanish.

Assistance was quickly summoned, and the man and monkey arrested. His rooms were found filled with all sorts of valuable objects taken by his clever monkey.

An ingenious trick was that practiced by a youth named Boschat early in 1911. He went into a grocer's shop in Paris and asked for some sugar; and when the grocer returned from getting it he almost jumped ou of his skin to see a black crow sitting on one of the shelves eyeing him!

The bird fluttered about the shop, defying all efforts of the grocer to capture him. While the tradesman's attention was disturbed, Boschat quietly rifled the till, and then gave a little whistle. At the signal the crow flew out of the shop, with its owner after it, apparently doing his best to capture his pet.

It was only when the clever thief and his black accomplice had disappeared out of sight that the grocer discovered how he had been robbed.

POULTRY KEEPING

HOME-LAID FRESH EGGS.

Did you know that any one with a small yard and the ambition to try, can easily keep enough chickens to furnish eggs for the family and enough extra to pay for the keep of the flock. This fact is so well proven that there are hundreds of people doing it in every city and town in the country.

A space of 20 by 20 feet is enough yard for 50 hens, when handled properly. All it requires is the ground and a reasonable knowledge of the principles of poultry-keeping. In fact we know a number of people who are keeping poultry successfully, and the laying hens have never set foot outside of their houses. Of course this intensive method calls for considerable skill and experience in order to avoid disease and kindred afflictions, due to the very close confinement, but fowls can be handled successfully in this way, and the details of this method will be taken up in a later article.

There is absolutely no reason why fowls will not lay as many eggs and do as well in the city as in the country, under normal conditions, and it is possible to produce eggs as cheaply one place as another, buying the same amount of food.

Fowls kept in confinement are usually more profitable than fowls that have free range, all things considered, hence the city flock is as well off as the country flock. City dwellers also have the advantage of having easy access to sources of cheap feed like bakery and hotel waste, fresh bones from the butcher shop, etc.

The poultry house is one of the most important factors to success, and success means many eggs at a low price. The house should face in such a way that the maximum amount of sunlight shines on the floor during the Winter months. This means dry, healthy floors and freedom from disease and colds. A house 10 by 10 feet will allow sufficient floor space for from 20 to 30 hens, provided the house is kept scrupulously clean, and there is an abundance of fresh air at all times of day or night. Have most of the south side of the house either glass or muslin sash, and fully half of it should be the muslin. Avoid cross drafts and keep the house as dry and clean and sweet smelling as your own.

What sort of hens shall we use. The breed makes absolutely no difference as far as your success is concerned. All of the business breeds are profitable when handled with common sense, and there is a far greater difference between the different strains and flocks in the same breed or variety than there is between the different breeds taken as a whole.

The owner of the city flock can feeds his hens at a cost of about a dollar each per year. His return in eggs should be higher per hen than the manager of the large commercial flock gets, and an average of a dozen eggs per hen per month is not at all out of the way for any small flock properly handled. Figure out the profit on 30 hens on your back lot for yourself.

It is not necessary or advisable to keep a rooster with the city flock, as the hens will lay better, if anything, without his presence, and you can buy young pullets each year just about as cheaply as you can raise them in the city. This does away with the biggest objection to city flocks of poultry, namely, the rooster's crowing.

THE LATEST FROM DAME FASHION

WHAT SHALL THE MATERIAL BE?

In the matter of the new silhouettes, which demand a bulgy appearance about the hips, it is a question of the sort of material that gives the right firmness yet at the same time the necessary softness. Here is a paniered frock of one of the new taffetas, pussy-willow, in a soft shade of foxglove, flowered in deeper tones. The grace of the "hand" is undeniable, as is the manipulation of the sash, in purple satin.

The "Arabian Nights."

The "Arabian Nights" did not become familiar to Europeans until 1704, when Galland translated it into French. Scholars cast much doubt on the authenticity of some of Galland's work, accusing him — like Fitzgerald with Omar Khayyam — of inventing rather than translating, but with the public the success of the tales was immediate and immense. Galland used to complain that the students, returning home in the early hours of the morning, would knock at his door and demand the recitation of a tale.

Helping Him Along.

"I do not know exactly how
To say what's in my heart.
I long to tell it to you now,
But cannot make a start.

"My tongue has not the power to tell
My inmost thoughts," said he.
"I cannot voice the dreams that dwell
Forever here with me."

She looked at him and, smiling, said,
As one who something knows:
"Cut out the speech and go ahead.
It's time you did propose."

AMENDMENTS TO THE LIQUOR LICENSE ACT

Man Who Supplies Blacklister Liable to Be Listed.

In the six sections of the bill to amend the Liquor License Act introduced by Hon. W. J. Hanna into the Legislature one of the first provisions is that making Good Friday a day of closed bars like Christmas Day.

Regarding right of appeal from convictions for illicit sale of intoxicants an amendment is made bringing druggists into a better position as regards this right than they have been in. Druggists are now given right of appeal clearly. Others have only right of appeal to the High Court under writ of certiorari.

Affects Kind Friends.

Interesting is the proposed change making it possible to place those who supply a person on the "Indian List" with liquor liable themselves to be Indian listed. This, it is expected, will cure the kind friends of those under prohibition law, from getting them into trouble again.

Fines are in future to be kept in one fund for each Local Option district and expenses of enforcing the law in each district will be paid out of that district's fine fund. It is also to be made compulsory for any one found under the influence in a local option territory to tell who gave the liquor or sold it. The fine for refusing to tell is fixed at $50.

Help for Districts.

For counties and districts under the Canada Temperance Act there are to be changes helping the enforcement of the law. In future the province may supply half the amount found necessary to enforce the law in counties, over receipts in fines, this amount to come from consolidated revenue. Formerly the province paid only one-third of this amount. Unorganised districts will have the whole cost borne by the province after fines have gone as far as they may.

Iron To Blame.

Though experts have differed as to the causes of the threatened instability of St. Paul's Cathedral, it may now be regarded as an established fact that the amount of iron in the framework is largely to blame.

This was indicated in the national appeal for $350,000 for strengthening the fabric which has been issued by the dean and chapter. Recent discoveries show that the iron which Sir Christopher Wren used in large quantities has rusted and split the stone. A good deal has been removed lately, and some gun-metal has been put in. Iron was found in the southwest and northwest towers, and in all parts of the building.

"Not until recently have its effects been so apparent," said Canon Alexander, the cathedral treasurer, in an interview with a metropolitan press representative. "There is a good deal in the stone gallery, but not much, I should say, in the dome, which contains considerable woodwork."

Censors Are Lenient.

Twenty-two films out of 7,488 submitted to the British board of film censors were entirely rejected during last year, according to the report of the board.

Exception was taken to 166 films on various grounds, but many of them were eventually passed, after certain eliminations had been made. The grounds on which films were rejected included:

Indelicate or suggestive situations.
Indecent dancing.
Holding up a minister of religion to ridicule.
Cruelty to animals.
Indelicate accessories in the staging.
Judicial executions.
Excessive drunkenness.
Native customs in foreign lands abhorrent to British ideas.

Since the inception of the board 7,628,931 feet of film have been examined.

Unconscious Judicial Humor.

The funny sayings of a judge who never joked from one of the finest collections of judicial humor ever published. This is "Arabiniana," a selection of the dicta of Serjeant William Arabin, who sat as a judge at the Old Bailey, London, from 1830-1839. They savour somewhat of Sir Boyle Roche. For instance, his remark to counsel, "If you can show precisely at what moment the offence was committed and prove that the prisoner was not there when he did it, he could not possibly have done it." And he sagely added as an afterthought: "We cannot divest ourself of common sense in a court of justice." Another axiom he delivered himself of has been fathered on many other occupants of the Bench: "If ever there was a case of clearer evidence than this case, this case is that case."

His Temper.

Lord Kenyon, a once famous judge, was a favorite with King George III., but had an evil temper, and on one occasion made a scene in court by an extraordinary outburst. He went to the levee shortly afterward, and the King took the opportunity of giving him a word in season.

"My lord chief justice," said his Majesty, "I hear that you have lost your temper, and from my great regard for you I am very glad to learn it. I hope you will find a better one."—London Mail.

ST. PATRICK DID IT

A Story Which Culminates on St. Patrick's Day

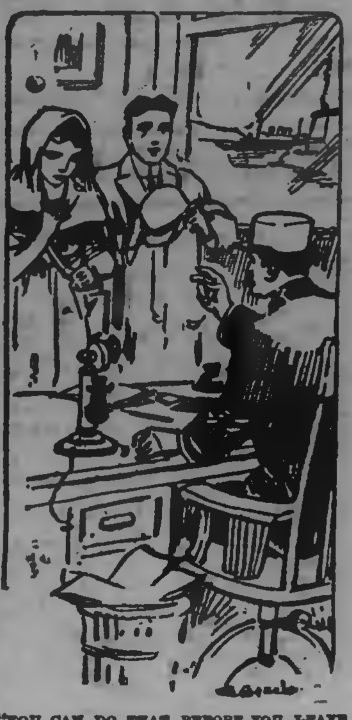
By TERENCE McKEON

Little Mike Malone and Kathleen Rafferty were near neighbors in Limerick county, Ireland. Mike's father owned a few acres of ground, on which he made a scant living, and Kathleen's father and mother rented a like area from a landlord. Mike was freckled, and Kathleen's hair was red.

When Mike came to be about eighteen and Kathleen sixteen his freckles had disappeared and Kathleen's hair which had really never been of a fiery hue, was turning into beautiful auburn, while her complexion was of that peachy hue prevalent among the Irish people. Mike had reached a period in life when young fellows begin to think about a career. He thought aloud to Kathleen, but to no one else, pouring his different plans into her ear. He would enlist in the army; he would ship for a sailor; he would go to London and seek a position.

Kathleen did not approve of any of these plans. She might have given her consent to the last named, but she was a strong Catholic and had heard that the English people were mostly Protestants. One night she had a dream which was probably induced by thinking about these matters. She dreamed that St. Patrick had appeared to her and said:

"My daughter, you are a good girl, and Mike is a good boy. I know that you are earnest for the good of your church and for Mike. Tell him to go to America. There he will find many Irish people, and since the Irish there are nearly all Catholics he will not be diverted from the true church. And since there is plenty of work in America for strong young men like Mike to do it will depend upon himself, and himself alone, whether he makes himself comfortable. After he has made a home there he can send for you."



"YOU CAN DO THAT BEFORE YOU LEAVE THE ISLAND."

Kathleen related this dream to Mike except the part about his sending for her, which she kept to herself.

"But, Kathleen," he said, "how shall I get on without you over there? Didn't St. Patrick say anything about your going with me?"

"No, he didn't."

"Then I won't go, either."

"Would you disobey the instructions of our patron saint? Go to America, and, if you care enough for me to wish me to be near you, doubtless St. Patrick will find a way to bring us together. But maybe after you have been away from me awhile you'll forget all about me."

The last sentence was spoken with a tinge of sadness. Mike declared that if all the oceans on the face of the globe were between them he would never forget her. But he said that he could not go to America without means to pay his passage and a little money to keep him while he was getting work. Indeed, some one had told him that the government of the United States would not let him into the country unless he could satisfy it that he would be self supporting.

But Kathleen, whose faith was strong, urged him to rely on St. Patrick. The saint would not have appeared to her in a dream for the purpose of telling her how to advise Mike if he did not intend to help him. So Mike determined to go, and, not having Kathleen's simple faith, he concluded that he would have to provide the means for his going. He resolved to walk to Queenstown, where he hoped to find a berth on one of the ocean steamers going to New York.

The day he left home, after bidding goodby to his father and mother, he started on his journey, and Kathleen walked a few miles with him. When she reached her turning point she took from her pocket some gold and silver coins and handed them to Mike, telling him that she had saved them for him and wished him to take them to help him on his journey. Mike's eyes grew wet, but he refused to take the money till Kathleen said to him:

"Didn't I tell you that St. Patrick would help you?"

"But this is not St. Patrick who helps me; it is you, Kathleen."

"Not a bit of it. It's St. Patrick doing it through me. How would I have been able to get the money together if he hadn't helped me to do it?"

It was not the argument, but the faith of the girl and the knowledge that he would pain her by refusal, that induced Mike to take the money. But he resolved not to use it. He had heard that in that wonderful country one may plant a little money like an acorn and it will grow to be a great tree, and he resolved to invest the money for Kathleen and send it back to her with its accumulations. Then, after a long embrace, they parted, Mike keeping up his courage by making resolutions to work hard and save what he made, Kathleen buoyed by what St. Patrick had told her in her dream.

On reaching Queenstown Mike found that stokers were needed for the ships, for this was a very hard berth, and it was difficult to find men who would heave coal down in the hot furnace room. Fortunately for Mike, he found a chance to work his passage on one of the large liners that made the voyage across the Atlantic in a few days. On reaching New York he found no difficulty in passing the immigration commissioners since they had no objection to strong and healthy men. The only use Mike ever made of the money Kathleen had given him was to show it to the officials who examined him as evidence that he was provided with funds.

Mike had promised Kathleen that he would spend the first few years in the new country in learning a trade. So he hired himself as a helper to a carpenter, working for almost nothing for awhile, but getting advanced as he learned the work. His boss became a contractor, which threw Mike into other branches of mechanical work, and, being quick to learn, he became familiar with many of the other departments of building. The result was that after serving his apprenticeship he worked as mason, plasterer, decorator, and knew a good deal about plumbing. Six years after reaching America he began to think about setting himself up as a contractor.

Mike had come over to America when some of the great railroad systems were being reorganized. One day while working on a house owned by a wealthy gentleman Mike told him of the money Kathleen had given him and asked him how he might invest it. The gentleman told him to buy a few shares of a certain railroad stock that was selling at a very low price. Mike invested the money as advised, and five years later the stock he had bought was paying 6 per cent dividend. This made the shares Mike had bought worth eight or nine hundred dollars.

Mike wrote to Kathleen that he could now support a wife and had saved the funds to enable her to come over and marry him. He also wrote her of the fortunate investment he had made for her. Kathleen wrote back that all this good fortune had come through St. Patrick, who would never have advised Mike's going to America if he hadn't intended to help him. Kathleen received her lover's letter at the beginning of the year and prepared to leave for America in the spring. Mike sent her what money she needed for the journey and enough besides to provide her with a suitable outfit as a bride.

It was the 6th day of March when Kathleen sailed for New York. The voyage was expected to require eight days, but the weather proved stormy, and the vessel did not reach Ellis island, where the immigrants have to pass the commissioners of immigration, till the tenth day after sailing, and even then it was late in the afternoon when the steerage passengers were transferred to the station. Kathleen on reaching the deck was suddenly clasped in a pair of strong arms and recognized her lover.

"Why, Mike," she said, "how big and strong you are grown!"

"And how beautiful," replied Mike, "you are! Your complexion is like the rose and your hair the color of gold!"

They went together to the emigrant office, where Mike introduced Kathleen to the commissioner, stating that she would not be a burden on the government since he proposed to marry her at once.

"Very well," said the commissioner; "you can do that before you leave the island."

"Divil a bit!" Mike protested. "Do you suppose we'd be married out of a church?"

Mike persuaded the commissioner that he was in earnest and would be responsible for the new arrival. So the couple went to New York, and, Mike having spoken to a priest and stated the necessities of the case, they were married without publication of the banns. Then Mike took his bride to his home, which was much to her liking.

Kathleen had arrived on March 16, and the first day she spent in America, the first of her married life, was St. Patrick's day. She had not counted on this when she sailed and attributed it not to coincidence, but to St. Patrick, who had in a dream advised her to tell Mike to go to America. Mike had been expected to join in the procession that was to take place, but had excused himself, knowing that he would be newly married. He had provided a place for Kathleen and himself to see the paraders, and after attending early mass the pair occupied it. As the paraders passed Kathleen said to her husband:

"St. Patrick has been at the bottom of all our prosperity."

A MAN OF TASTE.

And For That Reason He Lost Out to a Rival Suitor.

THE girls, after the manner of girls, grew very confidential the other day, and, naturally, the subject of sweethearts was soon introduced.

"I don't see you going down on the boat with that swell young man who plays the trombone in the brass band any more," the fair haired one said.

The one with the raven locks sighed.

"No. And he was an awful swell, too," she said regretfully. "But," she added with an attempt at cheerfulness, "my steady company now is right swell lookin', and he is a foreman in a candy factory."

"What was the matter with the other feller? I thought you were stuck on him?"

"I was," the friend replied, with a faraway expression in her eyes. "It was terrible nice to go on the boat with him when the moon was shinin', but"—

"Well, what?" the impatient blond demanded.

"He tasted too strong of brass," the other girl confessed.—Detroit Free Press.

Devoid of the Finer Feelings.

"Have you heard about the woman who got a divorce because her husband always aroused the neighbors when he got home at night?"

"No, but I don't blame her. A man who won't steal in quietly and take his shoes off in the hall when he gets home late deserves no sympathy from his fellow men."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Generosity.

The big man with the I know it all expression sneeringly watched the little man who was eating from a sack of peanuts.

"Down where I come from we use peanuts to fatten hogs," remarked the big man.

"That so?" asked the little man. "Here, have some."—Baltimore American.

CHILDREN'S ROOMS

Youngsters Should Be Given Reasonable Freedom In Them.

A CHARMING NURSERY HINT.

Miniature Furniture In Cane and Similar Materials Is Attractive and Has No Hard Corners to Hurt Chubby Limbs.

Lucky the child who has a playroom that does not have to be cleared up, says House and Garden. In such a playroom was recently seen laid out on the dull red carpet a miniature railroad, bridges, switches, roundhouses, yards and all, including sand for roads and walks.

Suppose this had to be cleared up when its owner had finished his game—would he not become discouraged soon when his handiwork must be demolished each day? In this cheerful room the corner beyond the railroad was screened off with a "playhouse screen" representing a substantial brick house, with a real screen door on hinges and windows daintily curtained.

The windows of the playroom were shaded by curtains bought in Germany—a suggestion which any one may easily carry out. The curtains are thick enough to hide disorder from neighborly eyes. They are made of German linen, natural color, and the animals and birds are of turkey red stitched on by chain stitch machine. The line at the bottom is machine chain stitched. These curtains have been washed many times and are still as fresh and strong as when new. Unbleached muslin would be just as effective and wear as well. The only real furniture in the room is a piano. The wall has paper of a warm brown tint with pastoral scenes as a frieze.

SPLINT CHAIR.

There are ventilators in the windows, a plan every mother should follow for both sleeping room and play room.

A plan to utilize a mantel or mock mantel in a child's room is carried out in this same house. White, unglazed tiles are set around the chimney opening, with a border of nursery rhyme tiles at the top and sides. These tiles are made in dainty colorings, with pictures of nursery favorites and rhymes. In the openings a small blackboard is set, the edge finished with a narrow molding tile and a wider curved tile at the bottom to hold chalk and eraser. The children have made splendid use of this mantel arrangement not only for the regular uses of a blackboard, but in copying the dainty pictures on the tiles. A mock mantel could also be arranged for the child's room by setting the tiling and blackboard in the wall.

There are twenty designs in the nursery tiles, size 6 by 6. Work of this sort is best done by a professional tile setter, who will charge about 50 cents each set in place.

Nowadays fine furniture and artistic wall paper go far in beautifying any room. A full purse is needed if one wishes to put oneself in the hands of an interior decorator. But there are rooms where a little ingenuity and taste are sufficient to convert them from dull, uninteresting places to bright and cheerful abodes. This is especially true of a child's room.

One such is in a small second story back bedroom of the conventional city house. It has only one window, yet the walls are so cheerful that the occupant, a girl of ten, needs nothing else to fill her heart and mind with pretty thoughts and bright ideas.

To produce this successful room her mother used plenty of paste and many large highly colored pictures, posters and panel pictures. These she cut out and pasted artistically on the walls.

This room proved a delight to the little ten-year-old girl. Each picture became a playmate, a companion, a visitor to her, and nightly her mother sat at the foot of her bed, before kissing her good night, and told her stories about the picture children, imbuing them with life and interest.

One day sickness assailed the little maid, and then the room became a double pride and pleasure.

Miniature furniture which is a faithful representation of styles for adults may be purchased in the shops. Cane or splint furniture is light, may be easily carried about and has no rough edges on which the children may hurt themselves. Shown here is a splint rocker, part of a set which makes ideal furniture for a nursery playroom or children's bedroom. It is in sizes to suit the little folks.

Be sure you are right—then don't lose your head.

BURIED AT CROSS-ROADS.

Amerry Girod's Grave Is at Montreal's Busiest Corner.

The grave of a suicide, an outlaw and a fugitive, dug at cross-roads according to the practice of the time—that in merest outline is the tragic story connected with the spot where Sherbrooke and St. Lawrence streets intersect.

To-day this point is practically the centre of Montreal, and over it all day long and far into the night there hurries the varied traffic of two great thoroughfares—pedestians, carriages, drays, tramcars, forming two swirling currents of urban life that grow swifter and deeper, as years pass. Where those two thoroughfares intersect—cross-roads it was then—a grave was dug almost 77 years ago; and in it was interred the remains of a wretched man, whose memory is preserved because of his misfortunes rather than because of any worthy achievements.

That man was Amerry Girod, a stormy petrel of the stormy times of 1837. He was associated with a cause that drew to its support many able, brave and disinterested men, who risked all for the right as they saw it, but who, so far as the attaining of their end was concerned, did not judge and act wisely and well.

But little is known of the early life of the man, who was buried at the crossing of Sherbrooke and St. Lawrence streets. According to some accounts he was born in one of the cantons of Switzerland, by other he is spoken of as an Alsatian, and, therefore, a native of France as France existed at that time.

He claimed to be a scientific agriculturalist, but when given a Government post at Quebec he accomplished nothing, and, finally, left the ancient capital and settled at St. Eustache, where in 1837 he took upon himself the command of the insurgents, who had assembled there under their local leader, Dr. Chenier. None of his exploits is particularly praiseworthy, although he figured largely in the records of the rebellion. When the Government troops attacked St. Eustache he fled leaving his forces behind him. Two of the insurgents, seeing the cowardly flight of their braggart, self-appointed general-in-chief, tried to shoot him; but they missed their mark, and Girod sped on unscathed.

In his flight Girod circled northward and then turned to the east, crossing the river that flows by St. Rose, traversing Isle Jesn, crossing Back river, and so gaining the Island of Montreal.

The police and cavalry from the city were scouring the island for the purpose of capturing refugees from St. Eustache; and the police came upon the trail of the wretched Girod. On the eighteenth, that is, on the fourth day after the fight at St. Eustache and the flight of Girod, the police came upon him and surrounded the place in which he was in hiding. Further flight, he saw, was impossible and resistance was useless. At bay, Girod resolved that he would not be taken alive. Drawing his loaded pistol, he held it to his head and blew out his brains.

The police removed Girod's body to Montreal. It was the body of a suicide, and, according to the practice of the time, it was ordered to be buried at a cross-roads. "It was buried," writes Kingsford, "at what was then called the Cote a Barron, in the middle of the cross-roads of the St. Lawrence Main street and Sherbrooke street."

One of the onlookers at that strange burial was a young man named Henry Hogan, who, in later life, was for many years proprietor of the St. Lawrence Hall, which stood on St. James street, where the building of the Dominion Express Company now stands, and which in its day was the most widely known place of public entertainment in all Canada. The historian Kingsford writes, "I am informed by Mr. Henry Hogan, of Montreal, that as a young man he was present at the interment."

A Hundred Years Ago.

One hundred years ago March 16 the Legislature of Upper Canada was in session in Toronto, with three members prisoners of war in the hands of the Americans, and two others, Abraham Marcle and John Willcocks, were reported "deserted to the enemy." The seats of the traitors were declared vacant.

It was reported at this session that a printing press had been purchased and brought to Toronto from Ogdensburg to replace the only one in the city, which had been destroyed when the city was captured by the Americans in 1813. No other press was obtainable for the printing of official records. How the purchase was negotiated in Ogdensburg during the war is not made clear by the historians.

Bradford's Bull.

S. H. Bradford, K.C., the well-known Toronto barrister and lecturer at the Law School, claims Ireland as the land of his forefatehrs. The other day he was guilty of a bull, which more than establishes his claim. He was lecturing to the first year on Common Law and gave utterance to a sentence which some of the embryonic lawyers evidently failed to understand. At least they indicated as much by tapping gently on the floor with the heels of their shoes. "Well," said Mr. Bradford, with a characteristic turn of his hand, "before we go any further we might as well get as far as we have got."

Sorry He Interrupted.

During the last general elections in Canada Rev. J. J. McGaskill vigorously upheld the reciprocity pact in the province of New Brunswick. At a meeting in Queen's County he was discussing the effect of the agreement on the price of various commodities. "What about hay?" shouted an opponent. "I'm discussing human food now," retorted the speaker, "but I'll come to your specialty in a moment!"

WHY JIMMIE KNEW.

He Tells of His Sure Clew In a Chicken Guessing Match.

AT a dinner in a suburban district, where all the guests were amateur chicken raisers, after a discussion of the egg problem the conversation turned to the best breed of hens. After the good points of Orpingtons, Minorcas, Leghorns and others had all been brought forth the host said:

"Well, the ultimate end of every chicken is the pot, and you can't tell the difference when it is on the table. Let's see how many can tell what kind of a hen we have just eaten."

All agreed it was a very good kind, but there were many guesses as to the breed. The only child at the table, a twelve-year-old boy, was the one who guessed correctly.

The host beamed on him and said, "Jimmie, how did you know it was a Plymouth Rock?"

"Oh, that was easy," he replied. "I found a feather in the gravy."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Scornful Retort.

"The train struck the man, did it not?" asked the lawyer of the engineer at the trial.

"It did, sir," said the engineer.

"Was the man on the track, sir?" thundered the lawyer.

"On the track?" asked the engineer. "Of course he was. No engineer worthy of his job would run his train into the woods after a man."—Livingston Lance.

Friendly Accommodation.

"How are you getting on with your new house?"

"I had to tear it all down."

"Oh, that's too bad. What was the matter?"

"It seems it was all wrong."

"Didn't suit your wife, eh?"

"Oh, it suited her all right. The trouble was it didn't suit my friends."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

She Was No Easy Mark.

Martha is seven and has shown more than the ordinary childish aversion to learning lessons, being washed and having curls made smooth and shining and less than the average delight in fairy tales. One day upon her return from Sunday school she was questioned as to what she had learned from her nice teacher this time. She cried out with flashing eyes and an indignant toss of her pretty head, "Why, mamma, my teacher told me today that story about the children of Israel walking across the Red sea and not getting theirselves wet one single bit, and she ex-pected me to believe it!"—Lippincott's.

THE BOWSER KITE

Our Hero's Experiment in the Cause of Science.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

FOR the first time in a year Mr. Bowser came home from the office at noon. Mrs. Bowser had only to glance at him and the bundle under his arm to realize that he had a scheme on hand.

"Well, what is it?" she queried.

"I'm going to make a bit of an experiment," explained Mr. Bowser.

"I thought it was time for you to break out again. You won't be satisfied until you have blown up the house and all of us with it. Is it dynamite this time?"

"My dear woman," slowly answered Mr. Bowser, "isn't it better for a man to be at home storing up scientific knowledge in his mind than loafing around pool rooms and saloons?"

"But what scientific knowledge are you seeking?" she asked. "As to discoveries, you've made about a hundred in the last two years, and almost every one of them has blown the windows out or knocked the back fence down."

"My dear woman," he softly continued, "here are a few harmless sticks and sheets of paper. I propose to take them up into the garret and make a winter kite. Did you ever hear of a kite blowing up anybody?"

"But what do you want with a kite? Do you propose to run up and down the streets with a gang of boys at your heels?"

No Subject For Levity.

"Woman, remember to whom you are talking. I propose to make some experiments in the interests of science. You have heard of humidity, I suppose? The humidity you have felt has all been in the lower strata of atmosphere, on what you may call the ground floor. When the humidity on the ground floor is 80 per cent what is it at a height of fifty or a hundred feet?"

"How can I tell, and why should I care?"

"Ah, that is it, you see. But for research and experiment the world wouldn't know that it is any colder at the north pole than at Key West. You should care in the interests of science. If there's 80 per cent of humidity on the ground floor and only 40 per cent at a height of 100 feet the world of science should be informed of the fact."

"But what good would it do if we knew it?" persisted Mrs. Bowser.

"Woman, I pity you!" said Mr. Bowser. "If all people were as indifferent we should never have known about the revolutions of the earth. I did hope for some enthusiasm and encouragement. I shall go ahead, however. The cook will make me some paste, and I will build a kite."

"And what's the kite for?"

"To send up into the atmosphere, of course. Attached to it will be this instrument for recording the humidity, also a thermometer for recording the temperature. However, as you take no interest in these things it is useless to waste further time explaining. Retain your ignorance, Mrs. Bowser—retain and hug your ignorance to your soul while I go ahead and make a discovery for the benefit of the world."

She had nothing more to say, and he got his paste and made his way to the garret. Nothing more was seen of him till dinner time, and then he brought down a finished kite.

"So you have put off your experiments till tomorrow?" queried Mrs. Bowser.

"Not at all," he replied. "I forgot to tell you that my first experiment is to be made after dark. What I want to get at is the humidity and temperature of the evening. There is going to be a good breeze tonight, and I shall count on favorable results."

Interested Spectators.

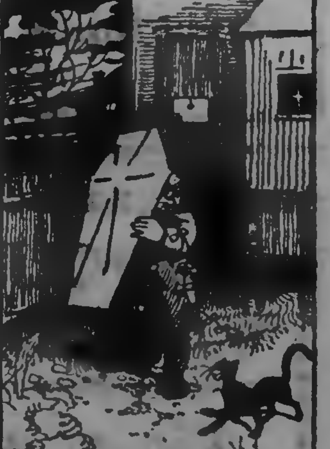
Mr. Bowser waited until darkness fell, and then took his kite into the back yard. He thought he had deceived everybody, but not five minutes had gone before half a dozen boys had passed the word and were getting ready to enjoy the fun with him. There was a good breeze, and it was no trick at all for him to get that kite up forty feet. He held it there for five minutes and then hauled it down and excitedly announced to Mrs. Bowser, who was standing at the back door:



INTO THE BACK YARD.

"I've struck it right off! What do you suppose the humidity up there is?"

"I can't guess."

"It's 480 per cent. It's recorded right here, and there can be no mistake!"

"It can't be. There wouldn't be half of that humidity in the densest fog."

"But here it is—480 per cent!" he persisted. "And you can't get around it. Mrs. Bowser, I have made a discovery which will set the whole world talking. While I am sure there can be no mistake, I'll send the kite up again to verify my figures. So keep it clear of those telephone wires and I'll climb on the roof of the shed."

With laborious effort he clambered up, and the kite was passed up to him. It had just got a start when the boys hidden along the back fence began business. Potatoes, cucumbers, tomatoes, stones and lumps of coal were about evenly divided between Mr. Bowser and the kite. Both fell at the same time, but Mr. Bowser fell the hardest. Something hit him on the nose as he was paying out string, and he sat down on the roof. Then something else hit him in the ear, and in the excitement he rolled off, struck on the clothesline and was bounced into a snow bank dotted with the cook's old cans and bottles and such. The cook helped pull him out. They were bending over him as consciousness returned, and he sat up.

"Well, what about the humidity?" asked Mrs. Bowser.

Mr. Bowser Sees It All.

He rose with a painful effort. The kite lay there on the ground, and the heads of seven boys could be seen above the back fence. Without a look around, however, Mr. Bowser entered the house, Mrs. Bowser following. When they had entered the sitting room Mr. Bowser turned on her and hoarsely whispered:

"Woman, I see—I understand."

"You understand the humidity was 480 per cent?" she replied.

He extended his right arm and waved it. Then he followed suit with the left. Then he kicked out both legs and rolled up his eyes and worked his ears. She waited patiently, but he couldn't get out another word, and after a minute he turned away and climbed upstairs and banged the bedroom door after him. Two hours later, when she went up, he was in bed and asleep, and he hadn't even wiped the tomato seeds off his chin.

Next morning Mrs. Bowser overslept by an hour. When she hustled downstairs the cook was gone.

No cook! No breakfast!

On the dining room table was a note. It read:

> Dear Lady—I have went. If I stayed on Mr. Bowser would be waitin' to tie me to that kite's tail to go up a mile high and look for roses and robins. I am not a fly girl. I bid you a long farewell!

When the note was shown to Mr. Bowser he grew purple and replied:

"I see the plot, Mrs. Bowser. I see the plot in all its nakedness, and some one shall pay for it!"

"But"—

"Stop! Not a word or I will commit some desperate act!"

A Mean Advantage.

Able Editor, Hawville Clarion (to his pastor)—Look here, Brother Harps; it strikes us that you have taken a mean advantage of our dear and only son.

Rev. Mr. Harps—How so?

Able Editor—Why, even though my son, who is learning the printer's trade under us, is in love with your daughter, while she does not seem to reciprocate his passion, we hardly think you were warranted in taking for your text yesterday the words, "My daughter is grievously tormented with a devil."—Puck.

A Knockout.

"Lilian," he said desperately, "let's get married!"

THE SPEEDER.

HE jumped into his motorcar
And opened up the gas.
He hadn't journeyed very far
Before he tried to pass
Some one who drove a buzzing six,
And, though at last he did,
He barely missed a pile of bricks
When he began to skid.

He almost ran a woman down,
But faster still they flew.
He struck the center of the town
While doing thirty-two.
A horse took fright and ran away
When he whizzed by his nose,
And everybody stopped to say:
"See how that fellow goes!

"It must be life and death with him,
The way he tears along.
Suppose a tire should jump the rim
Or something should go wrong!"
But in and out he squirmed and turned,
Still putting on the power,
And down the crowded street he burned
At forty miles an hour.

At forty miles an hour he sped—
He seemed in dreadful haste—
As one along the road he fled
Who had no time to waste.
But with a final whizz and whirl
He stopped before a flat
And went to call upon his girl,
And there he sat and sat.

—Detroit Free Press.

Mutual Satisfaction.

"I hear your married," he whispered, leaning over her.

"Yes. A nobleman. Papa has spent a million dollar on his castle. But I—I remain the same. You are also married, I believe?"

"Yes. I married a Kansas girl with a large and growing set of gold mines. I have everything I want."

Then she smiled up at him:

"You see, we were both right. For have we not both of us fulfilled our destinies?"—Life.

Prepared.

"My dear," said the young man with a sob in his voice, "I should like to ask you to marry me, but I cannot for a long, long time, I fear. Two people would starve on my salary."

"Oh, George," said the beautiful young thing, throwing her arms around his neck, "don't let that worry you for a minute. I'm a militant suffragette and have been on four hunger strikes."—Baltimore American.

Unnecessary Trouble.

A Wise Girl.

"And you are to be married the 6th of next month?"

"Yes. Isn't it jolly?"

"Awfully. I suppose you are busy having your wedding clothes made?"

"Oh, no! If I had them made now they'd probably be out of style before I got a chance to wear them."—Chicago Record-Herald.

BLACK HOME RULE.

A Prosperous Negro Kingdom in South Africa.

The rising among the Basuto mine laborers of the Transvaal at the time of the recent trouble with the white workers draws attention to one of the most remarkable of the native races in South Africa. Basutoland is a self-governing native territory under the aegis of the British crown. The spirit of British policy toward it was strikingly revealed recently by Lord Gladstone when before thousands of Basutos he first proclaimed Griffiths the future king, and then, as the servant of King George, saluted the new ruler of the Basutos.

Thirty years ago Great Britain started upon the experiment of helping the Basuto nation to govern itself. To-day no matter what test of progress is applied to that country, half as large again as Wales, the response is conclusive. There is loyalty to the crown, racial peace, national vitality, religious amity and economic stability.

The critics of 30 years ago predicted disaster, and not without some reason. The Boers had tried to conquer the Basutos and failed, British expeditions ended in disaster, British sovereignty was proclaimed and abandoned. The Orange Free State declared war against the Basutos and received such a hot reception that they had to give up. The Cape Parliament, too, tried to govern this distant territory, but failed and abandoned it. Then a new era dawned, the administration of Basutoland by the Basutos and for the Basutos alone, under the guidance of a British adviser.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer of Basutoland must be a happy man, for he has never faced a deficit. The taxation in Basutoland is about $1 per capita per annum upon a population of 400,000 and every year the budget shows a surplus. The country has no debt, but lends the realized surplus to other native territories or places large sums on fixed deposits in the South African Bank.

Before home rule Basutoland was seldom free from wars, rumors of wars, and tribal fights. The national Parliament, has brought together every element in the nation and welded it into a solid force, which now makes for peace and progress.

While many tropical and sub-tropical territories are feeling acutely their decreasing population, this little country, secure from the European exploiter and prospecter, is multiplying with extraordinary rapidity. In 1891 the population was 218,324 and in the next decade, 1911, to something over 400,000.

This rapid increase is going a long way toward solving the labor problem, for during last year over 70,000 Basutos crossed their own borders to assist the white man in his task of reaping the wealth of South Africa.

Though for its size and population Basutoland produces a comparatively enormous quantity of grain, it has an industry of great economic value to South Africa, the output of native labor. It supplies the sinews of agriculture in the Orange Free State; to a large extent it keeps going railway works, coal mining, the diamond mines * * * the gold mines of the Transvaal and furnishes in addition a large proportion of domestic servants in the surrounding territories.

Disraeli and Honors.

Of all the British Premiers who have been concerned in the dispensing of honors, Disraeli seems to have expressed the most cynical contempt for them. Talking to Sir John Holker one day in the House of Commons, he pointed to a member who was making his way along the floor of the House, and remarked, "Do you see that man? He is the greatest rascal living. I knighted him." Nevertheless, he occasionally adopted a lofty attitude on the subject. Mr. George Wyndham once related that when Disraeli was being pestered by a prominent politician to confer an honor on a third party, he replied, "Tell your friend that the source of honor in this country is a fountain, and not a pump." And Disraeli turned Queen Victoria into an Empress and himself into an Earl.

Prince of Wales and House of Lords.

Parliamentary gossips are saying that the Prince of Wales is likely to take his seat as a member of the House of Lords during the present session. I learn on the best authority, however, that there is not the least likelihood of His Royal Highness doing so, for although, being no longer a minor, he is eligible as a member of the Upper House, he will follow the precedent of the late King Edward and King George, who did not take their seats until they were twenty-two.

Words and Deeds.

Cast forth thy act, thy word, into the ever living, ever working universe. It is a seed grain that cannot die. Unnoticed to-day, it will be found flourishing as a banyan grove after a thousand years.—Carlyle.

Fortune favors the brave, but it's often mighty kind to the foolish.

Unpleasant Recollections.

"What is a gusher in an oil field?" asked the old fogy.

"The man who writes the prospectus," replied the grouch.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

I Wonder.

There is an old saw 'bout the bird
Who goes to bed at night
So he can get up early
And catch the worms in sight.

But will some one kindly tell me
What's "in it" for the worm
Who gets up very early
To do his little turn?

A Well Constructed Plan

Conceived In Life and Carried Out After Death

By F. A. MITCHEL

Edward Travers was left an orphan when he was unable to take any care of himself whatever, but he was well taken care of. He lived with the family of a clergyman who took especial pains to bring him up properly, and, as for education, most of the time he taught the boy himself. When Ned passed to an age where it might be expected he would be curious as to his antecedents he asked the clergyman about them. The only reply he received was that his father had left detailed instructions with regard to the course to be pursued with his son, but they were to be communicated to him only as each link in the chain of the plan came up.

One day the man who had thus far had the care of the boy said to him: "You are now prepared for college and my work in your education is ended. It was arranged on your coming to me that when your college preparation should be completed I was to notify a certain person to that effect, who would provide the means to give you a university education."

"Must I go to college?"

"You must follow the course laid out for you or provide for yourself. If you refuse to do the former you will make a sacrifice. I have written the person it is my duty to notify that you will enter college in June next. You will hear from her within a few days."

"Her? Who is she?"

"I have only her name, Miss Arabella Twitchell. Your father, I have been told, was a very methodical business man, who thought out every step to be taken in what concerned him in advance. Those about him never thought of asking him questions, but followed his directions to the letter."

Ned received this information with deep thought. He did not like being ground out through a mill like a pound of coffee. He waited impatiently for a communication from Miss Twitchell. When it came it brought no more information than was absolutely essential. It informed him that he was to enter a certain college, where he was to follow a certain course of study which had been minutely laid out for him. He noticed that the subjects would give him a general though not a classical education.

One thing Miss Twitchell warned him against—the forming of any matrimonial alliance. "Your future career is provided for in every particular," she wrote, "even in the matter of a wife. But this can only be in case the young lady it has been arranged you shall marry is living when you have reached the age of twenty-one. If she is dead, you will be at liberty to marry whom you please."

Young Travers was not more affected by this part of what had been provided for him than any other. At the time he was informed of it he was seventeen years old and had no sweetheart. Consequently the effect upon him was different from what it would have been had he been older and not fancy free. There was romance in there being a girl in the world who was to be his wife. He wondered what she was like. He pictured her according to his fancy, a willowy creature with golden hair and mild blue eyes. She was amiable, kind, loving. The likeness he had drawn in his imagination was the last object he saw before going to sleep at night and the first when he awoke in the morning—that is, when he was not especially interested in something tangible.

Edward Travers during his student days was in no great danger of breaking in upon what his father had prearranged for him so far as marriage was concerned. College students are at a mating age, but they seldom marry. In the first place, they are not allowed to marry by the college laws; in the second, their time is spent with members of their own sex, and in the third few of them have the means with which to support a wife. Be this as it may, Ned Travers went through the course without forming any especial attachment with a girl, though he had hosts of friends of his own sex.

Just before graduating he wrote to Miss Twitchell to ask what was the next thing on the program that had been laid out for him. To his surprise the reply came back, "Marriage." Why he should be married before entering upon his life's work he could not understand. And what means would he have on which to support a wife? Surely some income would be provided. But would it come from the girl he was to marry or property that he would inherit?

This matrimonial part of his career now began to loom up before him in its true importance. It had ceased to be a romance and had become a reality. He had begun to dread lest he find the girl who was intended for him unattractive. She might be homely; she might be some old maid whom he was to marry because she had money and nothing but money to recommend her.

Another feature was displeasing. Suppose the girl did not wish to marry him. Nothing had been said about this, but now Ned often thought about it. He did not see how a girl could be forced to marry him if she did not wish it. Miss Twitchell in her letter informed him that on taking his degree he was to come to her for further instructions. He wrote her to ask what would happen if the girl he was to marry would not have him. Her reply was that provision had been made for such a contingency, but since it did not concern him she had no information to impart on the subject.

Travers wondered more than ever. This was going through life in a groove. He might as well have been a car traveling on steel rails. Truly, that father of his must have been a very singular man. And yet might not it all be for his good? Might not his father have taken this means of forcing his son to benefit by his own experience? Nevertheless it must have been a difficult problem, this tying up of the fate of the son by the father, the tieup to be effective after the father's death.

Travers had often wondered who this Miss Twitchell might be. He rather expected to find her as peculiar as his father must have been. He found her an elderly lady, with nothing especially queer about her. She received him kindly and said that his home was for the present to be with her. She lived in a country place, and Travers reached her in June. At that season there was nothing unpleasant about his remaining with her, at least temporarily.

As soon as he arrived Miss Twitchell said to him: "I have nothing to do with the plan your father has laid out for you except to introduce you to the girl you are to marry. But I am obliged before doing so to make a journey. I shall have to be away a month. You are to remain here while I am absent. I have servants here and a housekeeper. The housekeeper is essential to your being here, for I am obliged to leave my niece in the house, and it would not be proper to leave you under the same roof with a young lady without a chaperon."

"Is your niece the person I am to marry?" Travers asked.

"I am glad you spoke of that," replied Miss Twitchell, "for in doing so you have relieved me of an embarrassment. I should have disliked warning you against one closely related to me—indeed, whom I have brought up. I said that I would introduce you to the girl that it has been arranged you shall marry, after my return. I beg of you not to complicate matters by making love to Lulu. Unless you can assure me that you will not do so I shall have to send her away during my absence. The trouble is that I have no place to send her. This is her home, and it would pain me to turn her out of it, even for a short period."

"I beg of you," said Travers, "not to put her to this inconvenience on my account. I will do my best not to fall in love with her. I have become much interested in and curious about this plan that has been laid down for me and would not for the world do anything to interfere with it. I shall certainly not become involved with any woman until I have met the one provided for me. Then, if I don't like her, I shall break away from my father's intentions and do as I please. Of course I speak with the proviso that the girl accepts me."

Travers asked Miss Twitchell why she could not make the introduction before she left, but got no satisfaction. Neither would she give him any information as to the girl's appearance, age or characteristics. Her action was in perfect keeping with everything else pertaining to this singular affair. The last injunction given him by Miss Twitchell was that he was to say nothing to Miss Louise Maryweather as to why he was there. He promised anything that was required of him since it was now only a month before the mystery would be solved.

The first thing Miss Twitchell did after her return was to summon Travers and Miss Maryweather before her together.

"I charged you two before I went away to keep from falling in love with each other. I have received information since my departure that you have given every evidence of having disregarded my warning."

"I am resolved," said Travers, "not to be hampered with walking on this chalk line, drawn almost before I was born, any longer. I shall hereafter do as I like."

"And I," said Miss Maryweather, "will not be tied down by a lot of regulations with the making of which I had nothing to do."

"This means, I suppose," said Miss Twitchell, "that you have fallen in love with each other and are engaged?"

"That's about it," replied Travers.

"And you, Lulu—do you admit that?"

"I do," said the girl with a blush.

"Very well. The mystery pertaining to both of you is solved. You, Ned Travers, are the son of the late senior partner of the Travers & Maryweather manufacturing firm, and you, Lulu, are the daughter of the late junior partner in the same concern. Singularly enough, both men were widowers, each with one child. They formed an agreement that you two were to be brought up to marry each other, own the stock of the company jointly and you, Ned, eventually to manage the business.

"To complete this arrangement your marriage comes next; then Ned is to spend the time in the factory necessary to learn the business, after which he and you, Lulu, owning jointly nearly all the stock, are to elect him president, and he is to be manager."

"All's well that ends well," said Travers, embracing his fiancee. "I must confess that the affair has been managed very adroitly."

"The most adroit part of it," said Miss Maryweather, "is auntie's having us here together, telling us that we mustn't fall in love with each other. Had she told us we must, all might have been spoiled."

FAMED GIBRALTAR.

Britain's Key to the Mediterranean Is a Fascinating Place.

No matter at what hour one approaches Gibraltar, it is a memorable occasion. The great rock is mysterious, wonderful, beautiful, sombre, according as one sees it in the early morning haze, at noonday, at sunset, at midnight, says Sarah Graham Morrison in a recent article.

It was not yet breakfast time on December 18 when we first saw that great mass of jurassic limestone and realised that we were at the most important gateway in the world. Directly east opened the blue Mediterranean, gilded in morning sunshine, a few far-off boats stranded in the golden path. The southern mountains stretched away in uneven masses of rose and lilac; across the channel, gloomy Gibraltar, formidable and gruesome in the early shadows, bristling with unseen portholes, pierced the clouds at the height of a quarter of a mile. These, the Pillars of Hercules, beyond which the boldest one feared to sail! Monuments left by the Phoenician god when he tore the continents asunder—Mt. Abyla, on the right; Mt. Calpe (Gebel-al-Tarik), on the left—the mountain of God and of Tarik, the Moor!

Tarik ibn Zijad, at the command of Musa, the African viceroy of the Caliph of Damascus, headed an expedition of Moors and built the first fortress on the Rock early in the 17th century. To-day, the tower of the castle he commenced in 713 may still be seen in a prominent position back of the town.

But the thing that impresses one most is the rock, which has been called more names than any other rock in the world—"the rock of the Mediterranean," "the formidable dead sentinel of Europe," "the crouching lion," "England's insurance sign," the bolt to Europe's front door," "a rock-bound city of cannon and wild flowers." As one approaches it from the Atlantic it looks like a great crouching lion ready to pounce upon Spain, its tail toward the sea. It is from one-fourth to three-fourths of a mile wide and some three miles long. Its greatness is in its significance, not its size.

Two hundred yards from the mole brings one to the city gates. Only three hours to see the little up-and-down town of 27,000 people! But as we drove through the streets in high-posted Maltese carriages, we had all the thrills which come to one when he sets foot on a foreign shore. The place is full of local color, yet cleanliness and lack of beggars are two of the most distinguishing characteristics. Baskets, donkeys, narrow streets, balconies.

Four years, 1,000 cannons, 40,000 men, to capture the Rock of Gibraltar! A prudential advertisement for Britannia! It was during the war of the Spanish Succession that Admiral George Rook took the Rock of Gibraltar from Spain, and since the Peace of Versailles, in 1783, when the decision of the International Convention of Utrecht was confirmed, that England should occupy this ground forever, the promontory has been most cautiously fortified.

Besides the barracks, the points of interest for a tourist are the view from Tarik's old tower and from Signal Hill; the Roman Catholic cathedral which Ferdinand and Isabella rebuilt in 1502; the thousand-year-old dragon tree in the governor's garden; the Ragged Staff stairs, were the British landed in 1704; the waterfront, with its immense shop in which it is said that a complete battleship could be built; its dry dock, large enough to repair the greatest battleship, and the Alameda, the most semi-tropical spot in Europe. There one sees giant cacti, immense castor plants, glorious heliotrope a yard high, oleanders with plenty of pink blossoms among their glossy leaves, wonderful hedges of scarlet geraniums, fiery poinsettas vying with great patches of red and orange house-leek, dainty-leaved pepper trees swaying among dusty gray olive trunks, even the arches were not lacking to remind one of Spanish settlements in our own land; but the foreign touch was the milkman with his flock of goats; the tambourine peddler tinkling his wares and clicking the castanents; the doughnut woman balancing her basket; the barbary partridges, and "rock monkeys," the only wild ones in Europe.

Dado and Krim.

Two strange visitors watched the British House of Commons at work the other night. They signed their names in the visitors' book as:

"Si Dade Ben Mashahoud (chief of the Tefnisa Riff)."

"Abd El Krim Ben Hada Ali (chief of the Bakoya Riff.)"

At least these were their signatures translated. Originally they were in Moorish characters and were written backwards. The custodian of the doors was rather startled when he beheld their bright Oriental robes, and still more so when he tried to address them by name, but seeing the huge and benevolent figure of Mr. John Ward following them he overcame this difficulty by referring to them politely as "these gentlemen." Mr. Ward on his part solved it by the affectionate titles of Dado and Krim.

The two chiefs came from Morocco to interest the Foreign Office in the woes and the mining rights of the Riff tribes.

There were three things which reminded them of Algeria. First the interior architecture of the House of Commons, and particularly of the debating hall; the position of the women behind the grille, and the action of the four tellers who, after a division, as is customary, advanced in line, bowed to the Speaker, and declared the figures. Among the Riffs, they explained, at a tribal council decisions were made by a show of uplifted hands. Four men count the hands on each side, and then advance bowing to tell the chief of the results.

A Famous Old English Church.

The Church of St. Botolph in Boston, Eng., is a long, low, decorated building with a high perpendicular tower surmounted by an octagonal lantern, locally known as Boston Stump. The tower is 300 feet high. The light and spacious interior has very lofty arches resting on slender pillars. The church is said to have as many doors as days in the week, as many windows as weeks in the year, as many pillars as months in the year, and as many steps up to its tower as days in the year.

Giddy Girl.

In Mr. Thorold's "Life of Henry Labouchere" this story is quoted: The Grand Duchess of Tuscany had a venerable maid of honor about 70 years of age. She had piercing black eyes and looked like an old post chaise painted up and with new lamps. "How old do you think I am?" she once asked me with a simpering smile that caused my blood to run cold. I hesitated and then said. "Twenty." "Flatterer," she replied, tapping me with her fan. "I am 25."

13,750,400 Insured.

Mr. Wedgwood Benn, replying to Sir C. Kinloch-Cooke, in the British House of Commons, said that the latest available figures showed that the number of persons insured under the National Insurance act was 13,750,400.

Trinidad.

The island of Trinidad is fifty-five miles long and forty miles wide and has an area of approximately 1,800 square miles. A chain of mountains extends throughout its length, the highest point of which is about 3,000 feet above the sea level. The population of the island is estimated at 340,000.

The Rising Generation.

"My boy, when I was your age I was lucky if I got 25 cents a week spending money. And here you want $5."

"I know, dad, but then I've got a much cleverer father than you had."

"And evidently I've got a much smoother son than my father had."

WINDOW-PANE POETS.

A Study of British Taverns Reveals Some Quaint Verses.

Throughout the British Isles, particularly in the smaller towns and villages, there still remain many inns and old taverns on whose window-panes have been scratched rhymes, verses, and epigrams by people who afterwards became, or who were at the time, more or less famous.

The poet Burns was what might be termed a great "offender" in this respect—one wonders where he procured the necessary diamond—and several of his glass-borne rhymes have been preserved to this day. It was on a window of the old Globe Inn, Dumfries—a favorite resort of his—that he inscribed the well-known tribute to the beauty of the young daughter of the factor of Closeburn estate, near Ellisland:—

O lovely Polly Stewart,
O charming Polly Stewart,
There's not a flower that blooms in May
That's half so fair as thou art.

On another occasion the poet was dining at the inn at Moffat, when "the charming lovely Davies" of one of his songs rode by, accompanied by a lady tall and portly. A friend who was with him asked why God made the one lady so large and the other so little. Whereupon Burns scratched the following on the pane at his elbow:—

Ask why God made the gem so small,
And why so huge the granite?
Because God meant mankind should set
The higher value on it.

No one has apologized more prettily for those of "scrimpit stature."

On an inn parlor window at Mold, in Flintshire, are the following lines, which are attributed to Sheridan:—

Were I to curse the man I hate
From youth till I grow old.
Oh, might he be condemned by Fate
To live his life in Mold;

while on a pane of glass in the parlor window of the Red Lion at Henley, Shenstone, the English poet, scratched the following:—

I fly from pomp, I fly from plate!
I fly from Falsehood's specious grin!
Freedom I love, and form I hate,
And choose my lodgings at an inn.
Whoe'er has travell'd life's dull round,
Whate'er his stages may have been,
May sigh to think he still has found
The warmest welcome at an inn.

A verselet, which is both amusing and true, may be seen on a window-pane in a hostelry in the Lake District, in the neighborhood of the Langdale Pikes. It runs as follows:

Little bits of Langdales,
Little bits of Pikes,
Make the little tourists
Walk their little bikes.

WAITING FOR THE NEXT MOVE OF HUERTA AND CARRANZA

Death List at Vera Cruz Was More Than Entire Loss of Life in Naval Engagements During Spanish American War --- Madrid Learns From Carranza That Mexicans Will Unite Against the Invaders

Canadian Press Despatch.

Washington, D.C., April 25.—President Wilson and his cabinet are to-day on the lookout for some counter move by Huerta and awaiting the developments of any positive attitude by Carranza. Officials are awaiting news of the reception by Carranza of a telegram sent by the constitutionalists in Washington advising him to remain neutral, and notifying him that the United States intended to withdraw their forces, as soon as reparation for Huerta's offences had been obtained.

It was thought that Huerta stimulated by anti-American spirit at his capital, which was manifested by desecration of the George Washington statue last night would make a definite move to-day, and that a declaration of war from him would not be surprising. Casualties to Americans at Vera Crus total more than the entire loss in naval engagements during the Spanish-American war.

AMERICAN REFUGEES.

Canadian Press Despatch.

El Paso, April 25.—Americans are practically all out of the state of Chihuahua, 109 refugees arriving to-day. Those still remaining in the city of Chihuahua, except the few who are determined to remain until the last, will leave to-morrow by regular train. Practically every American in Northern Mexico is now a refugee, and they leave behind them property worth in the aggregate, many millions of dollars. These arriving state their departure was sincerely mourned by thousands of Mexicans who saw their means of livelihood vanishing.

FOUR KILLED BY MOBS?

Canadian Press Despatch.

Vera Cruz, April 25.—"El Dictamen," a newspaper published here, says four Americans have been killed by mobs in Mexico City. Three of them were taken out of street cars and killed on the street, while a fourth was killed in the Young Men's Christian Association building by members of a baseball team to which he belonged. This story is not confirmed and is considered doubtful.

CHIEFS HOLD CONFERENCE.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Washington, April 25.—Last night was one of bustling activity at the war department, terminating in a long conference between the Secretary of War and chiefs of the staff, supposed to have reference to conditions on the Texas border and the movement of troops to Vera Cruz.

SPANIARDS TO HELP.

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, April 25.—A cablegram received at Madrid from General Carranza, says Mexicans will unite to fight against American invaders to the last breath and that many Spaniards in Mexico are ready to fight side by side with them.

STOCK MARKET ON THE MEND.

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, April 25.—The tone of the stock market though flat, was distinctly better to-day, although opening flat prices improved around noon, Canadian Pacific closing one point and a half higher.

MORE SUMMER COTTAGES AT THE KAWARTHA LAKES

The number of summer cottages is to be greatly increased this year and some of them are to be handsome. The Hon. Mr. Kemp's, at Sandy Point, is to be the finest on the Kawartha Lakes. Mr. Sam Kennedy, of Toronto, is having a nice bungalow constructed on the north-west shore of Nogey's Bay. Mr. Smithers will add another cottage to Petrie's Point. Esturion Park, laid out by M. Boyd Co., between the railway bridge and Humphries, or what used to be known as Jones' Clearing, is said to have very few lots unsold. Mr. D. T. Rook, of Toronto, purchased Birch Point, near Aucona last year, and has sold six lots off it, carrying the proposition that a cottage be erected on each lot by June next. The summer population will be greatly increased this year.—Independent.

REV. JAS. POTTER

To Preach Anniversary Services at St. Andrew's Church.

Rev. Jas. G. Potter, of McVicar Memorial Church, Montreal, and for many years the able minister at St. Andrew's Church, has accepted an invitation to preach at the anniversary services at St. Andrew's, on Sunday, May 3.

GOSPEL HALL.

Mr. and Mrs. Gammon of Central Africa, will arrive in the city to-night, on their return trip to the mission field and will conduct three services in Gospel Hall Sunday, Monday and Tuesday nights, showing limelight views of Dark Africa. Every one welcome.

HON. DR. PYNE,
Minister of Education.

As a mark of esteem and a token of high regard for the services both personal and professional, which he had bestowed upon Sir James Whitney when in the throes of illness, the Conservative members of the house yesterday morning assembled in the government chamber and presented Hon. Dr. Pyne with a purse of gold and a memorial of kindly greetings.

The man who leads a dog's life has some excuse for growling.

SIR WILLIAM WHYTE.

C.P.R. director, and former Vice-President, who died in California after one of the most remarkable railroad careers that Canada has witnessed. He was born in Scotland in 1843, came to Canada in 1863, and worked for the Grand Trunk for the next twenty years as brakeman and in other comparatively humble positions. In 1883 he cast in his fortunes with the C.P.R. and rose rapidly to the position of Second Vice-President and later Vice-President of the road. It was with the West he was chiefly identified, having for many years managed all the company's lines between Lake Superior and the Pacific Ocean.

NEW RESIDENCES

Sanitary Inspector Gets Instructions From the M.H.O.

Instructions received by Sanitary Inspector Spence from M.H.O. Dr. McPherson, is to the effect that all new residences being erected must be carefully inspected as to sanitary conditions and sewer connections.

Stringent means will be adopted by the Board of Health in regard to any delinquent house builders who fall to comply with the instructions.

Each Blames the Other.

The same old trouble on whom to attach the blame is again coming into prominence, in connection with the duties of Mr. Spence and Mr. Miller. On Hunter Street at the rear of a certain apartment house rubbish and other garbage has accumulated during the season.

Questioned by the inspector the residents deny that the garbage belongs to them. Each one has a similar story.

"The owner is the one who should get after these people," said Mr. Spence.

He further pointed out that his only means of reaching the guilty party was to charge the entire crowd with the infraction of the garbage by-law.

BOARD OF TRADE FOR LAKEFIELD

MIGHT HAVE BEEN DROWNING ACCIDENT

Mr. W. Hill had a narrow escape from death by drowning, says the Lakefield News. Mr. Hill was crossing the dam on his way home when he stepped into the hole made for the stop logs and fell into the water. Fortunately he fell on the upper side of the stop logs and managed to catch hold and cling to them. His cries for assistance brought Constable Webster on the scene, and Mr. Hill was rescued from his perilous position in the nick of time.

POLICE ON THE JOB.

Considerable care is being exercised to-day by the police in regard to the traffic at the corners. In numerous cases farmers were stopped and informed regarding the traffic by-law.

MOTHERS' DAY TO BE OBSERVED

Mothers' Club is Seeking Co-operation of Ministerial Association

Arrangements are under way supervised by the Mother's Club for observing Mother's Day here on the second Sunday of next month. At a recent meeting of a special committee appointed to investigate it was decided to recommend the idea to the Ministerial Association as to having the day commemorated in all the churches and Sunday Schools throughout the city.

Definite arrangements will be completed by the Ministerial Association at their meeting next week.

GUARD OF HONOR FOR THE DUKE

Advice is expected from the Department of Militia in Ottawa authorizing the formation of a guard of honor for His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, when on his visit to this city on June 1st. This guard will consist of men and officers 100 strong and the selection of the men of the best physique in the regiment will be made shortly. Men desiring to serve will be requested to submit their names to the commanding officer. They also must be fully 5 feet 9 inches in height.

Lt.-Col. Clegg informed the Review that the regiment would supply the ugard and one that would acquit themselves with honor.

APARTMENT HOUSE

An $8,000 Building Next to Murray Street Church

It is understood that Mr. Patrick Fitzgerald, a local contractor, is contemplating the building of an $8,000 apartment house on Murray Street next the Baptist Church. Although no definite arrangements have been made it is quite likely the work will be commenced shortly.

One or two other contractors have decided to erect apartment houses.

FRATERNALLY YOURS

To-night at eight o'clock in the S.O.E. Hall on Hunter Street, representatives of the various fraternal societies in this city will meet for the purpose of organizing "Fraternal Day." The meeting is open to all interested, and at it committees will be appointed to make arrangements for the celebration of such a day. The celebration will take place on a Sunday, and some of have suggested that if all the fraternal societies of the city could meet in one place, march through the city, and then separate and attend churches for Divine Service, it would be an edifying and imposing spectacle.

There is another proposition before the local fraternal brethern, and that is the suggestion of the Board of Trade for these societies to invite out of town societies to run run excursions to this city, and thereby make Peterborough a little more popular.

These and several other matter will be dealt with to-night, so a good attendance is requested.

Lansdowne Lodge S.O.E. have had a busy week, as thirty or forty attended the St. George's Day services on Monday evening at St. John's Church. On Wednesday the postponed regular meeting was held, after the regular business the members had another informal musical programme followed by a carpetball game, with Bros. C. Wood and W. G. Shiner acting as skips, and a very enjoyable game was the result.

Bros. J. Williams and A. Frick were appointed as delegates to the meeting called for Saturday, April 25, to discuss the matter of having a Fraternal Society Day in Peterboro.

It is interesting to note that there are 1,567,799 Freemasons, 1,581,045 Oddfellows and 500,000 members of the Loyal Order of Moose in the United States and Canada.

To commemorate the 95th Anniversary of the Order of Oddfellows, all members of the order are requested to assemble in the I.O.O.F. Hall at 6.15 Sunday evening, April 26th, for the purpose of attending Divine Service in the Salvation Army Temple.

The Knights of Columbus will receive Holy Communion in a body tomorrow morning at the eight o'clock mass, which will be celebrated by His Lordship, Bishop O'Brien, in St. Peter's Cathedral.

The members of the Sacred Heart C.M.B.A. are urgently requested to be present at the meeting of that body on Monday evening. Arrangements are under way for a debate between the Sacred Heart C.M.B.A. and St. Peter's branch which will cause considerable interest.

THE EGG MARKET

Strong activity, characterizes the trade in eggs. Notwithstanding the advent of the hot weather, dealers are buying fairly fast. The egg buyers have collectors scattered throughout the rural districts buying up considerable eggs. This and the fact that many purchasers are keeping eggs for hatching purposes is mainly responsible for any scarcity.

THE FORDS IN THE SPOTLIGHT

Banquet and Speeches at the Oriental Hotel.

The banquet tendered by Ald. J. J. Duffus to owners of Ford Automobiles and their friends, was a distinct success. About 115 guests sat down to the tables in the Oriental, and the round of merry laughs and the buzz of vivacious conversation attested the zest with which the company enjoyed the repast. Telegrams were read by Mr. Duffus, Dr. Frederick, Mr. Anderson and Dr. Halliday from such distinguished persons as President Huerta, King George and Emmaline Pankhurst.

The rain made no difference to the enthusiasm of the gathering, and Ald. Duffus was given a hearty reception when, announced by honk, honk, he stood up to give the address of welcome.

Ald. Duffus said about five years ago when he began to sell Ford cars in Peterborough he held a banquet when a carload of cars was received. The great success of these cars necessitated another banquet to-day. The reason for it being that he was so busy that he could not see all the owners and friends of Ford cars, so he took this method of calling them together. Due largely to the price made possible by Henry Ford, the car had reached its great popularity. Ald. Duffus took the occasion to thank those present for the business extended to him, and the confidence placed in him, for the large amount of business he was able to do. (Applause.)

Mr. F. J. Fox, manager of the Toronto branch, under which this district is, was next called on to speak, and gave some interesting data facts about the Ford business. He spoke of the service given and of the necessity for quantity to secure good service. He hoped 100 new owners would be received for Ford cars, which would enable Mr. Duffus to keep a full stock of Ford parts and thus improve the service given in this city and neighborhood. He stated the actual steel in the Ford cars cost 10 per cent. more than the finished steel in any other car in America, which is caused by the treating it receives. Mr. Duffus was the most progressive and popular man in his territory. His garage was in splendid shape, and Mr. Duffus' methods were such as to secure success. The Ford car of 1914 was better by $100.00 than that of the previous year. The minimum wage in the Ford factories was five dollars a day; $15,000,000 was invested in machinery alone and the greatest opposition was the Ford factory of Detroit.

Mayor Buller was the next speaker. He observed that lady autoists were absent and thought they should be present. He noticed that most cars used were Fords, and he was furthering the extension of good roads and paved streets so that auto owners would have pleasant and safe driveways by the middle of the coming summer. He cautioned automobile owners to use good judgment in driving their cars and hoped the automobile would be a co-operative factor with the Hydro Radial scheme he was fathering. He hoped some day to be the owner of a Ford automobile.

Dr. Halliday responded next and gave interesting testimony to the efficiency of the Ford, having bought the first runabout in 1908, and the model T that he bought in 1909 is still in good running order in the service of its present owner. He complimented Ald. Duffus on his unfailing courtesy and good temper and the excellent service he gave in this city. (Applause.)

Mr. G. W. Morrow, ex-Mayor, briefly spoke and testified to the satisfaction and pleasure he bad out of his Ford cars and to Mr. Duffus' kindness in getting out at all hours to help him when in difficulties. Mr. T. F. Matthews, owner of five Ford cars, was unable to be present.

Mr. A. E. Rogers was enthusiastically received as he is apparently very popular with the ladies. He said he bad no idea of speaking of the Ford as a lady's car. He had expected to enjoy a good dinner at Mr. Duffus' expense, and said if owners would carefully read the article on lubrication they would have less occasion to bother Mr. Duffus for repairs.

Mr. Alex. Kelly, ex-Warden for the County of Northumberland, spoke on "The Farm and the Farm." He had not experienced even a puncture during the first season's driving. The car was easy to operate and easy to learn.

Dr. Frederick gave evidence to the capacity of the Ford to make good under trying conditions, having driven his first Ford car lighted with oil lamps from 15,000 to 18,000 miles during the first four years, and had driven it once 1,300 miles with several cogs missing from the driving gear.

Other speakers were Dr. Munro, H. G. Walker, B. D. Hall, Dr. Amys, R. H. Parsons and Mr. Alderson.

Hunter Street was lined on both sides for a block with Ford cars, which formed an impressive parade as a conclusion to this most enjoyable affair.

ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH.

The preacher at St. George's Church to-morrow evening will be the Ven. Archdeacon Ingles, of Toronto. The service will be fully choral, and of the same order as that at St. John's Church last Monday evening.

Visitors at the Temple.

Brigadier Rawling, of Montreal, is in the city, and will take part in the services at the S. A. Temple to-night and on Sunday. Staff-Captain Walton will arrive in the city to-night, and he will also be heard at the meetings.

OPERATIONS TO START SHORTLY AT THE HENRY HOPE AND SON FACTORY

Machines are Being Placed in Position—Home Labor to be Employed

Peterboro's infant industry, the Henry Hope and Son, which for the past year or so has been under construction, will by the 11th of May or thereabouts turn its first wheel, and another milestone will be passed on the continual journey of this city toward prominence among other cities in the manufacturing line. Situated on the west side of the Grand Trunk Railway, on property north of the De Laval Company, it adds a distinct finishing touch to the southern section of the city. Not only is this facory a benefit to the city by way of supplying employment, but it adds to the city. Its proximity to the C.P.R. and G.T.R. causes it to be before the traveller's eye, and as the Henry Hope is a large, bright looking factory, surrounded by a large lawn and flower gardens, it will naturally leave a very favorable impression.

40,000 Square Feet.

The building has been described before in the columns of this paper, suffice is it to say that there is a one-story building with a floor space of 40,000 square feet. A handsome office about 45 x 50 feet is directly in front of the main building and faces Boundary Road. There may be larger offices than this one in the city, but it is doubtful if there is one more complete. It is spacious and well ventilated, while abundance of light is obtained even on dark days. The reason for the latter exceedingly fine feature is because the south, west and north sides of the office are over half windows. The steel sashes, similar to the ones the factory will manufacture, enables the sides of the office to be fitted with as many windows as a hothouse, and yet have warmth, stability and fire protection.

Mr. V. Richardson, who is the superintendent of the local branch, very kindly consented to act in the capacity of a host this morning, and took a representative of the Review through the plant and explained the various points of interest. The home of the Henry Hope Company is in Birmingham, Eng., but during the past few years the export trade to Canada became so extensive that they decided to establish a branch over here. Naturally when selecting a place they looked for manufacturing facilities, and deeming that Peter Robinson's town was about what they were after, they came. They will manufacture as stated above, steel window sashes and perhaps fancy steel roofing. In this work they will engage about 100 men, and of these, some fifty will be mechanics. Tool makers, machinists and machine hands will do the greater bulk of the work.

Mr. Richardson stated that the directors of the firm in England asked him to acquaint them with the information as to how many men he wants, but judging from the men around the streets in the day time, he thought that he needed but three or four who could teach the new men the business. Mr. Richardson remarked that the factory would depend upon Canada for maintenance, and the men living in Canada therefore had a right to the work.
TURN RULE

Modern Machinery.

A few car loads of material have arrived. At present a number of hands are busily engaged setting up lathes, drill-presses, punch-presses and several other machines which usually adorn the interior of a factory of this nature. Several very modern English machines are being installed, the most interesting one being the welder. This machine or rather apparatus is used for welding the corners of the cashes, and entirely does away with forges or any other old-fashioned methods. In a small anteroom, and separated from the rest of the factory, calcium carbide is put through a very extensive process and the acetylene gas formed. This is thoroughly purified by passing through a chemical solution and is then used with oxygen as a torch. The very intense heat produced softens the metal and it is run together with as much ease as a blow torch, therefore being exceedingly handy.

Mr. Richardson explained how this process of welding is very cheap and in fact cheaper than the electric welding in England, because the materials used are inexpensive, but he prophesied that they would give way to electric welders in Canada, as the prices are vica versa.

Start About May 11th.

It will take the millwrights a couple of more weeks to install all the machinery, and it is anticipated that the factory will open about May 11th. A spur has been run in from the C.P.R. track and affords the company great facilities in getting their machinery and other materials in and out. The G.T.R. passes through the Henry Hope property, and it will be very easy to have a Grand Trunk siding installed. The east end of the building is only temporary, and will be torn away and the building extended as business increases. Coming as they are to this country with their trade already before them, there is no reason why the company should not be one of the busiest establishments in the city.

RECEPTION TO DR. WADDELL

Presbytery Honors Him on His Return to Dunedin, New Zealand

The Evening Star, of Dunedin, New Zealand, devotes considerable space for the report of a reception which was tendered Rev. Dr. Waddell by the Presbytery of Dunedin.

Dr. Waddell is a brother of Mrs. Hugh Waddell, of this city, and it will be remembered that he visited in this city and preached at St. Andrew's Church. Recently he returned to Dunedin.

The words of the Moderator, Prof. Dickie, says the Evening Star, on the occasion, were few but sufficient. He voiced the feelings of everyone when he said:

"We are all delighted to see Dr. Waddell back to our midst. We all feel that his presence is an honor to us. We all feel the great work he has done in St. Andrew's congregation, and the lustre he has shed on our church by his sympathies, his perennial freshness as an exponent of the Gospel, and his Christian gentleness of character."

PIGEON LAKE IS REPORTED OPENED

Pigeon Lake was reported open Wednesday, the 22nd, with only a small block of ice off south end of Big Island. Sturgeon Lake was reported clear on Monday, 20th, and very little damage is reported. There appears to have been a peculiarity about the ice this year. It became moneycombed, or what is called rotten, with great rapidity. Teams were travelling it on a Tuesday, innumerable air-holes appeared on Wednesday. Thursday only the daring ventured to put horses on it, and Friday no one dared. When the air-holes appeared and showed such extended rottenness around them, Mr. H. Parker sawed out a block, 26 inches thick, and clear black ice, apparently solid. In less than an hour after being out on the surface and exposed to the air, the black separated into a mass of crystals. The explanation offered for this peculiarity, is that the ice was formed under unusual severe conditions of frost. The water was frozen swiftly into longitudinal crystals, and were annealed or not united together. As a consequence, the moment the temperature rose above freezing the crystal separated, and lost all stability.—Bobcaygeon Independent.

PETERBOROUGH, SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1914

MR. W. G. WEICHEL'S SPEECH.

THE SPEECH of Mr. W. G. Weichel, Member for North Waterloo, in the House of Commons, showed a careful gathering of details, soberly marshalled in support of his subject. He dealt lucidly with the item of wire as a Canadian import and compared Great Britain and Germany to show that the latter country under a high protective tariff has made greater progress industrially and every other way than Great Britain. Thus, in 1880, Great Britain produced 150 per cent. more coal and 160 per cent. more iron ore than Germany. In 1909 Great Britain produced 60 per cent. less iron ore than Germany and her superiority in the production of coal had dwindled to 20 per cent. In 1873 Germany's population was 41,564,000, while in 1908 it was 62,083,000. In 1873 Germany produced 15,776,702 cattle, and in 1907 20,630,544 head. He made a good point of the relative prosperity of the German nation and quoted from the semi-official Year Book the following. "During the last two decades, the industrial protection of Germany has experienced a natural, ordinary increase. That increase has been caused. less by the greater amount of our exports than by the growing importance of our markets; that is to say, by the growing wealth of the German people."

Thus Mr. Weichel quoted the house blind on statistics so well that little room was left for adverse criticism. Canadians are not going to wave the German flag nor is Great Britain going to the eternal bow-wows, but the point that goes home to Canadians is that the protection tariff has made Germany, and has also been the mainstay of Canadian progress. That is why Canada is strongly supporting the Borden Government's moderate protective policy.

PROTECTION—THE LIFE OF CANADA.

THE LIBERAL PARTY has displayed a strong tendency to advocate free trade, but there are enough solid facts available to illustrate how futile are their proposals. The Philadelphia Evening Telegraph editorially bemoans the loss of trade to the United States through recent tariff changes in the United States and Canada. Further, it considers the Taft-Fielding Pact would have been more advantageous to the United States than the Wilson-Underwood tariff. "Canada is very prompt to take advantage of opportunities which our new tariff has given it. While having the advantage of American markets under reduced duties, Canada is putting in force higher rates of duties to shut out the products from this country." Thus the Philadelphia paper sums up the situation. It condemns the opposition in the United States to the pact, and shows how wise Canada was in rejecting it.

A case in point is that of the United States Steel Corporation, perhaps the largest and wealthiest concern in the Republic, employing roughly 235,000 men. That company did a big Canadian business, but was in danger of losing it through the Canadian protective tariff. Rather than suffer such a loss it determined to establish a branch in Canada and has acquired a site near Windsor, Ont., where a twenty million dollar plant is in course of erection. The Protective Policy is thus bringing manufacturers to Canada, causing cities to grow, giving increased employment for labour, maintaining prosperity and developing the resources of this country.

Some Western farmers are crying for free trade and saying that they are being exploited by the manufacturers of Eastern Canada, and one of the most blatant supporters of such appeals is the Grain Growers' Guide. Statements of this kind are absolutely untrue. The prosperity of the West is bound up in the prosperity of the East and as to profits the Guide should remain silent until the 25 per cent. profits of the Grain Growers Grain Co. are a good deal less. Besides, the Western homesteader who with only a fair amount of industry and labor secures a clear title to 160 acres of unencumbered land in three or four years, is in a better position than a great many skilled workers and small employers of Eastern Canada.

As for protection, it is the life of this country. The United States Steel Corporation is only one case of many which have operated to build up Eastern Canada the prosperity of which has had a reflex influence on the well-being of the farmers of Western Canada.

GOOD PROSPECTS IN THE NORTH.

THE DISTRICT AROUND PORCUPINE has excellent prospects for gold mining development. Mr. W. G. Earle, a capitalist of London, England, and an extensive holder of mining interests in California and South Africa, has recently visited the district and is very enthusiastic over the development that has already taken place. He points out that one of the greatest set backs is the gambling in stock instead of the mining of ore. The number of fake companies that are being formed, mean loss to a large number of innocent investors. People should be on their guard on investing in Northern Ontario mining concerns. That vast quantities of very rich ore are there is true; that the beds necessary for legitimate mining companies exist is undoubted, but the fact that there are grounds for a large amount of legitimate mining development, is the main reason for such crookedness as arises from paper companies. A good deal of restrictive legislation has been passed with the object of safe guarding the public from exploitation by unscrupulous mining "experts." Legislation will not prevent joint stock artists from trying to evade the law. That is why investors should be very careful where they place their Northern Ontario mining investments.

TOO MUCH CHEAP CRITICISM.

THE CALGARY HERALD contains an editorial criticizing, what it chooses to call twaddle of the Toronto Star and some other papers which referred to the Dominion Railway Commission as becoming sub-servient to the government in power. Perhaps it was twaddle, but if so why not let it remain so. Twaddle is hardly worth contradiction yet the fact that the Herald criticizes it, might lead to the conclusion that what the Star said, was not altogether twaddle. As a matter of fact, there is too much hidebound, carping criticism of politics in Canadian newspapers. Some writers have the idea that a Conservative paper or Liberal paper must slash eternally everything that the opposite party does, whether it be good, bad or indifferent. Such journalism militates against the influence of the press, as a force for the maintenance of a high standard of political and social life, for, if a newspaper's criticism is to be discounted by its party affiliations, it ceases to wield the strong influence it should on the Canadian public.

IRON ORE RESERVES OF THE EMPIRE.

THE WEEKLY REPORT of the Department of Trade and Commerce gives some interesting statistics on the iron ore resources of the British Empire. More than 3,000 years have passed since iron asserted itself as the industrial metal of the world in place of copper, but the available resources are still so large, so varied and so widely distributed over the earth that there are adequate potential supplies for the use of mankind far into the remote future. Altogether it has been recently estimated that actual reserves of ore amount to no less than 22,408,000,000 tons and potential reserves to 123,377,000,000 tons. Great Britain contributes 1,300,000,000 and 37,700,000,000 tons respectively to these totals, but in regard to the remainder of the British Empire the amount of actual reserves is relatively small. Australia leads with 136,000,000 tons, probably British North America can claim second place, while British Africa may boast actual reserves of 100,000,000 tons. Altogether the Empire has an annual production of 16,000,000 tons of ore, of which fully half is to the credit of the mother country. The pity of it is that the potential supplies of ore within the frontiers of the Empire are enormous, but are neglected. In British Asia, America and Africa there are many thousands of tons of potential reserves of ore awaiting exploitation, in some cases because transport is not available, as in Western Canada, but in others because capital has chosen other outlets. Gradually, however, as in India, Australia and South Africa, enterprise is being diverted in the direction of iron, and there is every reason to believe that before many years have passed the component parts of the Empire will each have an iron industry worthy of ranking with those of the present great producing countries of the world.

ENCOURAGE GOOD LOCAL MUSIC.

THE PRESENTATION of the great composer, Handel's Oratorio, Judas Maccabaeus, should be well patronized by the citizens of this city. Music is an art, the taste for which requires much cultivation. It appeals to very fine senses and to the highest ideals of life. Even if you are not fond of what is called classical music, you should support such a presentation as St. George's Society is presenting, for it does not take an over-amount of application to appreciate the great master's strains of melody. The more you go, and try and understand the thought behind the simple and complex combinations of musical sounds, the more you will appreciate it, the more you will understand how beautifully the masters have expressed the thought of man.

The local organization has spared neither money nor pains to present this great musical composition, as well as possible, and have brought outside talent of very high standing to this city to take leading parts. One of the best musical productions that can be seen anywhere will be within reach of the citizens of this city, and they should see that good music is appreciated and well patronized.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

WHEN A MUSICIAN says he can play Mundelsohn, or Mendelshown, or Mundelshin you know for certain he is drunk. When an ordinary mortal talks about the Bish Constution he is anything but sober. When anybody else talks about crysamums, crystamunths or crysantimums, you are sure he has had a big session with John Barleycorn. Mendelssohn, British Constitution and chrysanthemum are three unfailing tests of the sobriety of all our acquaintances.

ORILLIA has got a new post office. Even so, just wait till you see the new one Peterborough will soon be building.

A Notice to the Preacher.

A local paper tells of a clergyman who received this note telling him to perform a marriage ceremony:

"This is to give you notis that I and Miss Jemina Arbella Brearly is coming to your church on Saturday afternoon next to undergo the operation of matrimony at your hands. Please be prompt, as the cab is hired by the hour."

IN THE GARDEN

By Walt Mason

Come into the garden, Maud, from your divan, soft and snug; for the springtime is abroad, and the garden must be dug. Come into the garden, do, and you'll know what labor means; we'll toil the long summer through, and harvest a pint of beans. The winter's an also ran, spring's here, with its wrens and doves; so come with your sprinkling can, and come with your leather gloves. The call of the soil is heard, the call that old Adam knew, and, though it's a thing absurd, we'll toil as our neighbors do; our labor is all in vain, we know ere we do a stroke, all useless the stress and strain, and the garden is a joke. For cutworms will take the corn, and chinchbugs destroy the peas, as sure as that we were born to fool with such tasks as these. The hail will destroy the beets, and also the succotash, and when we desire green eats, we'll buy them, and pay the cash. But come to the garden, Maud, regardless of things like these, get close to the fertile sod, and crawl on your hands and knees. Come forth to this verdant scene, away from your Persian rugs! Oh, come with your Paris green, to kill the potato bugs!

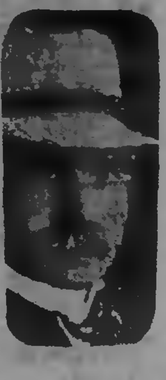
SATURDAY, APRIL TWENTY-FIFTH

MR. ÆMILIUS JARVIS celebrates his fifty-fourth birthday to-day by retiring from the Commodoreship of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club, to which office he has been elected eleven times. During that time he has flown his flag over the following yachts: Samoa, Merry Thought, Sitarah, the present flagship the schooner yacht "Zahra." He has also been interested in as owner or part owner during the same period of the "Thistledown," "Canada," "Beaver" and "Minota," and has been an active racing man since the 70's, he being said to have won over 200 races during this time. As a boy he went to sea before the mast but returned to more pleasant sailing waters and yachting. His line of amusements has been exceedingly varied, as a young man having won foot races and bicycle races, and was stroke of the Leander crew when they won the Canadian Association Regatta on Toronto Bay in 1883. He also won many single scull races between the years 1879 and 1883. He is a keen lover of a horse, particularly the hunter class, and is generally to be seen during the season with the Toronto hounds and has for many years gone to England in the winter time to enjoy this sport over there. He was also reckoned the best man in Hamilton with the gloves and is nearly always to be seen if there are any boxing contests in reach. His business interests are as varied as his sporting tastes. He was mainly responsible for the Hamilton Iron and Steel Company in Hamilton, wholly responsible for the consolidation known as the British Columbia Packers' Association which has large interests both in fresh fish and canned salmon in British Columbia, promoted the King Edward Hotel, the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway and the Canadian Locomotive Company.



SUNDAY, APRIL TWENTY-SIXTH

HANCE LOGAN, formerly M.P. for Cumberland, N.S., and the man who enjoyed the distinction of having defeated Sir Charles Tupper in the memorable election of 1896, celebrates his forty-fifth birthday today. During the twelve years he sat at Ottawa, he was familiarly known as "Handsome Hance," being one of the best looking men in the House. Perhaps the most amusing incident of his political career was when, in the 1896 campaign, he arranged to hold a meeting at Apple River, a Conservative stronghold. When he arrived at the hall he found that a patent medicine vendor had forstalled him and was haranguing the crowd from the platform. As soon as he tried to displace the fellow the audience began to hiss and he had the greatest difficulty in the world in making himself heard. But he was young and good-looking and the ladies soon saw to it that he got a show. On election day he did well at the Apple River poll.

COWARDICE COURT

BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON

Penelope laughed aloud as she gazed upon the tangle of hoof prints. The duke looked as surprised as it was possible for him to look after the wear of the past night.

"Hang it all, Penelope," he said. "I didn't say anything, don't you know."

"I was just thinking," she said hastily, "what fun it would be for us to explore the haunted house."

"Oh, I say, Pen, that's going out of the way for a little fun, isn't it? My word, it's a filthy old house with rats and mice and all that—no place for a ghost, much less a nice little human being like you. They're all like that."

"I think you are afraid to go," said she.

"Afraid of ghosts? Pshaw!" sniffed the duke, sticking out his chest.

"Yes, Shaw; that's whom you're afraid of."

"Now, see here, Pen, you shouldn't say that. Shaw's a d—, a cad. See what Cecil did to him. Remember that? Well, pooh! What would I do to him?" Penelope looked him over critically.

"I'll admit that you're larger and younger than Cecil," she confessed grudgingly. "But they say Mr. Shaw is a giant killer." The duke dropped his monocle and guffawed loudly.

"Good!" he cried in the ecstasy of pride. His worn, dissipated face lighted up with unwonted interest. "I say, Pen, that's the nicest thing you've said to me in a week. You've been so deuced cold of late. I don't understand. I'm not such a bad lot, you know."

"Tell that to Mrs. De Peyton and Mrs. Corwith. They're looking for the good in everything."

"By Jove, I believe you're jealous! This is the proudest moment of my life."

"Don't be silly! And don't try to make love to me any more. Wait until I'm married," she added, with a laugh, the irony of which escaped him.

"But, hang it all, suppose you should marry some one else and not me?"

"That's what I mean."

"Oh," he said, perplexed. Then, as if his stupidity called for an explanation: "I had a beastly night. Didn't go to bed till 4. But, I say, why can't I have the same privilege as these other chaps? Corwith makes love to you and so does Odwell, and, hang it, they're both married. It's rotten mean of"— "Their wives are accountable for their manners, not I. But, come; will you go to Renwood's with me?"

"I'd rather talk to you in that nice little corner of the billiard room at home if you"—

"But I don't need a brandy and soda. Oh!" This exclamation came with the discovery of an approaching horseman. "It's Mr. Shaw, I'm sure."

Randolph Shaw, loyal to his feudal promise, appeared in the road a couple of hundred yards away. He drew rein and from that distance surveyed the two who were so near to encroaching upon his preserves. He sat straight and forbidding in the saddle. For a full minute the two factions stared at each other. Then, without a sign of recognition, Shaw turned and rode rapidly away.

"He rides like a gentleman," commented Miss Drake, after reflection.

"Indian blood in him," remarked her companion.

"Let us go home," said she, whirling her horse like a flash. The duke had some difficulty in keeping abreast of her during the ride, and he lost sight of her altogether after they dismounted at Bazelhurst Villa.

The momentary glimpse of a real man set Penelope's opinions on edge for the remainder of the day and night. Shaw, whatever else he might be, was a man. Even while others addressed her in conversation she was absentmindedly recalling to memory certain English gentlemen at home who could stand comparison with this handsome fellow across the danger line. But to compare any one of the men in Lady Bazelhurst's house party—oh, it was absurd! She looked them over. Dull eyed, blase, frayed by the social whirl, worn out, pulseless, all of them. They talked automobile, bridge, women and self in particular. In the seclusion of a tete-a-tete they talked love with an ardor that lost most of its danger because it was from force of habit. One of the men was even now admitting in her ear that he had not spent an evening alone with his wife in four years.

"There's always something doing," he said. "A week or two ago, by Jove, you wouldn't believe it, but we had an evening turn up without a thing on hand. Strangest thing I ever knew. Neither of us had a thing on. We said we'd stay at home and go to bed early just to see how it felt. Well, what do you think? We sat up and read till half past 10 o'clock, and then both of us thought of it at the same time. We dressed and went down to Rector's and waited for the theaters to let out. Three o'clock when we got home. You can't imagine what a queer experience it is being all alone with one's wife."

"Don't you love your wife, Mr. Odwell?"

"Certainly! But there's always a crowd." Both of them glanced over at pretty Mrs. Odwell. She was looking down at her plate demurely while Reggie Van Voort talked straight into her pink ear, his eyes gleaming with the zest of invasion. "I say, Miss Drake, you won't mind talking to me awhile after dinner, will you?" went on Odwell, something like relief in his voice.

After dinner she was obliged to set him straight in a little matter. They were sitting on the terrace, and he had thrown away his half smoked cigarette, an act in itself significant. She had been listening patiently, from sheer habit and indifference, to what he was saying, but at last she revolted.

"Don't! You shall not say such things to me. I am not your kind, I fancy, Mr. Odwell," she said. "I don't know why you should tell me of your chorus girl friends, of your suppers and all that. I don't care to hear of them, and I don't intend that you shall use me as a subject of illustration. I am going upstairs."

"Oh, come now, that's rather rough, just as we were getting on so well. All the fellows do the same"—

"I know. You need not tell me. And you all have wives at home, too," with intense scorn.

"Now, that's where you wrong us. They're not at home, you know. That's just it."

"Never mind, Mr. Odwell; I'm going in." She left him and entered the house. For a minute or two he looked after her in wonder and then, softly whispering, made his way over to where De Peyton, through some oversight, was talking to his own wife. De Peyton unceremoniously announced that he was going upstairs to write a letter.

Penelope, flushed with disgust and humiliation, drew near a crowd of men and women in the long living room. Her brother was haranguing the assemblage, standing forth among them like an unconquered bantam. In spite of herself she felt a wave of shame and pity creep over her as she looked at him.

"Barnminster says the fellow ran when he saw him today," his lordship was saying. "But that doesn't help matters. He has been on my land again and again, Tompkins says, and Tompkins ought to know."

"And James, too," said the duke with a brandied roar.

"Can't Tompkins and his men keep that man off my land?" demanded Lady Bazelhurst. Every one took note of the pronoun. Her ladyship's temples seemed to narrow with hatred. Bazelhurst had told the men privately that she was passing sleepless nights in order to "hate that fellow Shaw" to her full capacity.

"My dear, I have given positive orders to Tompkins, and he swears he'll carry them out," said he hastily.

"I suppose Tompkins is to throw him into the river again."

"He is to shoot that fellow Shaw if he doesn't keep off our land. I've had enough of it. They say he rode his confounded plow horse all over the west end the other day." Penelope smiled reflectively. "Trampled the new fern beds out of existence and all that. Hang him, Tompkins will get him if he persists. He has told the men to take a shot at the rascal on sight. Tompkins doesn't love him, you know."

Penelope went her way, laughing, and forgot the danger that threatened Randolph Shaw.

The next morning, quite early, she was off for a canter. Some magnetic force drew her toward that obliterated line in the roadway. Almost as she came up to it and stopped Randolph Shaw rode down the hillside through the trees and drew rein directly opposite, the noses of their horses almost touching. With a smile he gave the military salute even as she gasped in self conscious dismay.

"On duty, Miss Drake; no trespassing," he said. There was a glad ring in his voice. "Please don't run away. You're on the safe side."

"I'm not going to run," she said, her cheek flushing. "How do you know where the line is? It has been destroyed by the ravages of time."

"Yes. It has seemed a year. This thing of acting sentinel so religiously is a bit wearing." His great friendly dog came across the line, however, and looked bravely up into the enemy's face, wagging his tail. "Traitor! Come back, Bonaparte!" cried his master.

"What a beautiful dog!" she cried, sincere admiration in her eyes. "I love a big dog. He is your best friend, I'll wager."

"'Love me, love my dog,' is my motto."

The conversation was not prolonged. Penelope began to find herself on rather friendly terms with the enemy. Confusion came over her when she remembered that she was behaving in a most unmaidenly manner. Doubtless that was why she brought the meeting to a close by galloping away.

The ways of fortune are strange, look at them from any point of view. Surprising as it may seem, a like encounter happened on the following day and—aye, on the day after and every day for a week or more. Occasions there were when Penelope was compelled to equivocate shamefully in order to escape the companionship of the duke, the count or others of their ilk. Once when the guardian of the road was late at his post she rode far into the enemy's country, actually thrilled by the joy of adventure. When he appeared far down the road she turned and fled with all the sensations of a culprit, and he thundered after her with vindictiveness that deserved better results. Across the line she drew rein and faced him defiantly, her hair blown awry, her cheeks red, her eyes sparkling.

"No trespass!" she cried, holding up her gloved hand. He stopped short, for that was one of the terms of truce.

The next day he again was missing, but she was not to be caught by his stratagem. Instead of venturing into the trap he had prepared for her, she remained on her side of the line, smiling at the thought of him in hiding far up the road. If any one had suggested to her that she was developing too great an interest in this stalwart gentleman she would have laughed him to scorn. It had not entered her mind to question herself as to the pleasure she found in being near him. She was founding her actions on the basis that he was a real man and that the little comedy of adventure was quite worth while.

At length an impatient line appeared on her fair brow, a resentful gleam in her eyes. His remissness was an impertinence! It was the last time she would come—but a sudden thought struck her like a blow. She turned white and red by turns. Had he tired of the sport? Had the novelty worn off? Was he laughing at her for a silly coquette? The riding crop came down sharply upon her horse's flank, and a very deeply agitated young woman galloped off toward Bazelhurst Villa, hurrying as though afraid he might catch sight of her in flight.

A quarter of a mile brought a change in her emotions. British stubbornness arose to combat an utter rout. After all, why should she run away from him? With whimsical bravado she turned off suddenly into the trail that led to the river, her color deepening with the consciousness that, after all, she was vaguely hoping she might see him somewhere before the morning passed. Through the leafy pathway she rode at a snail's pace, brushing the low hanging leaves and twigs from about her head with something akin to petulance.

IT PAYS TO BE KIND, RAILWAY PRESIDENT SAYS

To every employee of the Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways a message has been sent out from this President's Office. This message deals with "Efficiency and Courtesy" and is signed by Mr. E. J. Chamberlain, President of the Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways. Mr. Chamberlain's message embodies the spirit of the modern railroad, an insistence on the right of the public, passengers and shippers alike, to demand the best possible service from the railway men. In his message to the passenger department employees the President says:

"The railroad company desires to sell its transportation. The ticket rates are alike for all, and any person buying a ticket, no matter what the style his clothes are, how much money he displays or what his position in society is, is entitled to proper and courteous treatment.

"The railroad man has a great opportunity for passing out kindness and good will. He comes in contact with every kind and condition of individual; the old, the young, the rich, the poor, the illiterate, the learned; the happy, the prosperous, and those in defeat; saturated with sorrow and distress; he sees them all and through intuition knows to which class they belong. A smile, a kind word, or a kindness done to any of these cannot fail to leave its impression for good and this good cannot help but expand. Try it."

The President's message to the freightmen says:—

"The needs and wishes of shippers and consignees should be anticipated as much as possible. When cars are ordered the matter should receive close attention and in case it is not possible to furnish as ordered, shipper should be notified, so he may arrange his plans accordingly; he should be made to feel you are interested in his welfare, and that his business is worthy of consideration. Do not discommode a shipper because of some omission of his own, but try to help him out. Railroads are the servants of the public and it is their duty to serve well."

PRISONERS IN DANGER

FOUR AMERICANS MAY BE EXECUTED BY THE MEXICANS.

VERA CRUZ, April 25. — Seven American prisoners of Mexican soldiers, are being held at Cordoba or Orizaba, on the line of the Mexican railway between here and the capital four of whom at least are threatened with execution, according to authentic information received here last night.

Four of the Americans were taken from a train on the Vera Cruz isthmus line at Tierra Blanca and further along at Motzolongo station three other Americans and an Englishman were seized. Those captured at Tierra Blanca are W. A. Mangan, superintendent of the railroad, Engineer Elliott and Conductors Riley and Hart. At Motzolongo Edward Wounch, his son Sydney, A. M. Thomas and Mr. Boyd, a Britisher, were arrested by the Federals.

The belief that the Federals intended to execute at least four of the prisoners was gained from the conversation of the soldiers who captured them which was overheard by passengers on the train. The prisoners were taken to Cordoba, and, it is believed, later, were transferred to Orizaba, a point nearer the capital.

Eighteen Americans are still in Tierra Blanca, among them J. O. Cook, chief engineer of the Isthmus Railway; J. O. Schneider, J. D. Longston, C. D. Harrison and wife and children, and Mr. and Mrs. George McComber.

An indirect report received here yesterday from Mexico City, said that a mob attempted to burn the terminal of the Mexican railway but was prevented by President Huerta's troops.

O'Shaughnessy at Vera Cruz.

VERA CRUZ, April 25. — Nelson O'Shaughnessy, the United States Charge d'Affaires at Mexico, arrievd her last night.

He was accompanied by Gen. Corona and Col. Braniff, who were appointed as his escort by President Huerta as a special courtesy to the retiring charge d'affaires.

Sponges are now being shipped from Honduras.

THIRD NAVAL POWER TITLE HELD BY UNITED STATES

Surpasses Japan but is Behind the German Navy

The navy of the United States has for fifteen years been one of the most formidable fighting forces in the world. Up to a year or two ago, it was surpassed only by the British navy, and even now is only slightly inferior to the German fleet. Although the American army has been insignificant in comparison with the huge armaments of European powers, the American navy has always been a force to be reckoned with very seriously. It has been one of the main reasons for the influence of the United States in the councils of the nations.

For the past ten years, the money spent on the American navy has never been less than $100,000,000 a year. Last year the appropriation touched the $140,000,000 mark, although provision was made for only one Dreadnought battleship. The larger part of the money went for up-keep, extension of dockyards, and provision of the colliers, supply boats, and auxiliaries of all sorts which are a necessary part of every fleet. In the American navy efficiency has been placed before numbers and size.

Imposing in Numbers.

The numbers and size of American battleships are imposing enough, however. Of the very largest and most powerful ships of the "Dreadnought" type, having heavy armor, and armed with eight or more of the biggest guns, the United States has 10 completed. The British navy boasts of 30, the German of 17 and the Japanese of 5. In older battleships, built between 1896 and 1906, the United States stands in a better relative position with 22, as against 38 for the Royal Navy, 20 for the German, and 15 for the Japanese. In large armored cruisers, carrying side armor and big guns, and only slightly inferior to battleships, the United States has 13, as against 34 for Great Britain, 10 for Japan, and 9 for Germany. It will be seen that the United States ranks as the third naval power and that the fleet is considerably stronger than that of Japan, and very little inferior to that of Germany.

The power of the big Dreadnought type of battleship is impressive. The "Texas," the newest ship of the American navy is of 27,000 tons displacement, and can steam at a speed of 21 knots. Her main armament consists of ten 14-inch guns. These weapons throw shells weighing 1,400 pounds apiece. One armor piercing shot from them will pierce a plate of specially hardened stell 16 inches thick, at a range of 4 miles. The armor plating on the side just above the waterline is 12 inches thick. The crew of the Texas consists of 55 officers and 980 men.

To Keep Blockade.

It is not likely, however, that in the present war with Mexico, much use will be found for these lumbering monsters of Dreadnoughts. The main use of the fleet will be to maintain a blockade of the Mexican coast, to bombard ports at intervals, and to send men ashore to secure a safe landing for the army. To set a $12,000,000 fighting machine to cruise up and down a dangerous coast, stopping merchant vessels, when the same work could be done by a $120,000 gunboat, would be considerable waste. And hurling 14-inch shells which cost in the neighborhood of $500 apiece against mud walls would also be overdoing matters. Light ships and light guns will probably be used much more than the big Dreadnoughts. Armored cruisers will see much service. The Washington is typical of a dozen others. She is of 14,500 tons displacement, and can steam 23 knots.

She carries four 10-inch guns, and 16 of the very handy six-inch guns, which fire a 100-pound shell that serves all practical purposes of bombardment just as well as the bigger and costlier missiles.

The Light Craft.

Besides the armored cruisers, there are 11 fairly modern light cruisers, vessels of from 2,000 to 5,000 tons displacement, and carrying a number of six-inch and four-inch guns. They do not burn much coal, they only require crews of 300 men each, and they can stop a blockade runner just as well as a Dreadnought. For work close in to the coast, where sand bars and reefs would keep out big ships, 15 light-draft gunboats are available. They carry four-inch guns, throwing shells weighing 33 pounds apiece, only 12 pounds lighter than the shells from the naval guns that saved Ladysmith in the days of the Boer War.

To keep a large fleet at sea, colliers, water ships, and repair ships are needed. The U.S. navy has 14 fleet colliers. By rigging cables from mast to mast they can supply other ships with coal while still at sea. Though guns and ships are important, the man behind the gun is the deciding element. There are, in round numbers, 60,000 officers and men in the U.S. navy. And, contrary to general belief, very few of them are foreigners. Only 7,916 were born outside the United States, and some 400 of these are Chinese and Japanese stewards. Only 63 whites in the U.S. navy are not citizens of the United States.

Discipline is not as strict as in the German navy or the British navy, but efficiency does not seem to suffer. The shooting of the American navy is probably equal to that of any other fleet, though the fact that target practice results for the whole fleet are not published prevents accurate comparison. At the Battle of Santiago, 15 years ago, when the U. S. navy was largely manned by foreign-born sailors, only two shots out of every 100 reached their mark. Today the percentage of hits would be at least 50.

Repair facilities for a fleet operating along the Mexican coast are adequate. Key West, to the south-west of Florida, has a well-equipped dockyard. The navy yard at San Francisco is the best on the Pacific coast, and there are dockyard facilities at San Diego, only a few miles north of the Mexican border.

ANOTHER MAN

Hans Schmidt Makes an Effort To Escape Chair.

NEW YORK, April 25. — District Attorney Whitman yesterday received a letter from Hans Schmidt, the former priest, awaiting execution for the murder of Anna Aumuller, in which Schmidt charges another man with the crime. He declares that the Aumuller girl died as the result of a criminal operation performed by a man he named. He admitted that he had himself disposed of the body, and also admitted that he had shammed insanity during his trial.

Mr. Whitman said Schmidt also had written to Governor Glynn, begging that his sentence of death be commuted to life imprisonment. The district attorney, it is understood, placed little credence in Schmidt's new story.

"Love, to thrifty man, seems to be merely the working out of the problem whether two can live as cheaply as one."

FEARS RISING

Col. G. W. Goethals Places the Canal Zone on War Footing.

PANAMA, April 25.—Col. Geo. W. Goethals, Governor of Panama Canal zone, yesterday issued orders placing the canal zone on a strictly war footing. He instructed Major Gerhardt, commanding the 10th Infantry, to send two companies of infantry to patrol the Gatun locks, and one each for duty at the Miraflores and Pedro Miguel locks. The soldiers were given 100 rounds of ammunition each, and will camp near the locks.

The operating machinery of all the locks will be securely locked and the keys placed in the possession of Col. Goethals.

It is understood that coast artillery companies will be distributed among the fortifications on Flamencol and Culebra islands, at the Pacific end of the canal, and also at Toro Point and other forts at the Atlantic end.

The action of Col. Goethals is believed to have been the result of anti-American sentiment contained in the fly sheets, which were making their appearance in the streets of Panama, and also expressed editorially in El Diario, which is strongly pro-Mexican.

It was a fussy spinster who said that small boys were divided into two classes - the bad ones and the dead ones.

OLD CITY IS DESTROYED

FEDERAL TROOPS USE TORCH AND DYNAMITE

LAREDO, Texas, April 25. — The United States consulate, municipal building, shops, market building, roundhouses and station of the national railways of Mexico, custom house, Banco National, Concordia Theatre, barracks of Mexico Federals, Laredo flour mills, electric light plant and a number of other buildings in all parts of Nuevo Laredo reduced to a mass of ruins, tell the destructive work done by the Mexican Federal soldiers upon their departure from Nuevo Laredo yesterday afternoon at two o'clock upon special trains.

The quaint old Mexican city was destroyed rather than let it remain as it was to be possibly occupied by American soldiery if they crossed the river. The best and most costly buildings of the town were reduced to ashes when the torch was applied to them yesterday afternoon. Before setting fire to the adjoining buildings, the United States Consulate, recently vacated by Consul Garrett, was blown to atoms by dynamite.

As the train pulled out with the Mexican soldiers, some of them poured a volley into the American guards on the banks of the American side, and the fire was promptly responded.

Then several Mexicans appeared and opened fire across the river on the same guards and most of the Mexicans were killed, but no American soldiers were injured.

Then two men attempted to blow up the international and railway bridges from the Mexican side and they were shot down by American sharpshooters.

GOVERNMENT TO REPAY FARMERS' BANK DEPOSITORS

$1,200,000 TO BE GRANTED

Hon. W. T. White Announces Resolution to Make Good Government's Responsibility Arising Out of Certificate Granted by Hon. W. S. Fielding.

OTTAWA, April 25. — Depositors in the Farmers' Bank who lost their money are going to have it refunded by the Government. Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, has given notice that he will move the following resolution:

"Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that there may be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada a sum not exceeding $1,200,000, to be paid to persons who were creditors for money on deposit in the Farmers' Bank of Canada, the respective amounts standing to their credit in the books of the bank when the bank suspended payment."

This is the bank to which Hon. W. S. Fielding granted a certificate in spite of various warnings as to the dangerous character of the undertaking, hence the Government's responsibility.

The House spent the greater part of the day in committee of supply, steamship subsidies being under consideration.

The high rates charged by the North Atlantic combine were again brought to the Government by Dr. Steele (South Perth) and other Ontario Conservatives. Mr. Burnham (Peterboro) said that the regulation of ocean freight rates might be a difficult problem for the Government to grapple with, but if the Government were unable to cope with it they should stand aside and let some other Government take the job.

When the House got into committee of the whole on the estimates of the Trade and Commerce Department, Mr Foster was asked as to applications for subsidies by steamship lines about to engage in the coastal service of Canada via the Panama Canal.

The Minister said in reply that many such applications had been received, but none had been taken up. Possibly some assistance would be given to a line from Liverpool to Vancouver, stopping at Halifax.

Dr. Steele (Perth) declared that the present rates charged by the North Atlantic combine were most discouraging to agriculture. The Government should at once notify the combine that it would no longer tolerate the extortionate rates. No doubt it would be a hard matter to control the rates, as so many foreign boats were doing business on the North Atlantic.

Mr. Foster pointed out that if the companies refused to reduce rates, all the Government had to do was to cut off their subsidies and they would quickly accede to the demands of the country.

Mr. Morphy (North Perth) drew the attention of the committee to the fact that Canada had endeavored to increase her trade with Newfoundland. He believed that colony could use much of our food product. He also advocated taking Newfoundland into confederation, and said that the Government should make overtures to the Newfoundland authorties with a view to bringing it about.

What to do With Asparagus Now It is Becoming Plentiful in Spring

Asparagus is one of the things that makes us glad when spring comes. Its flavor, like the first warm winds that blow out of an April sky, is a delicate forerunner of the richer gifts of summer. And yet is there one of all the many vegetables that the warm suns of summer bring out that is more toothsome than asparagus?

From the housewife's point of view the best thing about asparagus is that it is so simple to prepare for the table. In fact, with a little salt and butter, you have a dish fit for a king.

The matter of boiling, however, is sometimes a stumbling block. We all have seen asparagus come to the table without heads. This difficulty is due to the fact that the heads are so much tenderer than the stalks that when the stalks have been boiled sufficiently the heads have been boiled to pieces. One way to obviate this trouble is to take pains to put the bunches of asparagus, after they have been washed and scraped, into the boiling dish with the stalk end down. The boiling water should be poured over the stalk as far as the heads, but not to cover them. Then as the stalks boil the heads are gently steamed, and if handled carefully will not break.

Use Wire Basket.

Another way to obviate this difficuly is to use a wire basket which is made especially for asparagus. This basket holds the stalks while cooking, and the bottoms opens easily, so that when the asparagus is cooked it can be put on a plate or serving platter without breaking the ends. It costs 75 cents.

Asparagus should always be cooked with salt in the proportion of a teaspoonful to a quart of water. No rule can be laid down as to the length of time to cook asparagus. When it is young and very tender fifteen minutes will suffice. When it is somewhat older it will be improved by cooking up to thirty minutes or more.

In choosing asparagus from the market it matters little whether it be small and highly colored or thick stalked and white. If it is young and fresh it is sure to be good. Asparagus is like fish in this—that you don't really know its flavor until you have eaten it very fresh—just caught from the water or just cut from the asparagus bed. But the next best thing to do with respect to asparagus is to buy it on market day and get it home and in the icebox early in the morning before it has been exposed to the air and heat for many hours.

Served simply with butter or cold, with a vinaigrette sauce, it is a good accompaniment of any roast meat.

Various sauces make various dishes of asparagus, and although connoisseurs insist that the delicate flavor of this vegetable cannot be improved on by the addition of flavoring, other than pepper, salt and melted butter, still sauces can be depended upon by the cook for variety.

The Choice of Kinds.

Regarding green and white asparagus, it is generally admitted that the long, green sort is sweeter than the larger white variety. But, on the other hand, the thick white stalks perhaps look better than the green ones. Either kind is good, if it is fresh.

Great size of stalks has always been the great object of asparagus growers. And that means that for thousands of years gardeners who raised asparagus have been trying to increase the size of the stalks. Far from the time of Cato, who mentions it in the year 200 B.C., down to our own days the vegetable has been cultivated.

And we have not got very far ahead of the classic gardeners if their reports are to be believed. For Pliny, forty or fifty years after the beginning of the Christian era, reports that in his day three shoots would sometimes tip the scales at a pound. We are not in the habit of doing much better than that even today.

TRUCE IN STRIKE

Five Days' War in Colorado Cost at Least 60 Lives.

DENVER, Colo., April 25.—At the end of the most dramatic but probably the least bloody day of the five-day industrial war in Colorado, a truce was declared last night which may temporarily check the atrocities in the southern Colorado coal fields, which have startled the world for the very magnitude of their horrors.

The events of the week have paralyzed the State of Colorado. The cost in lives is not under 60; the property loss exceeds the $1,000,000 mark. Business of every kind is at a standstill.

The truce was formed late yesterday in Denver. When it was arranged the state militia was marching upon Aguilar, where the strikers were lined up more than one thousand strong to meet their attack.

Acting Governor Fitzgerald and Horace Hawkins, attorney for the miners, made the agreement. The state promises that the soldiers will not fire unless they are fire upon. Hawkins has communicated with the strike leaders at Aguilar, Walsenberg, Trinidad and Ludlow asking that they respect the agreement for a cessation of hostilities for two days.

Whether these steps taken at so late an hour will avail is doubtful. The miners, lined up to avenge what they term the "massacre of their women and children" at Ludlow by the militia, are sullen and defiant. And almost to a man the people of the state of Colorado sympathize strongly with them.

If the truce holds there will be no firing to-night. If the strikers ignore it or if the soldiers violate it no one can estimate what the result will be.

CONSTABLE IS UNDER ARREST

York County Officer Charged With Perjury

TORONTO, April 25.—After the conclusion of the Davis-Wettlaufer breach of promise suit in the County Court last evening, in which Miss Davis got a verdict for $7,000, James McMullen, county constable in York County, was placed under arrest by Detective Montgomery on a charge of perjury. McMullen was taken to No. 1 police station, where he spent an hour in the cells, after which he was released on $2,000 bail, furnished by James McCormick, Grosvenor street. The warrant was sworn out by J. L. Wettlaufer yesterday afternoon, and the charge is in connection with certain letters written to the morality department, which when produced in the recent trial McMullen denied having written.

He is now lying at the hospital with a tube attached to his heart and there is every hope that the operation will have done away for ever with the pericarditis, or heart strangulation, from which he suffered.

EXPENDITURES RUN GAUNTLET OF TIME-HONORED OBJECTIONS

String of Liberal Amendments Revamping Earlier Cricticisms of Finances of the Province are Answered and Voted Down in the Legislature.

TORONTO, April 25. — On the second reading of a bill to sanction the Government's appropriations in the Legislature yesterday the Opposition renewed its criticism of the finances of the province.

Liberal Whip Bowman said the sum of the estimates along with the statutory payments of last year would involve an expenditure of $22,000,000. Allowing for the cash balance of $2,380,000 carried over from last year and the balance available on the New Ontario loan, which, with the new loan of $8,000,000 authorized, along with the estimated receipts, would leave a shortage of three or three and one-half million dollars. The Government would soon face direct taxation.

Hon. Mr. Lucas replied that during the year ordinary revenue would exceed ordinary current expenditure and a surplus would be found at the end. The Government would never fear to go into public money markets for borrowing purposes. No class of people was suffering an undue burden and the masses were getting off lightly.

The finances of the Provincial University formed the subject of an amendment by Mr. Rowell when the education estimates were being considered. It expressed regret that the Government had failed to present proposals for the aid of the university.

Mr. Lucas replied that the grants to the University for the year would approximate $500,000 and the amendment was defeated.

An amendment offered by Mr. Sinclair, opposing the expenditure of $100,000 on Government House was also defeated.

John Seath, Superintendent of Education, recently published a letter that contained references to W. E. N. Sinclair, M.P.P., and as a result Mr. Sinclair asked in the House yesterday that either Dr. Seath be reprimanded by Hon. Dr. Pyne or called before the Bar of the House and dismissed.

Dr. James McQueen moved that the House "protest against this unfair and unjust attack by the Superintendent of Education upon one of the honorable members of this House in respect to his legitimate work as a member," and "that this House must hold the Minister of Education responsible for this breach of the privileges of the members of the House."

Dr. Pyne, in reply, said that he would not help to air old grudges in the House. He believed Mr. Sinclair should be censured for using his position to attack a man who could not answer him.

The Liberal motion lost.

The Sudbury district is asking the Ontario Government to extend the T. & N. O. line from Elk Lake to Sudbury via Gowganda if engineers approve the feasibility of such a project. A large deputation yesterday, led by Charles McCrea, M.P.P., of Sudbury, and supported by prominent Sudbury men, waited on the Cabinet and urged the extension of a necessity to the growing north. Shipments of a thousand tons of ore per day and a flourishing pulp wood business were some of the business the line would handle.

Hon. Mr. Hearst said that the matter was under investigation, but Government resources being limited, they could not promise to build the road, but if the reports justified it $275,000 would be placed to the building account this year.

ASSURANCE OF FRIENDSHIP FROM VILLA BRINGS HOPE TO THE STATES

Troops Are Being Moved However With All Despatch to the Border to Protect U. S. Frontier—Federals at Nuevo Laredo Fire Into Laredo, Texas—Trade at Vera Cruz Will Be Allowed to Pass.

WASHINGTON, April 25. — While the attention of the American Government, for the most part yesterday was concentrated on restoring order at Vera Cruz and expediting the departure of Americans from all parts of Mexico, a watchful eye was trained on the transcontinental boundary between Mexico and United States for any signs of hostilities from the Mexican Constitutionalists.

President Wilson and his Cabinet had a long meeting, after which optimism was conspicuously apparent both in their demeanor and in formal discussion of the situation.

There was no particular development to which feelings of hopefulness that the real war would be averted could be traced, but General Villa's friendly pronouncement, it was admitted, had impressed many officials here with the possibility that the Constitutionalists after all would remain neutral while the American Government sought reparation from Huerta.

Other officials were not so sanguine, and the army moved with precision and swiftness to protect the American boundary and reinforce the expeditionary force of marines and bluejackets at Vera Cruz.

Conferences at the State Department between Secretary Bryan and representatives of the Mexican Constitutionalists resulted in the despatch to Gen. Carranza of a telegram by the latter, strongly advising him to remain neutral, and assuring him that the American Government intended to withdraw its forces from Mexico just as soon as satisfactroy reparation had been made for offences committed by Huerta. The advice given Carranza here was that by assuming a hostile attitude he would draw all Mexico into a war, Huerta would be perpetuated and the Constitutionalist cause lost in the melee.

Signs of uneasiness abroad because the United States, though not having declared a blockade or a state of war, is exercising jurisdiction at Vera Cruz between measures "short of war" and actual war, began to be apparent yesterday. Cabinet officials said no attempt would be made to interfere with the regular channels of commerce anywhere, cargoes being allowed to land at all ports. Munitions of war alone will be held at Vera Cruz if landed, provisions and other commercial supplies not being detained.

The sporadic outbreak at Nuevo Laredo, Mex., where the evacuating Federals burned the town and fired across the American border was not unexpected, but it was significantly pointed out by officials here that the American troops returned the fire merely in defence of the international line and did not become the aggressors. Both the military and naval forces are operating under this principle, defending themselves from attack, but taking no offensive move without instructions from Washington.

Congress still talked about Mexico. Senator Lodge read a long telegram from many prominent persons urging an enquiry into the Mexican situation before war was declared. Representative Fitzgerald, chairman of the House committee on appropriations, asked the President if he wanted "any war appropriations," and Mr. Wilson said "not as yet."

Secretary Garrison is practically without funds for the particular movements of the army now being made, but he is drawing on the future. It is a violation of law for the War Department to incur any obligation without authorization by Congress, but Mr. Garrison smilingly said he had "faced jail" several times in the last few days on this account. Leaders in Congress have assured him they would back him up in the present emergency. The President has hesitated to approve any request for an emergency appropriation by the War Department for fear it might be interpreted as a forerunner of war.

Mr. Wilson will affix his signature probably to-day to the volunteer army bill, providing the machinery for raising a volunteer army force in any time of emergency. The possibility that the militia might be needed at this time led to an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States for decision of a pending case to remove legal obstacles in the use of the militia for volunteer service. Estimates by army officers as to the number of men the President might call for in case of war range from fifty to one hundred thousand, but not a syllable has come from the White House as to this point.

Seventeen Americans Killed.

ANOTHER FIRST SACKER WITH PRETTY AVERAGE

Tri-state Player Joins the Squad for Trial at Initial Station

(Special to The Review.)

Youngstown, April 25.— Manager Blount stood on the lines yesterday afternoon and saw his regulars vanquish the Yannigans by 9-3 in a twelve-inning encounter. It was typical training trip ball, loose and uninteresting, with an odd spectacular spear or three base slam. The regulars lined up as follows: Schettler, rTacey and Belting pitchers; Kelly and Ryberg, catchers; Freeman, first; King, second; Price, short; Byrne, third; Fox, right; Gaffney, centre; Swartz, left.

The infield worked fine, and under the careful eye of Blount they are rapidly improving. The peerless one is ever on the alert, detecting weakness and coaching the youngsters in different styles of play. Freeman on first showed great ability to field and should have no trouble in shoving O'Hearne and Flanagan off. He played several games in Saginaw before reporting, and is in perfect condition. Yesterday he had two hits out of four times up.

Fox and Gaffney were going well in the outer garden, and secured two bingles each. The pitchers did not exert themselves, although at times they steamed a few across. Sterling, Cresswell and Miller worked for the Yannigans. The most prominent of the team was Schrage, the fair-haired infielder. He held down second to a nicety, and drove the pill for three safeties in four times up. By his showing to-day he will make them all travel to keep him off the Petes' payroll.

Another First Baseman.

Gorman, last year with Atlantic City in the Tri-State, is here trying out for first. Arriving yesterday noon he wasn't used in the game, but he will be given a chance to show his wares to-day. He is young and well built, weighing 160 pounds. In 112 games in the above league which is Class B., he was at bat 395 times, scored 36 runs, made 91 hits (an average of .230), and stole 22 bases. His fielding average was .981.

WILD BILL DONOVAN WAS THE STAR FLINGER OF HIS TIME

It was eleven years ago to-day that "Wild Bill" Donovan made his debut in the American League, where for several years to come he was destined to shine as one of the most brilliant performers in the box in baseball history. He was the main dependence of the Tiger pitching staff in those three memorable years of 1907, 1908 and 1909, when Detroit had the pennant habit. In 907 Donovan led the league in percentage of games won, and during the five-year period from 1906 to 1910 he was named for the flinger of the "All-America" team of the American league, being one of six Tigers to win that eminence.

Donovan was born in Lawrence, Mass., in 1876, but his youth was spent in Philadelphia, where his father was a cigar dealer. Bill served his baseball apprenticeship on "kid" nines, and later played with Philadelphia and Sunbury, Pa., semi-pro. clubs. In 1897 William returned to his native New England, and pitched for Pawtucket and Water- won the pennant for the Automobile City. He scored 25 victories to four defeats. In 1908 he helped Detroit to another pennant, capturing 18 of the 25 games he pitched. In 1909 another pennant year for Detroit, Donovan was out of the game until the mid-season, and did not figure largely in Detroit's triumph. In 1910 he came back and won 18 games and lost only seven. bury in the New England league. In 1899 Bill made his big league debut with Washington, where he proved that he had everything—except the little matter of control. Just because of his wildness, Washington let him go, and Bill joined the Hartford club. Brooklyn, then managed by Ned Hanlon, gave Bill a trial in 1900, but his little weakness of temporarily forgetting the location of the plate caused the Dodgers to send him back to the Nutmeg state capital. Three times Donovan was dropped from the Brooklyn payroll, but each time recalled, and in 1901 he gained sufficient control to be permitted to stay in the main show. After a couple of years with the Superbas Donovan was lured away by Detroit, and eleven years ago to-day he twirled his first contest in a Tiger uniform, defeating Cleveland by the lop-sidede score of 11 to 1. With his wildness conquered, Bill speedily pitched himself into the baseball hall of fame. For three years he went along like a house afire, but in 1906, he had a slump and came mighty near being shipped back to the minors. It was mightly fortunate for the Tiger management that they gave Bill another chance, for in 1907 he made a pitching record that has seldom been surpassed, and

WRESTLING

Thousands saw Raoul de Rouen establish his claim to a match with Zbysco, for the World's Championship at Sohmer Park, Montreal, Wednesday night.

After a stormy match with Cazeaux, he threw the latter in two straight falls, and the first time so quickly that poor Cazeaux hardly knew what happened to him.

At any rate, when he returned, after a long twenty minutes rest, he looked very subdued, and [illegible] at all the lively, roguish Cazeaux [illegible] old.

But there was a ferocity about his appearance that spelled ill for his big opponent.

However, his attempt to rattle de Rouen, and the encouragements from the crowd with whom he was the favorite, were all in vain. The difference of weight which favored de Rouen, and the latter's superior strength, were obstacles he could not overcome.

De Rouen never was in any danger of being thrown, but once Cazeaux got him against the ropes in such a position that had he been able to force him over, de Rouen would have been badly hurt.

Bourque, the referee, who is not a small man by any means, was absolutely unable to make the two big fellows behave, and once during one of the furious rushes which they made at one another, was thrown himself, not any too gently.

Towards the end of the second bout, de Rouen got Cazeaux by the legs outside of the ropes in such a manner, that a fall would surely have resulted if there had been room enough, but there were only the footlights to accommodate them, and fortunately a glimmer of reason remained in the angry brain, sufficient to make him draw back, or the Zbysco-Le Martin incident of the Arena last spring would probably have been re-enacted.

All Up With Cazeaux.

It was all up with Cazeaux, however. He made a magnificent defence.

Aided by the slippery condition of his skin, he squirmed out of some of the most dangerous holds like a fat Conger eel. He bridged and he spun, and he did everything any mortal wrestler could do to stave off defeat, but it was useless, and twenty-nine minutes saw his strength gone, and his shoulders on the mat for a second time.

It was a struggle worth seeing, and the crowd appreciated it, though there seemed to be somewhat of a disappointment that Cazeaux, who has made many friends here, was not able to put up a better fight.

PETE SPRATT SURVIVING MEMBER OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

If all the newly-elected hold their jobs, the Peterboro Hockey Club will have what is practically a new set of officers to pilot the O. H. A. teams towards the championship honors next season, as the annual meeting held last night in the Oriental Hotel parlors, elected Mr. W. Nelson, president, and Mr. H. P. Morgan, secretary.

The vice-presidents are Messrs. Maurice Park and F. Watley, and Messrs. J. P. Bond, B. Spratt, G. B. Wilson and C. Giroux form the new executive.

The New President.

In accepting the office of president, Mr. Nelson assured the meeting that he would do his best, and should he need any assistance in the way of suggestion or advice, he felt sure that it would only be necessary to ask Mr. Picard, who would be glad to help him.

Mr. Picard expressed his thanks for the assistance given him and he asked that the same support be given to the new president.

The names of President J. L. Picard, W. Nelson and R. M. Glover went before the meeting for the office of president and the majority of votes were gathered by Mr. Nelson. A dozen or more names were suggested as executive members.

Secretary Bond read the financial statement which showed a balance of $1.37. The report was adopted.

Mr. R. M. Glover was re-appointed delegate to the annual meeting of the O. H. A. with Mr. P. Spratt as alternate.

A vote of thanks was tendered the past officers, for their services and after some discussion relative to complimentary tickets for press representatives and the telegraph operators, the meeting adjourned. The patron, matronesses and officers are as follows:

RAIN TODAY AT YOUNGSTOWN

Blount Picks Team to Play the Pittsburg Independents To-morrow.

Special to The Review.

Youngstown, April 25. —Heavy rain here to-day prevented Manager Blount from carrying out his plans for a genral bunting and base running practice this morning. This afternoon's game with Gerard was called off, and the squad will have indoor drill at the club house. Weather permitting, to-morrow the following will start against the Pittsburg Independents: Blount, centre; Fox, right; Swartz, left; Freeman or Flanagan, first; Byrne, third; King, second; Price, short; Miller and Ryberg, catchers; Schettler, Sterling and Creswell, pitchers.

A BLOT ON THE HOCKEY MAP

Hockey fans like other people have a right to put their own opinions into operation, but at the same time, an official of a hockey club or any other sporting organization, who makes a good job out of a bad beginning, for which he himself is not responsible, is entitled to recognition and in the case of most clubs, the members and fans in general are only too glad to see him continue in office.

* * *

But at the meeting of the Peterboro Hockey Club last night, when the representation was inclined to suggest suspicion, the efficient services as Mr. J. L. Picard, president and Mr. J. P. Bond, secretary were passed by and they were not re-elected. It was a dirty throw-down but it is not to be supposed that such action meets with the approval of the very large majority of the hockey fans.

* * *

These officers were the life of the Club last season. They worked hard and faithfully—and were successful. The man who holds a responsible position—one that demands all his time—and yet makes sacrifices such as it is necessary to make, in guiding hockey teams is entitled to the plaudits of the crowd just as much as the man who takes the ice and helps to win the game.

* * *

At the beginning of last season, the Club faced a formidable deficit, something in the neighborhood of $300. A plan of campaign was suggested and carried out with the result that sufficient subscriptions were secured to wipe out the debt and start with a clean sheet. The start was made and to the credit, mainly of the president and secretary, the season was brought to a close with a receip tfor every item of expenditure and a small balance in the bank.

* * *

Service such as this was almost totally ignored at the meeting last night. True a vote of thanks was tendered the retiring officers but it did not fit in very well with the proceedings.

It was plain to be seen that organized effort had been made to chop off the heads of the officers, and it was generally reported that Mr. Nelson was to be elected President. Those who engineered the scheme fought the club from behind cover last winter, and followed it up with organizing an association this spring. However, it remains for the fans to say whether or not the hockey club will be conducted in the interests of hockey or otherwise.

LACROSSE

Len Turnbull, Cliff "Grumpy" Spring and probably Tom Rennie, of the world-champion new Westminster lacrosse club, will depart shortly for Eastern Canada, where they will play with the Torontos of the Dominion Lacrosse association.

This announcement conveys an important fact to the Canadian lacrosse world—the passing of one of the greatest teams in the annals of the national pastime.

Ever since the Salmonbellies invaded the east years ago and plucked the Minto Cup from the Montreal Shamrocks, New Westminster, with the exception of one season, when Con Jones' imported stars won the coast championship, has been supreme in Lacrosse.

All efforts on the part of eastern clubs to take the silver bowl away from the Salmonbellies failed and for many seasons New Westminster has been the last word in lacrosse.

This wonderful machine, however, is crumpling. When the leaves begin to fall there will be new champions. Not only are Spring, Turnbull and Rennie making ready to play in the east, but other Salmonbelly stars have announced their intention of migrating to D. L. A. haunts.

Whether the coast league will be in existence is a matter of doubt, but even should New Westminster field a team, it is a foregone conclusion, with the loss of so many players, that the old ability to-successfully defend the world's title will be a negligible quantity.

New Westminster has occupied a unique position in lacrosse in that is has been able to develop its players. In its long years of omnipotence New Westminster has only at rare intervals been compelled to go outside for talent.

Moreover, the Salmonbellies introduced playing features that have helped revolutionize lacrosse throughout the land.

When will another city of such modest proportions equal New Westminster's record?

BASEBALLITIS

Detroit critics say the Tigers are no better than a year ago. Jennings' youngsters are not setting the world on fire.

The Cubs miss Evers and Bridwell. Bill Sweeney is comparatively slow, while Zimmerman is not a shortstop. Art Phelan probably will play short and Zim will go back to third base in the near future.

Ty Cobb has purchased a dozen bats, each two ounces lighter than those which he formerly used. He expects that the change will improve his batting. This should be pleasing news to the pitchers on the seven other teams in the American league.

Manager Bill Donovan, of the Providence Grays, has a collection of fourteen pitchers under his wing, and he says they look so good that he is puzzled as to who will be let out. He will keep seven when the season gets under way.

A piano and vocal recital by the pupils of Mrs. W. A. Greenslade, of the Conservatory of Music, assisted by Mr. Ted. Jones, Welsh tenor, of Toronto, delighted a large audience at the Conservatory last evening. W.C.T.U. MEETING.

Yesterday afternoon the Woman's Christian Temperance Union held their regular monthly meeting in their new room at the Y.W.C.A. The attendance was not very large, and it is felt that more of the Christian women of the city should become interested in this temperance work.

Some of the Ontario laws for the protection of women and children were discussed under the leadership of Mrs. Whalley. This proved very interesting and instructive as the laws are sealed books to most of women. It was decided to send for a sample of the manual that is used in the Loyal Templars Legion work, as the Union thinks that something should be done to interest children between the ages of 6 and 14 years in temperance.

JUDAS MACCABAEUS

As Compared With Other Famous Oratorios

Mr. W. Pole observes, "The Oratorio still preserves its popuarlity, being perhaps more in request at the present day than any other of Handel's, except The Messiah. This fact is not at first easy to explain, for though there is much fine music in Judas, it is on the whole less interesting to the musician than several other oratorios much inferior to it in general estimation. Saying nothing of the greatest of all, Isreal in Egypt, there is more predominance of what may be called great writing in Solomon, Samson, Saul, Deborah, Joshua, and perhaps others, than in Judas; and yet many of these are comparatively unknown to the oratorio loving public. The preference given to the present work is probably due to the remarkable breadth, simplicity, and clearness of its music. It was written avowedly for a popular occasion, and it is obvious, if we examine the style of the most favourite pieces, such as 'Pious orgies,' 'O Father,' 'Arm ye brave,' 'Disdainful of Danger,' 'Hail, Judea,' 'Sound an alarm,' 'See the conquering hero comes,' 'Sing unto God,' etc., that they are characterised by a simplicity of construction and breadth of effect which must have been purposely designed to render them easily appreciable to unlearned ears. The same characteristics of a broad, simple, telling style is observable also in The Messiah, and contributes no doubt, essentially to its fame; but in that oratorio it has resulted from a very different motive on the part of the composer. In writing The Messiah I believe that Handel exercised no deliberate intention to make the music popular, but simply gave himself up to the inspiration of his genius, prompted by the sublimity of the theme, and unfettered by any attempts at elaborate or learned writing; and hence in 'The Sacred Oratorio,' the simplicity of the music is combined with a dignity and grandeur peculiar to itself alone."

VESPER SERVICE.

NUDE STATUARY

Montreal Judge Declines to Put Ban on Venus.

MONTREAL, April 25. — The city cannot be deprived of statues of nude women, because certain police officials believe them to be offensive. This decision was arrived at by Judge Bazin when he found David Rubin, art dealer, not guilty of the charge of exhibiting indecent statuary by selling reproductions of Venus and other celebrated works.

The police argued that there was Biblical injunctions against a display of nudity. The defence called William Brymner, president of the Canadian Royal Academy, and Dr. J. D. Logan, art editor of The Herald and Telegraph, to testify to the artistic qualification of the reproductions, but the judge said their evidence was not required, as the fact that the originals were on exhibition in the great galleries of Europe was proof that they were not objectionable.

SOME KNOCKS AND BOOSTS

My Lady of the Snows as She is Represented by People Who Write Home — Criticism and Defence in English Press

The British are a peculiar people, and they manifest their peculiarities in many ways, but in none more than in writing to the newspapers. A letter sent to the Daily Sketch by a lady member of the Martin Harvey company, which so delighted local playgoers a short time ago, has been the cause of a series of "knocks" and "boosts" for Canada, which are in remarkable contrast. The touring actress wrote :

> Have been to many funny places. Don't ever be lured into settling out here. How you'd hate it. The people are beastly rough and inartistic for the most part, and the lower classes unspeakable.
>
> It has been awfully cold, 40 below zero at times, but it is all interesting. . . .
>
> Have been through some wonderful rugged country, but everywhere am struck by the utter loneliness and vastness of it all. All English people I have met are very homesick.

Life is Very Hard.

This was followed by a series of letters uncomplimentary to Canada and unpleasant for Canadians to read. Here are a few of them :

There are living today in Edmonton, Alberta, a mother and daughter of noble family, who a few years ago entertained largely in a beautiful country house in extensive gardens some dozen miles from London.

Both were brought up to lead the ordinary sheltered life of the English lady, and neither dreamed ten years ago that they would ever need to earn their living themselves.

But misfortune came upon them, and today the mother is working from morning till evening in small tea-shop, and the daughter ekes out their small fortune by giving music lessons to such pupils as she can find anxious to learn to play the piano.

For five years their life, for which both are in the highest degree unfitted, has been a struggle, cheerfully and philosophically borne, merely to live with the ordinary necessary comforts.

"Life is very hard," they write home sometimes, but they are too proud to complain.

"Verita" writes: "For four years I taught music in Alberta, and the first three years were the most miserable of my life. There is a great lack or cordiality and kindness, and in business dealings honesty and honor are conspicuous by their absence.

With few exceptions the people who employed me tried to get the better of me, and treated me as if I were their inferior.

The mother of one of my pupils said to me one day, quite seriously : "Old country people have to be very humble when they come out here, you know.

I am a Scotswoman, but I have lived more than half my life in England, but I deeply resent the treatment many English people received in Alberta.

Not Fit for Anyone.

"Ex-Canadian" of Sheffield, writes: Having lived in Canada four years I maintain that the climate in winter is not fit for anyone unless superhumanly strong.

In January and February the thermometer wavers between zero and 40 below, and when this is accompanied by a wind it is almost unendurable.

The snow comes in November and lasts with more or less severity until the beginning of May. One can easily understand how terrible a Canadian winter is.

Warns Emigrants.

F. J. Abbey takes himself seriously and says :

This is the emigration season in Canada. As an Englishman I think it my duty to warn all intending emigrants to think very seriously before taking this fatal step.

Unless a man (especially an Englishman) has his pockets well lined with dollars and has a steady job to go to he had far better stay at home, otherwise he will find to his sorrow all the golden promises are a myth.

I am speaking of a fourteen months' terrible experience, and I can vouch for thousands more like me. It is a common experience to see posted up, "No Englishman need apply."

"Virginia Dane" gives the reason for this advertisement when she says :

To one who has lived in Winnipeg for 20 years and knows the type of Englishmen who apply to Canadian employers for jobs, there is no mystery about the cute little saying, "No English need apply."

They are usually the good-for nothing, lazy, conceited, middle-class Englishmen who could never keep a job, even in England, and have been shipped out to Canada because their families are tired of keeping them at home doing nothing but grumble.

If they ever had the luck to get a job they could not keep it long, because they are always telling everyone, even the boss, how much better they do things "at home."

Failures Are Noisy.

R. B. Prickett writes: Having noticed recently several complaints laid against Canada in your paper, I, who have lived there for the past twelve years, would like to say a word or two in favor of what I consider to be the fairest and finest of our overseas dominions.

Letters such as that of March 4, in which the writer says: "Well-bred Englishwomen cannot compete with the broad-shouldered, strongly-constituted Canadian women," only admit the inferiority of our women, which I cannot believe, knowing as I do the many satisfied Englishwomen I have met.

It is a lamentable fact, but it is so, that the greatest noise come from the failures. Meantime, I see that this spring thousands are pouring into Alberta and Saskatchewan from Colorado and other Western States. Emigration is going on to such an extent that the U.S.A. authorities are even having meetings to stop it. Do these giant pioneers squeal about Canada's treatment of them? Never.

Are we to admit that we cannot compete with them in the building up of what is going to be the most wonderful country of this century? If so, no wonder English railway companies look abroad for men.

She Waxes Wroth.

"Canadian" waxes wroth with patriotic pride when she writes:

I do not for an instant think that when Mr. Sommerset Maughan wrote his play he meant Canada in any other sense than its Northwest, but when you interpret it, as you do, and say—or say that Maugham says—"Canada no place for English gentlewomen," you convey to your thousands of ignorant readers an exceedingly wrong impression (which your pictures of a log cabin help.)

All this is true of the newer parts of the Northwest, ubt Canada—its vast eastern provinces—can boast of a civilization that is well known to the travelled and cultured Englishman. No doubt you have heard of Montreal and Quebec, and do know its French history long before it became an English possession.

I am the daughter of an English gentlewoman, and my mother never found any hardships in living in either of those beautiful cities in Canada—quite the contrary!

Pray forgive my wrath, but please don't say Canada when you mean only the Northwest of Canada.

Canada's All Right.

"Canada is all right for the right girl," said the Hon. Mrs. N. Grosvenor, chairman of the executive committee of the Colonial Intelligence league.

"There is certainly another side to the question. Women who wish for a quiet life as in England, who are not prepared to work, should not go to Canada. They ought to be strong, plucky and energetic, if they wish to be happy there.

"Since 1910 we have sent 230 women to Canada, and 95 per cent. have informed us that hey are doing admirably. A great many are happily married, and they certainly don't live in 'shacks.'"

Among the letters received by Mrs. Grosvenor from educated women in Canada are these:

I have been appointed teacher at a commencing salary of $70 a month. . . . I do not think I shall ever feel satisfied with England after this life here.

I do not think I work any harder than in England. . . . I am getting on quite nicely.—From a music teacher.

Although I found the openings for stenographers so very good here, I saw such splendid opportunities for good bookkeepers and accountants that I gave up my stenography. I am now receiving a salary of $100 a month and my position is permanent.

Mrs. Grosvenor has received hundreds of such letters.

Country Too Young.

And this should be plain enough to the woman, educated or otherwise, who hopes too much of the Land of Promise:

The country is too young and too self-assertive to be gentle with failures of any sort. Tenderness for weaklings is only met with in an older civilization.

Given health, I have no fear of the future, because I am farily adaptable, eager to learn, and ready to turn my hand cheerfully to anything that turns up. But let no one come out thinking she is in for a soft job. There are too many failures already.

So that on the whole, the "boosts" are worth more than the "knocks," and should prevent the failures from going to the Dominion.

THE EMPRESS OF RUSSIA

The title "Empress" as applied to an Ocean liner was the happy notion of a Canadian Pacific official when the Pacific Service of that company was initiated between Canada and the Far East twenty-five years ago. In the case of the naming of the "Empress of Russia," particular reference was made to the most remarkable of all Empresses, Catherine the Great, whose activities for the benefit of her country are paralleled only by the "spacious days of Queen Elizabeth." In appreciation of this courtesy on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway, M. Malewsky, the Russian Ambassador at Tokio, has just presented a magnificent portrait of the great Catherine to be hung in the Lounge of the "Empress of Russia."

Such little friendly acts do more to promote friendly relations between two countries than anything else. Canada and Russia have many similarities, in their wheat growing areas of prarie land, in their mineral wealth, in their mountain ranges, in their great lakes, and in their gigantic waterways. Russia has had longer time in which to develop her resources—indeed it is doubtful whether the Empress Catherine ever heard of the country of Canada. But she recognizes the spirit and enterprise of her younger sister, and with imperial courtesy offers the glad hand.

The Merchant Prince of America

Started as Brick Maker—Works 11 Hours Each Day —Has Always Had a Broom in His Hand

If John Wanamaker had accomplished nothing more during his lifetime than to associate high ideals with a great mercantile enterprise and wield them inseparably together, he would have been building big. Having achieved this end while he still goes, vigorous and active, to his daily work, it is appropriate that he should be known as the "Merchant Prince of America," writes C. B. Macauley in the New York Sun.

Mr. Wanamaker's workday is not limited to the hours he spends in his suite of offices on the seventh floor of his Philapelphia establishment. He works from the time he leaves his bed early in the morning until he returns there at night for a well-earned rest. In motor cars, on trains, driving through tunnels, chugging across rivers on ferry-boats, John Wanamaker is constantly working.

Mr. Wanamaker has reduced big advertising to a science. Perhaps more than any one man in the United States John Wanamaker has succeeded in establishing the value of honest statements to the reading public. For the reason that he was a pioneer—that he blazed the way—Mr. Wanamaker has set the platform for great merchants throughout the country.

Writes Daily Editorial.

As the example of the importance Mr. Wanamaker attaches to this department of his business it is enough to say that the signed "editorial," appearing daily among the Wanamaker announcements, is almost invariably written before he sets his foot inside his office in the morning. These are written by his own hand, in strong, even, and condensed characters. Sometimes they are composed in his home, and usually on odds and ends of paper. Often he writes them en route to his store, and if he happens to have a red envelope about him he uses that as a background for the statement to be issued to the buying public on the next day.

The son of a brick maker, Wanamaker's first business experience was "turning bricks" and doing odd chores about the yard. He was the eldest of seven children, and early in his boyhood was obliged to give up going to school to earn his own way in life.

His First Wages.

His first job was in a publishing house in Philadelphia ; his wages $1.25 a week. Then he found a place in a clothing store at $1.50 a week. From there he went to Tower Hall, the famous old clothing house of Col. Bennett.

In 1861 this boy "John" had managed, by careful economy, to save $1,900. With his friend, Nathan Brown, under the firm name of Wanamaker & Brown, he then began business for himself. Their small store was at Sixth and Market streets, Philadelphia, on the site of what was once the home of the immortal George Washington. Wanamaker & Brown's first day's sales amounted to the stupendous sum of $24.67. The first year's sales aggregated $24,367.

His 11 Hour Day.

Today the business of Mr. Wanamaker must be summed up in the tens of millions. It is estimated that during his entire business career Mr. Wanamaker has distributed into the homes of the American public merchandise reaching half a billion dollars in value. Yet with all these activities behind him he is planning and working diligently every day from 8 o'clock in the morning until 7 in the evening, with all the buoyancy, enthusiasm, and strength of a young man with all his life before him.

Some of the rooms of his suite on the seventh floor of the Philadelphia building were transported in toto from the Wanamaker exhibit in the St. Louis Exposition. One of these, a music room, to which he is in the habit of retiring for extreme privacy, has a great stained glass window that reveals the legend around which Wagner constructed his immortal opera of Tristan and Isolde.

Occupying another part of the interesting seventh floor is a private art gallery. Here two colossal paintings epitomizing the life work of Mihaly Munkacsy, "Christ Before Pilate" and the "The Cruxifixion," are to be seen. No price has ever been placed upon these masterpieces. They are not for sale. Often the great merchant enters this impressive room alone, remaining there for half an hour or more. Who can say what inspiration he receives for his daily tasks from these solitary visits ?

As a further example of the poet residing in the merchant, the writer is privileged to present a number of epigrams and maxims culled from Mr. Wanamaker's daily advertisements :

A Broom in His Hand.

"Books go well with garlens."

"Somebody must have a vision and put years of strength and power back of it to shape things toward the ideal."

"I have always had a broom in my hand."

"A great ship or a great store must just go on and do great things and get bigger by good service and never too big to correct its faults."

"We are not the mere automata of business. We are men and women reaching out heart and hand to make life easier and to make the world happier."

"Business must rest upon the uncrumbling foundation of confidence in one another."

"Business to my mind is the means to exchange knowledge, labor, or skill for a living."

"Strength in all around and justice in every part."

Work While They Sleep.

"They call the Mexican Indians lazy," said a traveler, "but the Mexican Indian is the only man I've ever seen who works while he sleeps.

"In the interior of Mexico one balmy January afternoon I came upon an Indian hut romantically situated beside a stream. A hammock of native grass was swung across a narrow branch of the stream, an Indian slept in the hammock, and a string, tied to his foot, dangled in the water.

"As I approached, the string tightened with a jerk. The Indian awoke. He seized the string and hauled it in. There was a fish of three pounds' weight on the end of it.

"'Here you are, Mercedes!' shouted the Indian.

"His brown wife came and removed the fish. She rebaited the hook. Then the Indian, lying back in the hammock again resumed his sleep angling act.

"Work while you sleep—I've never seen it done except in Mexico among the supposedly lazy Indians."—Exchange.

Mexican Gunboat's Commander Accepts Invitation to Back Out

VERA CRUZ, April 24. — The Mexican gunboat Progreso, with more than five hundred soldiers in heavy marching order aboard, steamed to the harbor mouth last evening, but no further. The commander of the Progreso had not heard that the Americans were in possession of the city.

The Progreso was hailed by the flagship and boarded by Lieut. Byron McCandless, of Admiral Badger's staff, who informed the commander that he had the choice of remaining under the guns and searchlights of the flagship or putting out to sea. It was explained to him that the United States was not at war with Mexico, but for the present the presence of Mexican gunboats and soldiers at Vera Crux was not desirable. The interview was brief and ended with the Progreso putting to sea.

FOR COMPULSORY TRAINING.

Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton Converted by Australia's Cadets.

LONDON, April 24.—Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton, as a result of his inspection of the Australian forces, has become a convert to the principle of compulsory training. "I now think," he said yesterday, "that the system is good for a nation, whether from a moral or a physical aspect. I have inspected fifty thousand senior cadets and it has been beyond my previous imagination."

It will be recalled that Sir Ian in 1911 published the now famous book entitled "Compulsory Service," in which he defended the territorial force. Lord Kitchener, who drew up the Australian defence scheme, is also an advocate of national service.

TROUBLES OF THE GARBAGE COLLECTOR

Stones and Earth Are Put Out For Collection

"HAVE A HEART."

The Garbage Collectors' job is no sinecure, and citizens are asked to be reasonable in making use of their service. It has been noticed that in many cases, stones and earth have been put out for collection. This is obviously not garbage, and cannot be taken. Neither is it fair to expect the collectors to take an unreasonable quantity of refuse. One resident this morning had half a load for collection, evidently the result of winter accumulation. When it is remembered that the service is only costing the household half a cent a day, the quantity might be evened up a little more reasonably.

Spoiled the Water.

The late Dr. Meikle of Crieff Hydro is the hero of many stories, none better known than that of his desire to induce his guests to adopt his own "temperance" principles. He became aware of the practice indulged in by some patrons of the Hydro of concealing certain cordials in their bedrooms and of ordering shaving water at bedtime whereby to enjoy furtive jorums of toddy. Meeting a servant in a corridor one night, who was staggering under a heavy tray of hot water jugs. Dr. Meikle asked her where she was going with these things. She replied that she was taking shaving water to the gentlemen. "Come here," said the doctor, leading the way to a bathroom. The maid followed in fear and trembling. The doctor pulled out a pocketknife and, taking a hunk of soap, cut it into small pieces, which he dropped into the jugs, with the caustic remark: "Soap won't hurt it. It's shaving water, you know." The curses that ensued in several bedrooms are unknown, but it is assured that, if known, they would be unprintable.

Some men never miss the water until long after all the wells have failed.

For the Housekeeper

Kerosene will remove heavy grease from children's clothes, especially that from automobiles. Lay the greasy portion of the cloth in a basin and cover it with kerosene. Let it stand for an hour or so and then rub between the hands.

The following are a few simple rules in economy. Never buy a cheap material when you can get a better product. Pay cash; credit is costly. Buy non-perishable food products in quantities. Watch the household closely and eliminate all waste.

A very good way to dispose of slices of toast and scraps of bread is to brown all in the oven, then roll and sift, then when you bake cookies or sand tarts three to four cups of the crumbs are used in place of part of the flour called for in the recipe.

If you are anticipating planting a flower garden, remember the flower borders are most important, as they are so decorative. Eight plants against a background are more effective than 5 in an open yard. Borders against fences are particularly pretty.

It is much more economical to market each day if you are near the markets and plan your marketing according to the market conditions. There are slight rises and falls from day to day, and if carefully watched by the careful housewife, a few pennies may be saved.

A very good way to clean your velvet suit is to brush it thoroughly, then hang it on a coat hanger and suspend it from the bathroom ceiling taking care that it is free from all objects. Turn the hot water on in the bath tub and close the room tight for about half an hour. This process will raise the nap as efficiently as a professional cleaner would do it.

A delicious 15-minute pudding is made by sifting together on cupful of flour and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder with a little salt. Add enough rich milk to make a drop batter. Steam with cherries or any fruit can be used with fine results.

It is economy to save all the trimming from olr gowns, i fit is good, even if you do not see any immediate use for it. A smart touch can often be given o simple gown by a bit of lace embroidery.

The marketing should be sorted and put away as soon as it comes into the house. If it is allowed to wait until what seems a convenient time to attend to it, the meat and vegetables may lose some of their freshness.

It's a pleasure to bake and roast with an oven that's always bright and clean. See

THE CARE OF APPLE TREES

An Authority Gives Valuable Information as to Pruning and Spraying

By H. B. CEROW, Department of Agriculture, Chatham, Ont.

PART I—PRUNING

Every apple orchard is in a condition all its own, and the aim of the writer is to set forth measures, in as few words as possible, that will be applicable to the various states the trees are in, at present, throughout fruit orchards.

The best time to prune is in the spring, preferably before growth starts, but in case it is impossible at this time it may be done immediately after they leaf out. In this section of Ontario late winter pruning could be practised, where conditions were such that all the pruning could not be done in the spring. A moderate summer pruning of branches will not hurt, as these heal up quickly. Summer pruning induces the formation of fruit buds and spring pruning tends to increase growth.

Carefully look over the tree and try and picture it as it should look when finished. This may not be easy at first but it will come through practise. Commence pruning by removing low branches that interfere with cultivation and cut out all dead wood. Next, cut out the undesirable crowding branches. Very often the central branch of three small branches growing in the same direction, if removed, will leave the other two plenty of room. Cut out all cross branches and one heading in to centre of tree, but be careful not to remove too much from the centre, or sun scald may result. No hard and fast rules can be given for pruning, unlike spraying, but the idea is to never leave a branch or twig that can rub or touch another branch when loaded with fruit. Heading back is the next step. An apple tree should not be more than twenty-five feet high and if less all the better. If a tree need cutting back, any five feet, cut back three feet the first year and the balance the next year. In this way a shock to the tree will be avoided. It is a safe rule never to cut back more than three feet in any one year, and always cut back to a lateral. The next operation can generally be accomplished from the ground, by using the long-handled pruner to do the lighter thinning and heading in outer branches. Where the branches of neighboring trees have grown together, these should be pruned back, leaving a space of at least three feet.

Where pruning up in an orchard has been practised, instead of pruning down, the bareness of the lower branches can be overcome by cutting back the desirable sprouts or suckers. Cut back to a length of about six inches, leaving the last bulb pointing in the direction the branch is desired to grow. These sprouts, if cared for, will bear fruit in three years.

When removing branches always cut as close to the bearing branch as possible, leaving no sign of a stub. The wound is then in line with the cambium layer and heals quickly. Most of the holes and hollow trunks have been caused by unhealed shoulders.

The trunk and larger branches of every tree in the orchard should be thoroughly scraped before spraying. An old hoe with the centre slightly filed out, makes an excellent scraper. Do not scrape deep enough to expose the live yellow bark.

Paint all saw cuts, an inch and over in diameter, with a heavy application of lead paint.

Occasionally the boots of the pruner will break the bark, and a break in the bark, no matter how caused, is where the spores of black rot canker generally obtain a start. Where this disease has gained a foothold, if not cut out or treated, the tree is likely to die. If the disease has gone completely round the branch, cut it off about one foot below the injured part. Burn all black rot canker at once. When only a small portion of the branch is affected, it can be treated and brought back to a healthy condition. With a sharp knife cut off all the discolored bark and anything that looks unhealthy, then disinfect with corrosive sublimate at a strength of one tablet to one pint of water. Apply the solution with a stiff brush, rubbing well into the bark. When the wound is dry, paint with two coats of white lead and raw oil paint. The paint is only for protection until the bark grows over the wound. Corrosive sublimate is on sale at all drug stores. It is a deadly poison to man or beast if taken internally. It will also corrode iron or metal, so use in a glass or wooden vessel and be sure to wash receptacle very thoroughly when through using it.

When pruning remember the greater the haste the larger the waste. Do not cut out large branches if it can be avoided, for these have taken many years to grow. It should take longer to decide what to cut than to do the cutting. Thorough pruning of large neglected trees is slow work; sometimes it takes eight hours to prune a tree of this nature thoroughly. It is to be hoped there will be no apple-trees of this nature in any county in 1916.

PART II—SPRAYING

The best results are obtained where spraying is done three times a year, and in exceptional cases a fourth application is given.

The most common disease and insect pests of the apple orchard are, scab or black rot, canker, leaf spot, codling moth and other biting insects, San Jose and oyster shell scales, blister mite and aphids. The San Jose and oyster shell scales are more harmful, particularly the San Jose scale, to the life of the orchard than the rest combined. Therefore, it is the latter scale we are mostly interested in, and fortunately the one treatment will do for both. When the scale is very bad it sometimes pays to spray again in the fall. It is the first application, or the strong solution that kills the scale, and on account of its strength the best results are obtained when it is applied in the spring before the buds burst. Do not spray before or after a rain, or on a cold day. If possible start soon enough to finish by the time the buds are bursting. If not through then and the scale is abundant, and a spray mixture of lime-sulphur with a specific gravity of 1.035 is being used, keep on spraying until all the trees are done. Often no damage to leaves will follow, in any case the spray will do less injury than the scale. In most cases, it would be wise to stop spraying when the buds begin to burst and continue spraying in the fall, after the leaves have fallen; this method is only to be used where the scale is very bad. Always spray with the wind, and by adopting this method about two-thirds of the tree can be sprayed from one side. Do not be stingy with the material. Cover every inch from the base of the trunk to the topmost twig. Remember a single female missed means one million by the end of the season. It may take eight gallons or more to do a large tree thoroughly.

Every sprayer should have in his possession an hydrometer; the cost is very little, and it will pay for itself the first spraying day where concentrated lime-sulphur is used. If the spraying mixture is made from concentrated lime-sulphur by measuring or guess work, it will likely be too weak or too strong, and in either case there will be a loss.

There are four separate ways of obtaining the spring strength or dormant spray, by using concentrated lime-sulphur, home-made concentrated lime-sulphur, home boiled lime-sulphur and soluble sulphur.

The concentrated lime-sulphur is given the preference in fruit districts to-day, as it can be quickly diluted, is a valuable fungicide and can be used with safety for the second and third sprayings when diluted to the proper strengths. Concentrated lime-sulphur comes in barrels of different strengths. When determining the strength of the concentrated liquid see that all sediment has settled to the bottom of the barrel and then gently drop in the hydrometer. Note the figure to which it sinks. Suppose it reads 1.245 divide the three figures on the right hand side by 35 (1.035 specific gravity, spring strength) which in this case will go seven times. This means that each gallon of the strength of 1.245 specific gravity must be diluted with water to make seven gallons of spray mixture, or one gallon of concentrated lime-sulphur to six gallons of water. Every barrel of concentrated lime-sulphur should be tested and the strength as shown by the hydrometer should be divided by 35 and followed as in the foregoing, for the dormant spray.

Home made concentrated lime-sulphur may be used as a substitute for commercial lime-sulphur, but is only about two-thirds as strong as a rule. This is cheaper than the concentrated lime-sulphur and will give good results if carefully made. This material can be made in the fall or winter, when work is slack, but it would not be advisable to make up any to be used this year, on account of the lateness of the season.

FORMULA

Sulphur (a fine grade)...100 lbs.
Fresh stone lime, high in percentage of calcium.. 50 lbs.
Water...........40 or 50 gallons

Put about ten gallons of water in the boiling outfit, start fire, add sulphur, stir to make paste and break lumps, then add remaining water, and when boiling put in lime. Stir frequently while slaking and till all the sulphur and lime are dissolved. Add water from time to time and keep up to forty or fifty gallon mark. Boil one hour then strain through a screen of thirty meshes to one inch into storage barrels. Make enough at once for season's work. Cover well to keep out air, or pour oil of any kind over surface to depth of one-eighth of an inch for same purpose. Test with hydrometer and divide by thirty-five as outlined in foregoing for dormant spray.

Another preparation is the home boiled lime-sulphur wash; this mixture can only be used on dormant wood.

FORMULA:

Fresh stone lime..........20 lbs.
Sulphur (flour or flowers).15 lbs.
Water..........40 gallons

Slake twenty pounds of lime in about fifteen gallons of boiling water in a kettle or other boiling outfit. While slaking add the fifteen pounds of sulphur made into a paste by the addition of a little water. Boil vigorously, with stirring, for one hour. Dilute to forty gallons with cold or hot water. Strain and apply at once.

Soluble sulphur is a new preparation on the market and is used at a strength of ten pounds to forty gallons of water. It gives good results when used as a dormant spray or before the buds burst.

The foregoing gives the four methods of controlling scale, and are to be used as shown on dormant wood. The directions, for diluting concentrated lime-sulphur and home made concentrated lime-sulphur, have been given for use with the hydrometer, but sometimes measuring alone is practised. When wishing to adopt this system for diluting concentrated lime-sulphur, if the trees are badly infested with scale use one gallon to six gallons of water, if the trees are not in such a serious state use one to seven and if only slightly infested use one to eight. Home made concentrated lime-sulphur should never be measured in this way. This is for dormant spray only. It is many times cheaper, and surer, to use hydrometer than to measure material off hand.

To control scab, leaf spot, curculio and various leaf-eating caterpillars use concentrated lime-sulphur or home made concentrated lime-sulphur at a strength of 1.009 specific gravity, just before the blossoms open and to each barrel of diluted spray mixture add two to two and one-half pounds of arsenate of lead. Use the hydrometer as before, only, divide by nine instead of thirty-five to ascertain how much of the strong liquid to use. If it figures out twenty-eight, it means one gallon to twenty-seven gallons of water. If it is desired to measure without using hydrometer, one and one-half gallons of concentrated lime-sulphur and from two to two and one-half pounds of arsenate of lead should be used in a forty gallon barrel of water.

To control scab, leaf spot curculio and codling moth use concentrated lime-sulphur or home made concentrated lime-sulphur at a strength of 1.008 specific gravity, immediately after the blossoms have all, or nearly all, fallen, and before the calyces close and to each barrel of diluted spray mixture add from two to two and one-half pounds of arsenate of lead. Instead of dividing by thirty-five or nine, divide by eight, etc. If you wish to resort to measuring only, use one and one-half gallons of concentrated lime-sulphur plus the arsenate of lead. If it is desired to give a fourth application apply the third spraying mixture from two to three weeks after the third application.

The following is a quick method of determining how much lime-sulphur (either concentrated or home made concentrated) to put into a forty gallon barrel and then fill the barrel with water. For the dormant spray test lime-sulphur with hydrometer, note the reading on instrument and divide the three figures to the right by thirty-five; then divide the quotient or answer into forty (size of barrel) and the result will be the number of gallons to pour into an empty forty gallon barrel, and then add sufficient water to fill barrel and in this way the contents of the barrel will be well mixed. For the second application divide reading by nine and divide the answer into forty and the result will be the number of gallons of lime-sulphur to be poured into empty barrel, plus arsenate of lead and water. For the third spraying divide reading by eight, etc. The reading means the figures to the right of number one on hydrometer.

Two forms of sprayers are on the market—the barrel outfit and the power machine. The spraying in the average orchard in this county can be accomplished with the former. The number of trees a barrel pump will handle will depend on the kind of material used, pruning and age of trees, number of men employed and spraying experience. The idea is to waste as little time as possible filling the barrel and to keep two lines of hose constantly going and keep the pressure high all the time. It takes from four to six gallons to spray a tree as a rule. The facility of power the machine is due to high pressure and saving of time in filling large tank.

Spraying Motto: Thoroughness

Spraying cannot be done economically without using an hydrometer.

Do not confuse the concentrated lime-sulphur with the home made concentrated lime-sulphur; the former is a commercial preparation put up in barrels ready to be diluted.

Test every barrel of concentrated and home made concentrated lime sulphur before diluting.

Before making the home made concentrated lime-sulphur next winter read Bulletin 198. Lime-sulphur Wash.

One must not stop at pruning and spraying, continue the good work by shallow ploughing at first, judicious use of fertilizers, frequent cultivation or sowing clover and turning under, thinning the fruit if necessary, careful picking and proper packing—the box pack 10x11x20 inch or bushel box—and then the orchard should, other conditions being equal, become the best paying proposition on the farm.

How Winter Is Welcomed by New York Youngsters.

New York city recently experienced the heaviest snowfall known for many years, and it caused great inconvenience to business. For many days the streets were clogged with great heaps of snow that made life miserable for everybody employed in transporting merchandise. Not so the young folks. They enjoyed the snowfall to the utmost. Little thought had they for the troubles of the older people. Snow was made for a purpose, and sleds were made to slide on snow. So they had a great time.

Central park made the finest winter picture of the year. The ponds were so deeply snow covered as to make skating impossible, as park employees were kept busy at the more important work of clearing the roadways, but thousands of children thronged the park for the coasting. The picture shows one of them making the most of winter in Central park.

The Rude Voice.

"Mother," cried little Joe, running into the house with a flushed, angry face, "there's such a rude boy down in the garden. He's hiding somewhere and I can't see him, but he keeps mocking me."

"What does he say, Joe?" asked his mother, smiling.

"He says whatever I say. Nurse said I was to go for a walk with her and baby. I said, 'I shan't,' and some one behind the trees said 'I shan't.' I shouted out that he was a horrid boy and that I hated him, and he called back 'Horrid boy; I hate you!' Isn't he a rude boy, mother?"

"Yes, I think he is a very rude boy," agreed Mrs. Tinner. "You must take care what you say to him, Joe, if he is going to repeat your words in that way. Let him hear nothing except what is kind and polite."

"I'll go and look again, and if I find him I shall fight him, mother," announced the incorrigible Joe as he rushed out of the room.

Mrs. Tinner did not look greatly alarmed at this terrible threat. The fact was, she did not fear any very disastrous consequences from her little boy's fight with his provoking enemy, whose name, as you will have already guessed, was "Echo."

The Smallest Beast of Prey.

The smallest carnivorous animal in the world is an American weasel, which is numerous in northwestern Canada and Alaska and is occasionally seen about the great lakes.

Although the animal turns white in the north in winter, it does not show the black tipped tail which characterizes an ermine pelt, and so it is not sought by trappers and fur traders. This fact, with its small size and secretive life, has made its habits very little known. It feeds on insects (which it finds alive in summer and in winter digs out of rotten logs), on small birds, etc., but lives mainly on mice. These it can follow into their narrowest holes and runways, for it is scarcely larger than a field mouse itself, or, striking the trail of one, it will trace all its wanderings, and as soon as it catches sight of its prey it will spring after it with amazing rapidity.—American Woman.

Riddles.

Why is a milkman like a mill horse? Because he goes his rounds.

When is the river Thames good for the eyes? When it is eye water (high water).

Why should a man always wear a watch when he travels in a desert? Because every watch has a spring in it.

Why is a dressmaker not likely to lose her hooks? Because she has an eye to each of them.

Why do railway men always speak of a locomotive as "she?" Because it suggests tender thoughts and draws men after it.

When the tablecloth wears out on the edges, cut out the centre in a square, hem it, and you have a lunch cloth. The remainder of the good portion cut into squares and you have every-day napkins.

Left Her Excuse Home.

One of the chorus girls came upon the stage after the rehearsal had been under way more than a half hour. The manager said, with all the tenderness of a buzz saw:

"Do you know that you are very late? What excuse have you got to offer?"

"I didn't bring it with me," she answered.

"Bring what?" thundered the manager.

"My excuse. I left it at home. You see, I got married yesterday, but I didn't think you wanted to see my husband."

The manager tried to suppress a grin. "We'll proceed with the rehearsal. Your excuse is sufficient."—Exchange.

ENORMOUS DEMAND FOR "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

1,152,000 Boxes Sold Last Year.

Six of These Fruit Liver Tablets for Every Man, Woman and Child in the Dominion.

In seven short years, "Fruit-a-tives" has become the most famous and the most widely used medicine in Canada that has ever been introduced to the people of the Dominion. Even those who take "Fruit-a-tives" regularly and recommend these famous fruit juice tablets to their friends, probably have no idea of the enormous number of "Fruit-a-tives" that are being used by those wishing to regain their health.

Last year, over eight thousand gross boxes of "Fruit-a-tives" were sold. As there are one hundred, forty four boxes in a gross, this means that over one million one hundred thousand boxes were sold in 1912. And this year, this number will be still further increased.

This means a box of "Fruit-a-tives" for every six persons in Canada, or six tablets for every man, woman and child in the country.

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold in every section of the Dominion. On the rugged Atlantic coast, throughout the Maritime Provinces, among the French in Quebec and the English in Ontario, all over the great Prairie Provinces and on the shores of the Pacific, "Fruit-a-tives" is the best selling medicine in stock.

This is true because "Fruit-a-tives" gives results. For chronic Constipation, Indigestion and Stomach Trouble—for bad Blood, Skin Eruptions and Eczema—for Rheumatism, Sciatica and Lumbago—for Kidney, Bladder and Urinary Troubles—"Fruit-a-tives" cures when nothing else will.

In the head office in Ottawa, are hundreds of letters and photographs from grateful men and women who have been cured of sickness and suffering by "Fruit-a-tives." Many of these letters and photographs have been published by permission and have induced other sufferers to try "Fruit-a-tives." This is one of the factors in the demand for "Fruit-a-tives," which is now sold in every city, town, hamlet and cross roads store.

THE "MUST" OF IMMORTALITY

Text: "For this mortal must put on immortality."—1 Cor. xv:53.

I am not surprised that Mrs. Robert G. Ingersoll was reported to have gone to a spiritualistic medium to try to establish communication with her departed husband. But is it not a striking example of the biting irony which the changes of the years bring with them, that this woman, the widow of the man who held tenaciously that we get no echo from the snowclad mountain peaks of eternity, should listen, after these intervening years, for the echo of that same man's voice? And no wonder she wanted to hear that husband's voice again, with its mellow cadences and its prose poetry. I dare say, that his was the most eloquent voice ever heard on this continent. But what that voice said was cold; oh, so cold. His oration at his brother's grave was a beautifully carved block of ice, decorated with frozen flowers. "Life is but a narrow vale between the cold and barren peaks of two eternities," said he, "and we strive in vain to look beyond the heights."

Is that a picture of life? Are we not rather on a wide, wide sea, looking for a shore line? We send out a dove, hoping for an encouraging leaf; and we drop an anchor, hoping to scrape the ground; and we shout across the waters, hoping to get back an answer. And the mariners of all manner of crafts ahead of us testify that their dove brought back the green leaf, and that their anchor sent up the soundings of shallow water, and that the watch of perfect vision has cried, "Land!" and the ships pass from our view with an eternal hope that also possesses us as we follow them. And as the evidences of land ahead multiply, we cry with Paul, "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."

That is the only solace for a dying man. Wherewithal shall I comfort a man who knows that he is dying? For the time comes when the sternest will yields, and the strongest heart says, "It is all ended, this struggle for continued breathing. I am undone. I am tired fighting disease. My armor is cloven; my sword is broken!"

I had a friend, an old man of 70, a mighty orator and an ecclesiastical statesman, but that man had to die. He had been fighting disease for 40 years; he was all WILL. By the dynamo of that will he had gone through innumerable hardships. He fought his way through school against tremendous odds, gaining scholarships and medals. He had developed himself into a great preacher, drilled his voice, perfected his memory, mastered the arts of persuasive rhetoric. At 40, the doctors told him he had a serious case of diabetes, so he started to fight death, and he fought cheerily, with his will for his weapon. He lived on the plainest diet, refused the goodies which were pressed upon him wherever he was entertained, exercised, walked, rode horseback, answered the enquiries of his solicitous friends by laughingly declaring that he felt as blithe as any man could feel who was running round the block with the undertaker after him. He often said he was too busy to die. He wrote out new sermons and lectures and committed chapters to memory, at an age when average preachers would give up the chase, especially if they had a life office with a comfortable salary such as he had. But the inevitable hour arrived at last. Even so, when his barque was pushed into the impenetrable mists beyond us all, he had a smile on his lips and a cheer in his heart that, to us who knew him, seemed imperishable. When, a few hours before his death a physician prepared for an operation, which had to be made without the use of an anæsthetic, and produced the surgical instruments to the frightened gaze of his heart-rent wife, he smiled and said, "Cheer up, my dear, I'd rather have these fellows at me than an undertaker." But that iron will gave out that night, and he feebly murmured, "I'm tired now; I think I must rest upon the Everlasting Arms awhile."

Tell me, now, how shall I comfort such a hero when his will yields at last?

You do it, infidel. Step up to the couch and say something. Speak up, for he is so busy giving attention to the effort of breathing that he hardly has time to hear you. What is it that you say? "Soon it will be all over, and you will sleep the sleep that knows no waking." I say, infidel, that if that dying man still has his senses with him, he will say, "I refuse to sleep forever. I am tired, true; but to sleep forever has no comfort to me. I want to wake and have another chance to work and laugh and love."

You try it, materialistic philosopher, proud to be called a disciple of Mr. Huxley. What is that you say? "Be of good cheer, sir. You will soon die, it is true, but you will, after all, live on. You will make first-class carbon and ammonia, great food for plants. The ox will eat the plants. Your progeny will eat the ox, and you will live in your grandsons." Is that your comfort? That man of iron will, if he has any particle of energy left, mock you with his dying breath.

You try it, pantheistic new-thoughtist, you who have imported a bit of Hindoo philosophy, re-labeling it with a made-in-America name. What is it that you say? "You will soon be a part of Good. You will lose your identity it is true, and you shall never meet your friends again. But you will be a part, a little drop in the ocean, of the Infinite." But if that man of achievements has any breath left, he will use it to protest, "I want to stay together. I would rather be one man than be one-trillionth part of any God."

Let Paul try. He who lived and worked so soon after the Master's earthly life that he could still hear the echoes of the earthquake of the first Easter morning, should be fitted to speak comfort to a dying man. He who knew the views of those who were taught by Christ in person, he who heard the testimony of those who saw the Risen Lord, cries: "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump—for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this mortal MUST put on immortality." That is the only comfort for a dying man.

For Paul's "must" is the inevitable sequence to his reasoning. The "must" follows necessary hypotheses. When the evidence is all in—the universal belief in immorality, the God given yearning of every soul that ever came to maturity, the intuition of our own hearts, the promises of Him whose lips never moved to tell a lie—the "must" follows as a necessary verdict of the jury of human intelligence. We use the word as does the geometrician when he uses the process of exclusion. When it cannot be otherwise by any conceivable stretch of the imagination then it MUST be so. "If it were not so, I would have told you."

The "must" alone satisfies our idea of fairness. Somewhere we received the theory of immortality. Search where you may, you will find no race or tribe, without the dream of immortality. All nations have looked ahead to a future state. The Great Father must have had something to do with this human expectancy. Surely it would not be fair to cheat us. Alfred Tennyson voices our universal argument:

> "Thou wilt not leave us in the dust;
> Thou madest man, he knows not why;
> He thinks he was not made to die,
> And Thou hast made him; Thou art
> just."

And the "must" lies in our own consciousness. We know that for God to wipe us out just as we are beginning to work and learn and love would be a waste. That is not conceit. That is a divine self-consciousness. We know we have not finished our task. We have hardly had time to learn to do one thing well. Does a man come to you looking for work, and do you ask what he can do, and does he say he can work at any one of seven trades? You are justified in doubting that assertion. You say, how can a man learn seven trades in one short life-time? He does not learn his trade like the beaver learns his trade, of dam-building, or the duckling acquires its habit of swimming. But then the beaver does not build the dam one whit better than his ancestors did theirs a thousand years ago. And the duck will not learn to swim any better than she did last year in spite of all the lessons of a master of aquatics. Man is the only learning animal, and he has barely time to learn to do one thing well. That throat specialist has just returned from Vienna. What was he doing there? Oh, learning one more way to operate on the throat or nose. That lawyer with white hair declares that he has just learned how to draw up complaints. That old literary man has just read a few of the books in the world's library. That traveler has just touched a few of earth's shores. That mathematician has just solved a few problems. To do more, this mortal must put on immortality.

If this life be all, it is surely a waste. Victor Hugo said: "For half a century I have been writing my thoughts in prose and verse, history, philosophy, drama, romance, tradition, satire, ode, song. But I feel that I have not said a thousandth part of what is in me. When I go down to the grave I shall have finished my day's work. Another day will begin next morning!"

What intellectual possibilities hath God set within us! Just when a man knows how to do a thing fairly well, he hobbles and creeps and staggers. Benjamin Franklin wrote this as his own epitaph: "The body of Benjamin Franklin, printer (like the cover of an old book, its contents torn out, and stripped of its lettering and gilding), lies here, food for worms; yet the work itself shall not be lost, for it will (as he believes) appear once more in a new and more beautiful edition, corrected and amended by the author."

Sir Isaac Newton crowded a marvellous list of achievements into a short life. His very toys were mechanical ingenuities. Before twenty-three he had given the world the Pinomial Theorum and had enriched mathematical science in many ways. But even he testified: "I do not know what I may appear to the world, but to myself I seem to have been only like a boy playing on the seashore and diverting myself in now and then finding a smoother pebble or a prettier shell than ordinary, while the great ocean of truth lay undiscovered before me."

How many friends have you? Not the distant acquaintances to whom you say, "Good morning," but real chums. Not more than you can count on your fingers, I'll vouch. Why haven't you more? Because you cannot contain them, I submit. You are too small. Your mind, your heart, your memory, cannot hold over-many.

You are finite. The public man who touches humanity at so many points knows the difficulty. I went to shake hands with Mr. Bryan when he was in Toronto. Because I once lived in Omaha, I thought it would be meeting on common ground to say as I passed him, "I'm from Omaha." And as he grasped my hand, and said, "Hello, old man; I'm glad to see you again, old fellow." There was no time to do it, but I might have said, "Say, old man, you cannot be very glad, for you never saw me before this minute, old man. I've sat under the spell of your bewitching oratory old man, but never until now have I clasped hands with you, old man." Does that mean that he was playing the hypocrite? Not at all. He has too many friends, that's all. He can't get them all in his mind. His heart is big, his mind is spacious, but he is not infinite, so he has to grope for recollections of faces and events. We are still in the body, and must needs concentrate our love on one wife, a few bairnies, a score of tried and true friends and a host of acquaintances. We need greater intellects, greater hearts, more time. As our hair whitens we are just beginning to love. Ask that husband, or that wife, bidding farewell to the life partner of fifty years, and the answer will come, "We were just beginning to really understand and appreciate one another. We shall need eternity to continue our love."

To rightly work, or learn, or love, THIS MORTAL MUST PUT ON IMMORTALITY.

JAPAN IN TROUBLE.

Famine Conditions Prevail In Cherry Blossom Empire.

Part of Japan is now within the grip of the worst famine that has occurred in one hundred years. Ten million people are in the famine districts, and a conservative estimate places the number that is now in need of food to keep from starving to death at 200,000. Fortunately the Government is alive to the situation and has set aside $6,000,000, which will be spent upon necessary relief work, and in public improvements that will enable the starving farmers and fishermen to buy food. Less than half this sum, however, is to be spent this year, and even if it were all spent it would not end the famine. In fact, it would take about $700,000 a day to buy meals for all the persons in the famine area, but, of course, all are not equally suffering. There are rich and poor in every district. The Japanese press has been calling attention to the conditions and is raising famine funds that will supplement the Government's loan.

The primary cause of the famine is the failure of the rice crop in the northern part of the empire, and this was due to the very cold summer. The stalks grew as usual, indeed, much better than usual, but without any heads, and were fit only for fodder. Since rice constitutes about three-quarters of the food of the average Japanese, the failure of this crop was quite as serious as the failure of the wheat and oat crops with us.

Apart from rice the Japanese eat more fish that anything else. The fish catch, too, was a failure, and for the same reason that the rice failed. Cold weather, produced by strange cold currents in the ocean, kept the fish far from shore, and beyond the reach of the fishermen, who were equipped for the most part for fishing near the shore line. In other years when the rice crop failed, it had happened that the fish catch was abundant, and when fish were scarce, rice was plentiful. Not for one hundred years has there been such a tragic coincidence of failure.

Long before the general public in Tokio knew that there was a serious condition in the north, scores of men in that city who deal in human flesh and blood were hurrying to the scene to buy young girls for brothel and factory in a falling market. Their parents being too poor to support them were, in thousands of cases, willing enough to sell their children to these white slavers. Some were so glad to get rid of their daughters that, they accepted ridiculous prices, and occasionally one was picked up for nothing, when emaciation had blurred her beauty and it seemed probable that she would hardly live to reach the capital. These brokers, at least, have made a good thing out of the famine. Correspondents in the affected districts give descriptions of sufferings that are heartrending. People are found living on grass seeds that would hardly keep a horse alive; eating animal entrails and decomposed food that a dog would not touch.

In one house an unhealthy fish head rescued from the refuse of a fish shop was found stewing in a pot of water to which had been added some grass seed. This was expected to provide three meals for the family. Two doctors examined one little boy who was suffering severely and from his stomach, they removed a great wad of straw that he had swallowed to appease his hunger. In the Toboku and Hokkaido districts, where the famine is most acute, the children no longer go to school. For the most part they are too weak to walk. The teachers, too, are starving by the hundred, the people having been too poor to pay their salaries, which amount to about $7.50 per month.

Not an Ardent Lover.

Dr. Brandes, the Danish man of letters, tells a curious story of himself. At the very moment he had appointed to keep a tryst with his sweetheart he was deep in Hegel. "With a passionate desire to reach a comprehension of the truth I grappled with the 'system,' began with the encyclopedia, read the three volumes of 'Aesthetics,' the 'Phenomenology of the Mind,' then the 'Philosophy of Law' again and finally the 'Logic,' the 'Natural Philosophy' and the 'Philosophy of the Mind' in a veritable intoxication of comprehension and delight." The lamentable sequel was that he forgot all about the yonng girl to whom he had to say good-bye—time, place and promise.

Advantage of Being Dull.

There is a quality in certain people which is above all advice, exposure or correction. Only let a man or woman have dullness sufficient and they need bow to no extant authority. A dullard recognizes no betters; a dullard can't see that he is in the wrong; a dullard has no scruples of conscience, no doubts of pleasing or succeeding or doing right, no qualms for other people's feelings, no respect but for the fool himself. How can you make a fool perceive that he is a fool? Such a person can no more see his own ears. And the great quality of dullness is to be unalterably contented with itself.—Thackeray.

Sympathetic.

"Are you doing anything to relieve the sufferings of your fellow man?" asked the philanthropist.

"I am," replied Mr. Dustin Stax. "I refuse to make large donations, thereby preventing pangs of jealousy on the part of institutions that didn't get any."—Washington Star.

A hungry man never objects to making the thirteenth at the table.

CANADIAN IS HONORED

This powerful organization is composed of the leading lumber dealers of the continent and is a mighty influential organization. The new president is one of the best-known citizens of the Canadian capital, progressive and public-spirited.

He was born in Ottawa in 1866 and first started in the lumber business with the W. C. Edwards Lumber Co., of Rockland, and got his lumber experience working in every branch of their business. He next took charge of the lumber mills of the Canada Lumber Co. at Mississippi and shortly afterwards was made secretary-treasurer of that company.

NO MORE PAIN

"KEPHALDOL" CAN NOW BE HAD AT YOUR DRUGGIST'S.

Herr Doctor Stohr, the famous Austrian nerve specialist, first used KEPHALDOL prescription in his private practice and hospital work in Vienna. Other noted physicians and surgeons adopted this formula in treating of severe cases of Rheumatism, Sciatica and Lumbago, La Grippe and Colds, Neuralgia and Headaches. The wonderful properties of KEPHALDOL became known in England, where a company was formed to prepare KEPHALDOL Tablets and supply them to the public at a nominal price.

Canadians, after visiting the Old Country, heard of KEPHALDOL—tried them—and brought them back to Canada. So great became the demand for KEPHALDOL here, that a Canadian office was established to distribute these tablets on this side of the ocean.

So what one famous physician did in Austria, has resulted in thousands and thousands of sufferers being cured of pain.

KEPHALDOL is absolutely safe, having no ill-effects on the heart or other vital organs.

If your druggist should not have KEPHALDOL, a 50c. tube of tablets may be obtained by remitting the price to Kephaldol Limited, 31 Latour Street, Montreal.

SPECIAL CORNER FOR AFTER DINNER READERS

A STRANGE MEETING

It Proved an Eventful One

By ARNOLD TREAT

Though we are apt not to realize it, we are very much hedged about. Those of us who are pleasantly situated are like one in a garden from which there is no egress unless he chooses to step into a jungle to be devoured by wild beasts. Women are more subject to this confinement than men, because they have not the same physical strength.

I will illustrate by a story—a story in which I bore a subordinate part.

I was in my younger days a pedestrian globe trotter. I presume that if the bicycle had then been invented I should have traveled on a wheel or later on a motor, but at that time no one had heard of either of these modes of conveyance, and, being fond of walking, I walked. At the time of my story I was making a pedestrian tour in Germany. The country is thickly settled, and there are many towns quite near together; consequently I found my method of progression easy, pleasant and healthful.

I started one morning from Dresden on the road to Leipzig and was trudging along merrily when I met on the road a girl about twenty years old whose appearance struck me the moment I looked at her. She was of the German type—hair very light, eyes very blue. Her apparel was that of a lady, only very much worn and soiled. Her shoes scarcely protected her from the ground, certainly not from the dampness. On her face was a look weary and sad. Indeed, she was a picture of affluence turned to poverty. I addressed her, taking care to do so respectfully, with my hat in my hand, and sympathetically. Evidently she had not been used, at least not recently, to being thus addressed, for she took my speaking to her kindly.

"Good morning, fraulein," I said to her. "It seems to me that you should be riding rather than walking."

"Alas, herr, I have not the means to pay for riding."

"Have you far to go?"

"I am going to Dresden."

She seemed to need sustenance. There could be no impropriety in my offering her food, and I had, besides the leather bag strapped to my back, a basket satchel slung to my waist containing a luncheon.

"I have come from Dresden this morning," I said, "and the distance is at least five miles. You cannot do that without being fortified."

I unslung my lunch basket, opened it and saw by the eager look in her eyes that she was very hungry. Looking about for a seat, I espied a flat stone by the roadside and led the way thither, the girl following me half reluctantly. There I took out the sandwiches, sausages, cheese and such other articles as are provided at a German inn and offered them to her. She ate as though she had had no food for some time. In the basket also was a pint bottle of wine, of which I took a sip only and insisted on her drinking the rest.

During her refreshment I gave her every opportunity to tell me the story which I felt sure was connected with her being so far out of her natural sphere, for not only her dress and appearance but her language bespoke the lady. This I was able to judge, for I had studied at Heidelberg and spoke German quite readily. But she disregarded my hints and could not be induced to speak of the past.

As to the present she was more communicative. She told me that she had been a member of a little strolling band that gave performances, her part being to sing. But they had taken all the contributions of those before whom they performed to themselves and gave her nothing. She had only just left them and was going to Dresden to look out for some other way of making a living.

"I can suggest an employment," I said, "by which I think you can earn money. You have a very beautiful head, neck and shoulders. There are artists in Dresden who would pay you to pose for them."

"Do you think so?" she asked, quite interested.

"If my artistic perceptive faculties are of any value they surely will."

This seemed to encourage her. When we had finished our luncheon and she had been also fortified by the wine she said to me:

"The only way I can make a return for what you have given me is to sing for you."

"No return is needed, but I should be happy to hear you sing."

She sang for me a German ballad. Her voice was without cultivation and came out, so to speak, by fits and starts, now ineffective, now gushing forth like a spring of abundant, clear water. At such times I was astonished at its volume. When she had finished I said to her:

"Fraulein, it is not as a model you should spend your time, but as a student of music. You have a voice that if cultivated will make much more money for you than posing for artists."

"Why do you say that?" she asked, looking at me eagerly.

"Because there are both riches and volume in your voice."

But, she continued after a thoughtful silence, "to study music under the masters requires money, and that I have not."

I should have been only too glad to help her in this respect, but there is an unwritten law that a man cannot give to a woman except under certain exceptional circumstances.

"I will make another suggestion to you," I said, "supplementary to my first. Suppose you pose for artists, and if you make more than you require for your living you may give the surplus in exchange for instruction."

Her face lit up with hope. "Ach, herr, you have given me a valuable plan! And if it is successful I shall owe everything to you. You have told me that there is a value to artists in my head and neck, and you have told me that I have a voice. Neither of these things I knew before today. Goodby, and God bless you!"

"One moment," I said, "before we part. I should like you to carry back this basket affair in which I carried my luncheon to the landlady of the inn from which I came. She furnishes these receptacles to travelers as an advertisement to her hostelry."

I showed the girl the name of the inn sewed in worsted letters on the bag. While she was not looking at me I slipped a piece of gold into it, then handed it to her. I knew my landlady well and was sure that if she found the money inside she would compel the bearer to take it, having no right to it herself. It could not very well be returned to me. Regretting that I dared not do more for the poor girl, I bade her goodby, she appearing grateful for my sympathy.

Five years had passed. I had settled down a married man and had given up traveling abroad on foot. But I had not given up a taste for the fine arts to which I was born. One after another prima donnas were visiting New York. I went one night to the opera in New York when the Academy of Music was still the only opera house in that city. When the prima donna came upon the stage her face seemed familiar to me, and when she sang I recognized in her voice certain qualities that I had heard in that of the girl I had met between Leipzig and Dresden five years before. Perhaps I might not have recognized the face alone or the voice alone, but the two together convinced me that the lady on the stage was the girl I had met abroad.

I kept my seat till the end of the last act, when, taking out my card, I scribbled beneath my name in pencil, "On the road to Dresden; luncheon, with a pint of German wine," and sent it to the prima donna behind the scenes. It was not long before I received an invitation to meet the lady, whom I found waiting for me before driving to her hotel. The pressure of the hand with which she greeted me told me how well she remembered and how appreciative she was of the trifling favor I had done her.

"This is no place to talk," she said. "We people of the stage always sup after our work, and you must come with me for a return of the luncheon you gave me when I was famished."

I entered the carriage with her and on arriving at her hotel found set out in her private parlor an elaborate supper. We sat down to table together, and I asked her to tell me what had happened to her since we parted on the road five years before.

"I will begin back of that," she said. "I will tell you how I came into the condition you found me. But I tell it to you only because I consider that my being in my present position is due to your friendly advice."

Before proceeding further she showed me on a chain about her neck the gold coin I had slipped into the lunch basket which I had sent to my landlady.

"I am the daughter of a German baron. I was brought up, as most European girls are, to understand that my parents would choose the man I should marry. My father chose for me a man about his own age who was very wealthy and as disagreeable as he was wealthy. I was not in love with any one else, but I rebelled against marrying a man I loathed. My father told me to submit or leave the home in which I had been carefully brought up, not thinking that I would do the latter. That same night when all were in bed I left in the clothes in which you met me and with what money I could scrape together.

"Whether my father tried to find me or not I do not know. I think he has considered me dead to him. At any rate, I have never heard from him since I left home. As for my mother, though she might yearn for me, she would be too submissive to my father to oppose his will in anything.

"After leaving you I went to Dresden, where I posed for artists, as you suggested, and, getting a little money together, began the study of music. I did not need to make a living that way long, for my voice proved so promising that I was taken up by one who was glad to pay for the finishing of my education, I making a contract to sing under his management as soon as I had completed my studies."

I spent a pleasant hour listening to her recital, during which time she told me that she was wedded to her profession and would never take a husband, a resolution she kept. On the following day my wife called on her, invited her to our house, and she afterward spent the most of her leisure time there. She always wore the gold piece I had surreptitiously forced her to accept when she was without a kreutzer in the world.

Soon after my prima donna became famous, after one of her returns from America to the fatherland, she visited her parents. She found them quite reduced from their former grandeur. By this time their daughter was becoming rich, and she continued so long as they lived to pour gold into their laps.

PRIMITIVE RAILROADING.

The Toronto, Grey and Bruce Was a Quaint Little Line.

The farmer's wife stood in the clearing where the Third Concession line crossed the railway track. In hand she carried a basket, full of eggs. With the other she waved a large handkerchief. The train, puffing slowly up the grade, came to a stop in front of her. The engineer called out a friendly greeting, the farmer's wife clambered aboard and the train went on. It was a strange looking train. The engine was a short, low-wheeled affair with an enormous smokestack. The tender was piled high with cordwood. Six flat cars, each rather less than half the size of modern flat cars, tagged on behind. At the end of the train was the passenger coach, not very much larger than a coach of the old stage coach days. On the side of the engine the following words appeared: "McMaster, Toronto, Grey, and Bruce Railway."

The Toronto, Grey, and Bruce was one of the most useful and interesting of the little lines which spread out from Toronto 40 years ago before the G. T. R. commenced to absorb the other lines, and before the C. P. R. was started, or the C. N. R. even dreamed of. Everybody between Toronto and Owen Sound knew the Toronto, Grey, and Bruce, and most of its officials. The relationship between the railway and the public was intimate and personal to a degree unknown in these days of vast and soulless corporations. The capital to build the line was put up by a group of Toronto merchants headed by John Gordon and George Gooderham. The City of Toronto, and the counties through which the line passed, were represented on the board of directors.

For the first few years of its existence, the T., G. and B. had three engines. They were of British manufacture and enduringly sound construction. They were short, light, little machines in comparison with the monsters of the present day, but very powerful for their size. They all burned wood, and the big hood on top of the smokestack was a distinctive feature. The driving wheels were small, in order that the engine might get a good grip on the rails and develop plenty of power on heavy grades. The eccentrics and driving rods were inside the wheels. The materials used were of the best. The boiler tubes were of copper, the rest of the engine of the best steel.

The engines all bore names. One was called the "John Gordon," one the "McMaster," and one the "Mono." They were built to go 15 miles an hour, but the T., G. and B. engineers used to get 25 or 30 miles an hour out of them at a pinch in the summertime. It was not easy to get up steam. "Many's the time I've sweated and got my hands full of slivers keeping up steam on the way up Caledon Mountain," one old fireman of those days, now an engineer on the C.P.R., told The Toronto Star. The engines used to "wood up" three times between Toronto and Owen Sound, at Woodbridge, at Orangeville, and at Shelburne. The country was just being opened up and timber was plentiful. Many a farmer got his start by selling wood to the railway.

The rolling stock consisted of curious little box cars and flat cars, resembling the "goods vans" of British railways. The first flat cars were not mounted on trucks, but on three pairs of single wheels, one at each end and one in the middle. When the train went round a curve the middle pair of wheels would leave the rails. All the cars had hand brakes, of course.

The snowdrifts 40 years ago were worse even than they are to-day. One winter, by official records, it snowed every day for seventy days. But the old double-header bucked through the drifts in a way that would put most modern engines to shame. The roadmaster of the northern section of the line, Mr. Alexander Gordon, described one of her feats. "She had a snowplow built into her," he said, "and she could go through a great deal. One day we came to a place where the snow lay at an average depth of three feet six inches for a mile and a half. I walked on ahead trying the depth and would signal back to the engineer of the double-header. He had all the wood in the firepot that he could get, and the double-header came up the grade like a ball of fire, throwing out sparks and snow in all directions. She had small driving wheels and could keep going where a bigger engine would be stalled."

TAILORED SUITS.

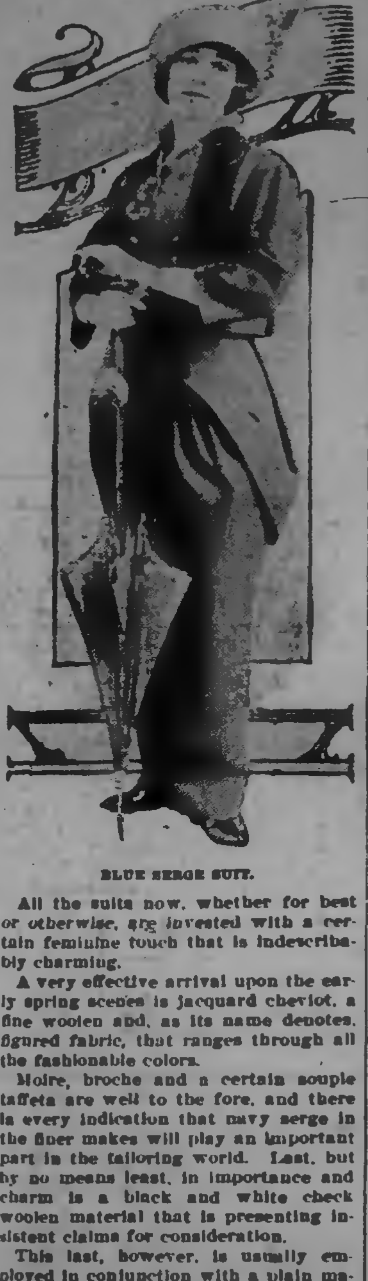
In Navy Blue Serge They Are Ultra Stylish.



BLUE SERGE SUIT.

All the suits now, whether for best or otherwise, are invested with a certain feminine touch that is indescribably charming.

A very effective arrival upon the early spring scenes is jacquard cheviot, a fine woolen and, as its name denotes, figured fabric, that ranges through all the fashionable colors.

Moire, broche and a certain souple taffeta are well to the fore, and there is every indication that navy serge in the finer makes will play an important part in the tailoring world. Last, but by no means least, in importance and charm is a black and white check woolen material that is presenting insistent claims for consideration.

This last, however, is usually employed in conjunction with a plain material, when the result is extremely smart.

The leading characteristics of the season's coat models are an exceedingly flat shoulder line and a belt, placed somewhere about the region of the waist. The belt is sometimes wide, sometimes narrow, while frequently the waist line is indicated by a sash either of satin or crepe de chine, especially with coats and skirts of moire, broche and the like dressy materials.

The navy blue serge tailored suit shown here is one that illustrates many style points. It has one of the new yoked skirts, the tunic suggests the pannier, and the coat is a short bolero model.

FOR THE TABLE.

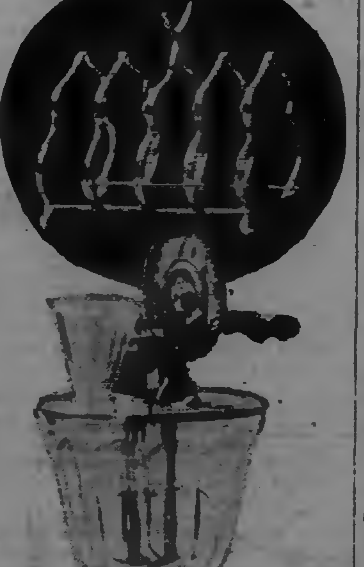
Utensils That Will Be Appreciated by the Cook and Housekeeper.

Two useful devices for the housewife are shown here. One, a toast rack in nickle, is a light and attractive addition to the breakfast table.

The mayonnaise mixer also shown will be appreciated by all lovers of salads, for it will enable them to mix up a salad dressing with ease and celerity. The results will also be more satisfactory than with the old fashioned process.



TOAST RACK AND MAYONNAISE MIXER.

About Corks.

Corks may be made air tight or water tight by being immersed in melted wax for five minutes. A cork will fit any bottle if boiled for five minutes previously. A convenient substitute for a corkscrew when the latter is not at hand may be found in the use of a common screw with an attached string to pull out cork.

A brisk walk in the rain will freshen the complexion.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Adenoids.

When adenoids are developing in a child's nose the parents should at once strike the foundation of the diseased tissue and build up the general health of the infant. Slight colds in an unhealthy baby develop adenoids. The principal symptoms usually observed in an infant suffering from adenoids is the mouth breathing. This mouth breathing will cause the tonsils to become irritated and enlarged. The enlargement of the tonsils will block up the throat, and the child will not get the proper amount of fresh air; consequently the child will become mentally deficient.

WIRELESS WAVE ANTICS.

Puzzling Conditions the Scientists Are Trying to Master.

All the amateur wireless telegraph operators of England are to be called on to help solve the mysteries of wireless wave antics and of strays, the electric forces often caught by wireless instruments, but which are recognized as stray electricity in the air.

It is not unlikely that this will be followed by a movement to have American wireless enthusiasts make a similar campaign. The scientists who have been studying wireless want all the information they can obtain about the queer doings, and when a great amount of certain information has been obtained they hope to find some solution of the antics.

It is now fairly well established in connection with Eiffel tower signals that when it is raining at the sending end the receiving end is apt to be poor, but if it is clear at the sending end and raining at the receiving end the signals come along normally. If it is cloudy at both ends the signals are better than ever. It has long been generally known that after sunset the strength of the wireless signals increases greatly, but the exact amount of this increase in thousands of cases is wanted for study.

The subject of strays is a big one in itself, but if all the amateurs of the land were on the lookout for them and sent in reports on all they noticed it might be found that they travel on certain understood lines, like storms, or appear under certain conditions of weather.—Saturday Evening Post.

STRENUOUS KING ALFONSO.

His Life May Be Short, but He Intends to Make It Lively.

"A short life and a merry one!" It was in the spirit of that old motto that King Alfonso of Spain is said to have replied the other day to physicians who advised him that the only hope of arresting the disease which has affected his throat for years and which now has spread to the post nasal region lies in the direction of abandoning official work and social excitements, and living in retirement while undergoing a course of treatment that would consume twelve months.

The king is reported to have replied. "You don't guarantee a cure, and I can tell you that a year as an invalid would certainly finish me."

That the fatiguing pursuits in which the king's restless energy finds an outlet aggravate his malady is beyond question. But he belongs to a family of shattered constitutions, and, all things considered, it's a wonder that he is alive.—Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin.

Artificial Wood.

Artificial wood, having the resistance of oak, is now successfully made from straw. The straw after being cut into small pieces is reduced to a paste by boiling, to which certain chemicals are added. When the paste has been reduced to a homogeneous mass it is put into presses, and planks, beams, laths, and moldings of all sizes are readily made. This new material can be sawed like natural wood. As a fuel it emits a bright flame and little smoke.

The Highest Valued Horse.

Desire to possess leads to extraordinary offerings at times, as witness M. Matacheff, a Russian sportsman, who recently offered more than $275,000 for the English race horse, Lemberg. This is the highest valuation ever placed on a horse, and it is interesting to know that the owner, who races on the English turf under the name of Mr. Fairlie, refused to part with his pride even at that fabulous price. Lemberg a great winner, was foaled in 1907.

Secrets of the Ancients.

Recent discoveries made by Professor Garstang at Meroe, the site of the ancient Ethiopian capital, include a sacred well and an observatory, in which there was evidence of instruments for taking observations, especially in determining latitude. He also discovered two monumental inscriptions, with the longest Meroitic texts extant, which record victories, with references to Rome.

Paris Takes Up New Mascot.

Paris has taken up a new mascot which is to be seen everywhere. It assumes the shape of a snail, hitherto only favored as an edible, but now manufactured in gold and silver and precious stones. The "escargot" has leaped into immediate popularity, displacing the miniature horseshoe, the white elephant and the four leaved clover as a luck bringer.—London Globe.

Both Commanders Perished.

A memorable sea fight in the war of 1812 was the battle between the American ship Enterprise, 16 guns and 102 men, and the British Boxer, 14 guns and 100 men. The Enterprise was commanded by Lieutenant Burrows and the Boxer by Captain Blythe. The battle occurred Sept. 4, 1812, in the bay not far from Portland, Me., and resulted in the capture of the Boxer, both commanders being killed. The two vessels were taken into Portland on the 7th of September and anchored off shore. The coffined bodies of the two commanders were rowed ashore by sailors of both ships and after public funeral services were buried side by side in the village cemetery. Longfellow, then a lad of five years old and living in Portland, recalls the event in his poem "My Lost Youth," written during a visit to Portland in 1846, in which he says:

I remember the sea fight far away—
  How it thundered o'er the tide!—
And the dead captains, as they lay
In their graves, o'erlooking the tranquil bay,
  Where they in battle died.

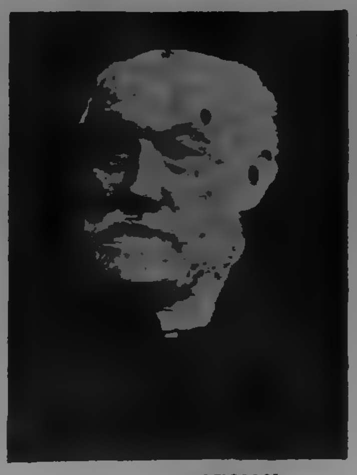
VETERAN HEAD OF CANADIAN METHODISM HEARD AT CHARLOTTE STREET CHURCH

First Chapter of Genesis is True Says Rev. Dr. Carman

Obligations on Men and Women Who Have the Ballot



REV. DR. CARMAN.

Large congregations were on hand in Charlotte Street Methodist Church yesterday, both morning and evening, to hear the Superintendent of Methodism, the Rev. Dr. Carman. Those who attended had an opportunity of listening to a man full of years and service, who though past eighty years of age, handled his discourses with a vigor and a clearness wanting in many younger men. His voice, though showing traces of age, was strong, and easily filled the church. His text was from 2nd, Corinthians, 4th Chapter, 6th Verse. "God . . . made the light to shine out of our darkness." You see there, my dear hearers, the speaker began, that every one of us is linked to the creation, to God's first great act in creating the world. I look upon that great darkness as God's great start, probably the world was in a gaseous form. The speaker was disposed to look upon that condition of the world as a blackness impenetrable to sight. Ages, milleniums, eons of time elapsed while God was creating the world. Dr. Carman used Niagara Falls and the Hydro Electric scheme of Adam Beck to illustrate his idea of lighting the world. The mighty forces of nature produced light as Niagara Falls did for towns and cities within its range. The first chapter of Genesis is true, and is as good an account of the creation as we can get. The world was a great, gaseous globe, rolling and tumbling without form.

The Light of God.

In the creation, was man's right to regeneration. God makes the light to shine in your heart and recreates men. The Bible is shot through with this idea. It is found in Ephesians. Men must be renewed in the spirit of their minds. It links men to the primeval creation act. Science touches its wand and brings light out of darkness, so the light of God touches men and the world and brings light out of them. The God that fixed firm and fast the foundations of the hills, fixed firm and fast the foundations of reason. He found reason and light in the flame of imagination, found it in nature, in the God that created the world and that wrote the Bible.

The speaker found that the Bible takes the ground that the heathen ought to have been good. God never intended the flowery plain to be stained with gore, nor rivers to be incarnadined with the blood. He referred to Kepplar's great sublimities, and said we ought to learn good from the rivers and the floods, but we have another evidence that is, the light of knowledge. Science is but a closer light to the glory of God which was further shown in Jesus Christ. Thus, he would like to add to Kepplar's great Sublimities another, for his mind is out-reached by a greater. The speaker says, Here I am, borne down with sin, and I say to this starry heaven, Have mercy on me, but all is quiet and still, the stars shine on, and they do not comfort my poor soul nor take away my transgressions. Then I look into the law, the law of God, and the law looks down in all its glory and majesty and says, It is not in it, but in the face of Jesus Christ where all the goodness is, that is required to make him a new man.

Evening Service.

At the evening service his text was 5th Romans, 20-21: Moreover, the law entered that the offence might abound. The tremendous movements in God and Nature are very quiet. Thus the heart beats silently and pumps a great deal of blood through our bodies all the time. Look at the grasses of the field and you will see that every day, thousands of tons of water are pumped up into them. Take your trees and thousand of tons of water are drawn up from the soil through the roots and trunks and limbs. You pay little attention to it, so in the moral world our text leads to that thought. Then the speaker contrasted Sinai and Mount Zion as the Jewish and Christian economy, ceremony, law and justice. The Jewish economy came to Rome and caused a great shaking up. Yet it raised the fine on infractions of the worked unseen and silently for a long time. He read from Isaiah, an account of a man making a god for himself from wood, from which he later built a fire and warmed himself. There was a time, the speaker said, when the whole world was in sin, and when the law had to be proclaimed, in order to free the people from their sins and from the bondage of idolatry. Christ caused the law to be proclaimed. If He had not spoken, the people would not be condemned for sin. If there was no law, there would be no transgression. The law is all right, it is the sin in men that is the evil. We are changing our law to-day, because of its imperfections and effect on the country. You are responsible for a pure and good country. The obligation is on the men who have the ballot and the women who want the ballot. The government should use its power to clean up the country. What effect is your ballot going to have on the country, or is it no better, no wiser, no purer than that of the multitudes pouring into this land? We need right and clean laws. The Honourable W. J. Hanna has license law to $100. One hundred dollars for sin, or thirty days in jail.

the speaker said, that is publishing sin, you have made the sin abound. Well, he said, let them jog along in their red cart, not their automobile, they will get some place some day. As human conditions and things exist at the present time, we are progressing perhaps as well as can be expected. Fifty years ago, you took no notice of this sin. We should pray for progress, even if slow. Dr. Carman made a plea for a loyal citizenship for faithful men and women to use their power for the removal of evil.

The musical part of the service deserved a good deal of praise. Miss Richardson sang a solo, He Leadeth Me, a very beautiful composition, the fine rendering of which was much appreciated. The choir rendered a fine anthem, and at the evening service two anthems of exceptional merit were rendered by the choir, the solo parts being taken by Miss Richardson. The announcements are as usual, Rev. H. Frost will have charge of the services next Sunday and until the meeting of conference.

ODDFELLOWS ATTEND SERVICE AT S. A. TEMPLE

An Address on Love by Adjutant McElheney to Large Representation of the Order

The local Oddfellows attended divine service at the Salvation Army Temple last evening in a body, where they were delivered a most interesting and appropriate address on "Love" by Adjutant McElheney. Friendship, love and truth being the emblem of the society, the address on the subject of love and the treatment of practical points of Christiantity was keenly followed by the members. Adjutant McElheney was assisted by Brigadier Rawlings and Staff-Captain Walton, of Montreal, both of whom made short addresses.

The band was in attendance, and kept the gathering enlivened with music. They also headed the parade to the Temple, and escorted the Oddfellows back to the hall.

On their return to the Oddfellows' Hall a vote of thanks was passed in favor of the Salvation Army. Several speeches were made by His Worship Mayor Buller, Lt.-Col. Miller, Ald. Johnston, J. J. Hartley, Andrew McFarlane and W. A. Logan, who all spoke of their great appreciation of the Christian services the Army were rendering throughout the world, and especially in this city.

Dr. Morrow, a prominent Oddfellow, stated that the turnout was one of the largest they ever had. His praise for the services and appreciation of the work of the Army was unlimited.

RECEPTION OF CHURCH MEMBERS

Interesting and Helpful Services at Park Street Church

A large congregation greeted Rev. F. A. Conners at Park Street Baptist Church, Sunday morning, when he preached on the subject of Prayer and its Answer. It was a discourse packed full of inspiration and help to the Christian. At the close of the service, forty-one received the right hand of fellowship and six others were received by letter. The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper followed.

The church was crowded at the evening service, when the pastor gave an interesting sermon on the Rich Fool. At the close of this service, six others were baptized.

ARCHDEACON INGLES VISITS ST. GEORGE'S

Archdeacon Ingles of Toronto, visited St. George's Church Sunday evening, and joined with the congregation in their continued celebration of St. George's Day festival. The order of service as carried out at St. John's Church Monday evening, was followed, and throughout the large congregation took part in a hearty manner.

The important part the Church of England had taken in the formation of the nation, and what the church had given to individuals, were the points which Archdeacon Ingles elucidated. His address received a very attentive hearing.

Rev. Jas. Price announced the withdrawal of the A.Y.P.A. meeting called for Wednesday evening on account of the concert by the St. George's Choral Society. He also asked assistance of the parents and friends towards a concert which the boys are preparing, to secure funds to help in paying for the piano now used in the Sunday school room.

MARTIAL LAW AT VERA CRUZ

CITY IS NOW GOVERNED ABSOLUTELY BY U.S. ADMIRAL.

VERA CRUZ, April 27.—Vera Crus is to-day under martial law. Rear Admiral Fletcher, commanding the American naval forces on shore, yesterday issued a proclamation to this effect, and the last opportunity Mexicans had for handling their own affairs in Vera Cruz under their own laws disappeared.

Admiral Fletcher and his staff determined that there should be no more quibbling with the Mexican officials regarding forms of Government, and until further notice the residents of this port will live and be judged by military law.

This proclamation makes Rear Admiral Fletcher absolute ruler as before, and it is agreed that he will use his power with stoical regard for all, to the end that order shall be maintained.

It is expected that the martial law proclamation will have another effect —that of opening the way for more of the city and federal employes to return to their posts and co-operate in restoring the local government functions. Mexicans point out that these men will now be in a position to explain to their friends and the existing government at the capital that under martial law they felt obliged to return to their work.

The federal general, Maas, has established his headquarters at Soledad, about sixteen miles from Vera Cruz, and his men are tearing up the railway tracks. The gap between Tejera, the water supply station, which is guarded by the Americans, and Soledad has grown greatly, and it is now no simple task for the refugees, whether foreigners fleeing from Huerta or Mexicans, proceeding from Vera Cruz towards the capital to get themselves and their baggage across the open space.

STEPMOTHER IS ATTACKED

MONTREAL GIRL MAKES A MURDEROUS ASSAULT WITH CARVING KNIFE

MONTREAL, April 27.—A fifteen-year-old girl, armed with a long carving knife, made a murderous attack upon her stepmother at her home on Friday night. Her father put up a lively battle and after a terrible rough-and-tumble fight on the kitchen floor, wrestled the knife from her. Then he swore out a warrant for her arrest in the juvenile court.

The girl, who is big for her age and alleged to be a wayward one, was remonstrated with by her stepmother for her street walking tendencies. She flew into a dreadful passion, and, grabbing the knife, made a sudden leap for her. The father jumped and grasped her arm and the two fell to the floor. She put up a furious battle before she was overpowered.

MONTREAL, April 27.—A eulogy of the disciplinary effects of boxing was pronounced by the Duke of Connaught after an exhibition of sparring by the Griffintown Boys Club Friday night.

"Boxing," the duke told the boys, "teaches you not to lose your temper. A good smack in the face hurts, and it is well to learn to take one with a grin. It seems a very small thing, but in this world it is a very important thing that you should not take offence at anything."

Friday night the duke also opened an exhibition of Boy Scouts. The occasion was made noteworthy by the fact that Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Connaught made her first public appearance since her serious illness.

POOL ROOM CASE; NO CONVICTION

Summons Was Issued Against The Wrong Man

Another pool room case occupied the attention of the police court this morning, when W. L. Sharpe, manager of the Ideal Pool Room, appeared before Magistrate Dumble charged with a breach of the by-law governing pool rooms. Mr. D. O'Connelll appeared for Sharpe and entered a plea of "Not Guilty."

The Magistrate upheld the contention of counsel that the summons should have been made against the proprietor, according to the by-law, and as a result no conviction was registered.

The manager was in charge at the time and he was served with the summons. The game in question finished at 11.12 p.m.

DANGER IN EXCESS IN ATHLETICS BUT GODLINESS IS ALWAYS PROFITABLE

Rev. J. N. Clarry Sees Much Good to be Obtained From Athletics

St. James' Pastor Heartily in Sympathy With Supervised Play Grounds

A very large congregation heard Rev. J. N. Clarry last evening in St. James Methodist Church, when he spoke on the very timely topic of "Athletics and Religion." Mr. Clarry chose his text from the first epistle of St. Paul to Timothy, chapter 4, verse 8, "For bodily exercise profiteth little, but godliness is profitable unto all things."

The church, as St. Paul did, recognizes that there is a young people's problem to face, and St. Paul had an understanding of that problem and counselled accordingly. Apparently then, as now, there were wrong and right ways of looking at both athletics and religion. First, there is the way that athletics bring rewards in this life, and second, there is the correct way that athletics can be used as an assist in this life and as an assist to attain happiness in the life to come.

Athletics a Necessity.

Athletics are a necessity in this life inasmuch as they are an offset to too great a mentl exertion, they perfect the health, and can be used, as St. Paul often illustrated, as an example for our fight for spiritual perfection. In athletics if one surpasses another he is rewarded and the same applies to the spiritual side of life. The one who is given to athletics, in a moderated form, is more fitted to perform his daily duties. Good temper is cultivated, personal wishes sacrificed, and above all dangerous appetites are kept in check. The one who is interested in athletics during leisure hours is kept out of mischief, therefore they are most profitable.

Danger in Excess.

Bodily exercise indirectly yields help to the mental and spiritual being. It should, however, never get further than a means to that end. If taken to excess it does incalculable harm. When one finds $100,000 given to the training of Marathon athletes that is excess and all intellectual or spiritual interests are extinguished. With these excesses so common one must guard against them and only take exercise for one end, that is to assist us in obtaining greater love for God.

Godliness Always Profitable.

There are no drawbacks to Godliness. It is always profitable and its values are not confined to this world. In this we cannot excess, but like athletics we cannot lay it aside without hurting ourselves. We all must have Godliness as well as bodily exercise. Ask the physician, the employer of labor, teachers in the public school or university, the statesman or philosopher, and they will tell you that the person with Godliness is better than the one without it. The man with faith in his Heavenly Father will do the better work and can always be trusted. There is a popular idea that Godliness is impractical, weak and unmanly in the life of holiness to which Christ has called us and of which he has given us an example. Let us get rid of this error and live such lives as to prove the vulgar idea false.

It is not necessary to be dismal, joyless nd depressed to have Godliness. We can enjoy ourselves so long as we do not sin by it. We are not at liberty to sin and if we do we must suffer for it. The worldly standards should not mislead us, we should help the younger in their problems. A Godly life makes an appeal when even words will fail to bring desired results. The life of the true Christian needs no apology, therefore we should all be Godly. Athletes should accept only the standard of the clean and pure and thus rule out profanity and excess of all kinds.

Supervised Playgrounds.

One thing that is needed, Rev. Mr. Clarry remarked, which will preserve Godliness and save young men and boys is supervised playgrounds. The recent appearance of many boys of the city in Police Court does not read well for the future of our city, therefore something should be done to save them for society and the church. We should not leave this thing alone. Mr. Clarry expressed himself in hearty sympathy with the movement and referring to his text stated that it is in the direction of a right consideration of the problem of youth and it's associations. Men be manly and be true, so you will be godly. With all thy getting get understanding and the fear of the Lord is the beginning.

FRATERNAL DAY MEETS WITH FAVOR

Representatives of Lodges Meet to Discuss Suggestion.

Despite the very inclement weather, there was a very good representation at the meeting in the Sons of England Hell on Saturday evening in connection with the organisation of Fraternal Day. Mr. D. Kennedy, past master of the Orangemen, was appointed Chairman, and Mr. T. Hendry, of the A. O. F., secretary. The meeting was very enthusiastic over the idea and it was unanimously decided that a Fraternal Sunday would be held. The Sunday selected was June 21st, but the various lodges and societies will have an opportunity of discussing the proposition during the next week and at the next meeting, to be held on May 9th, final arrangements will be made.

Several very excellent suggestions were brought out last night, and although nothing definite was done, a suggestion that met with favor was that all the societies unite, march through the city and assemble in one building, preferably the Armouries, and there be addressed by representatives of the Ministerial Association. Efforts will be put forward to have outside fraternal bodies represented, and it is estimated that if everything is carried on satisfactorily, there would be between five and six thousand men in the parade.

The societies represented at last night's meeting were: A. O. F., I. O. O. F., C. O. O. F., L. O. L., S. O. E, K. O. P., W. O. W., and Protestant Benevolent Federation. The Moulder's Union and Caledonian Club were also represented.

Mrs. A. A. Harvey, after spending the winter with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Finch Miller, left to-day for Los Angeles.

NOT AFRAID OF THE LIGHT.

IN SPITE OF THE BASELESS and windy statements of some newspapers, the Whitney Government stands by its record—a record that bears the full light of criticism and redounds to the credit of the Conservative Party in Ontario.

Some papers have adversely criticised the Government for the bill indemnifying Mr. G. Howard Ferguson. Such criticism exemplifies the rankest partizan spirit or an inexcusable ignorance of the facts. The Bill merely re-enacted a clause passed by the Liberal Ross Government but which was accidentally omitted at the last revision of the Ontario Statutes. Those Liberal papers which condemn the passage of this clause condemn the last Liberal administration, which they were wont to support with the same inconsistency with which they now condemn the Whitney Government. With even greater effrontery they try to shove the onus of the Evanturel episode on the Conservative Administration. The leader of the Liberal Party, Mr. Rowell, supported the Whitney Government in demanding Evanturel's resignation, and, when Liberal papers try to place the stigma attaching to their own party on the Conservatives, they are resorting to unmanly journalism, to peanut journalism of the most petty kind.

The record of the Whitney Government is the one excuse for its large majority in the House. It has fathered and carried to a successful position the greatest publicly owned enterprise in the Dominion—the Hydro-Electric System. Contradictory to the statement of the Hon. Geo. P. Graham, that public works always exceed the estimates, the Hydro-Electric plant was constructed as well as science could build it and much below the original estimates. It has been so well operated that Liberal papers have ceased to criticise it. The Workmen's Compensation Bill has been passed which Mr. Rowell, Liberal leader in Ontario, supported as a good measure. The Conservatives inaugurated the Local Option Act and have maintained its efficiency in spite of much opposition to make the act ineffective. They have enforced the license law, shortened hours of sale and have made the penalties for infractions of the law so severe that they have been greatly reduced. In addition the Conservatives have to their credit a vast amount of useful legislation, have increased financial aid to the schools and Universities of the Province, and have conducted at a profit the T. and N. O. Railway. Surely, a worthy record and one recognized as such by the people of this province when they voted them so large a majority in the last election.

In face of this tremendous record for efficiency the Rowell Opposition have a Banish the Bar policy on which the party is not a unit judging from attacks by the Simcoe Reformer and disclosures by Gustave Evanturel. It is not a prohibition policy, and, in view of the difference of opinion prevailing on the subject, it is doubtful whether the Liberals, even if elected could carry out their promises. Compared with the Whitney policy and record the Liberals' platform is weak, untried and not likely to make much headway against the sound, vigorous administration which the Whitney Government have been giving the people of Ontario.

NEW RAILWAYS IN THE WEST.

J. D. McARTHUR, the railroad contractor of Winnipeg, gave some interesting details of railroad construction in the far West. He stated that steel had been laid from Edmonton to Lesser Slave, a distance of 170 miles, and that the Valley of the Peace River would be reached this summer.

Mr. McArthur also gave out, for the first time, details of the Edmonton, Dunvergin and British Columbia Railway, that is opening up lands, thousands of square miles in extent. He said further that work would commence this spring on the Great Waterways Railway to Fort Murray, northeast of Edmonton, a distance of 350 miles.

The line to Dunvergin and British Columbia will extend four hundred miles, 30 miles into the very heart of the Peace River district, where settlers are reported to be pouring in.

"We have completed the first 170 miles of the line to Lesser Slave Lake," said McArthur. "We will reach the Smoky River this fall and the road will be completed to the British Columbia boundary line in the fall of 1915. We are already operating under construction the first division of the 180 miles to the new town of Smith, at the crossing of the Athabasca River.

"The Dominion Government has had the country surveyed and there are thousands of homesteads between Smith and the British Columbia boundary, and even beyond that point. We are going to commence work on the Great Waterways Railway this spring and we will put 1500 men to work on the line just as soon as conditions permit."

The two new railway lines that Mr. McArthur is constructing into Northern Alberta will take in 150,000 square miles of virgin territory, through which run several broad navigable streams that will give access to the country for settlement. There are at least fourteen thousand homesteads open for entry. The country is rich in minerals, gold, copper, gypsum and petroleum being found and there is coal everywhere. Some of the coalfields are said to be thirty miles square, with seams six to fourteen feet in thickness.

Thus, the expectations are to reach the Peace River country this summer. What this means to the West and to Canada can hardly be realized. Standing on the threshold of the great Peace River country, the homesteader surveys an immense field for development. He sees thousands, millions of acres of fine wheat growing soil waiting for plough and harrow. The pioneer developer of natural resources sees rich beds of asphalt, ocre and other valuable minerals waiting for exploitation. Great navigable waterways wander through this territory. Warm Chinook winds from the south, blow along the base of the foot-hills and temper the rigours of winter cold that are prevalent in the northern parts of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The coming of a railway is the one necessary factor to start the settlers' vans journeying to that country. It is thus seen, that the West and Canada as a whole, is facing the starting point of another great development, a development that means as much to Edmonton, as Manitoba has meant to Winnipeg.

FISHY FISHING.

OUR EVENING CONTEMPORARY contained a recent article on fishing. The article is fishy in more ways than one. The intention of the articles was to show that the waters of the Kawartha Lakes had been fished nearly dry; that the fishing inspectors had not performed their duty; that tourists broke the law in regard to fishing, and that nothing was being done to start a fish hatchery, nor were measures being taken to protect spawning grounds. All this is very good, if it were true.

Unfortunately, the writer had apparently overlooked the report in the Review, which stated that Mr. Peck, our able member in the Ontario House, had taken up the matter, with the result that a large quantity of bass spawn from the hatchery on the Grand River will be placed during the coming summer in Stoney Lake and adjoining water. Mr. Peck also states that a separate department is to be formed for fisheries, and a deputy minister appointed. Mr. Peck is going to take up the matter of hatcheries for the lakes in this locality with the new deputy minister and the whole question of game and fish protection put on a more intelligent basis. It is quite evident the Government is not going to let our fish resources become exhausted, even though some Liberal papers declaim otherwise. The citizens of Peterborough are pleased to know that the local member is taking action on this question with good results. With the number of tourists yearly increasing, together with growing demands for the fish of these lakes; the gradual depletion of fish is quite natural and unavoidable, unless some artificial means are taken to keep up the supply. Those who are interested in the problem of conserving the fish resources of the waters in this region, will be glad to know that the proper steps are being taken to protect the fish resources of this district.

WOULD SACRIFICE EASTERN CANADA.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER in his speech on the budget and his amendment to it, said that eastern Canada did not raise foodstuffs enough for its own consumption and that therefore the duty should be taken off them, both for the benefit of the Eastern consumer and the Western farmer. This statement provoked loud Conservative protests, since it is well known that Canada east of Fort William could supply ten times its present population with food. However, Sir Wilfrid was apparently quite willing to sacrifice the eastern food producer to the western wheat grower. Such are the necessities of politicians. The American food producer will have to wait. Ontario farmers are not yet ready to be sacrificed.

Trouble for Uncle Sam.

Hamilton Herald.

Huerta's refusal to offer redress for the blundering arrest of a detachment of U. S. soldiers by formally saluting the U. S. flag looks like a deliberate affront to the Washington government. It is just possible that the Mexican usurper would welcome war with the United States in the hope that war would consolidate all the Mexican factions.

Minister (calling on inmate of prison)—Remember, Mr. Kenney, that stone walls do not a prison make, nor iron bars a cage.

Needed More Swallows.

A jarvey was driving with an English visitor on a bitterly cold day in December through the wilds of Connemara. They became quite sociable on the way, and the native, in a burst of confidence, pointed out a shebeen where the "best potheen in Connaught" might be obtained. The Englishman, only too glad to get an opportunity of warming himself, offered refreshments, which offer was readily accepted. "'Tis a very cold day in these parts, pat," observed the tourist. He raised his glass and the contents speedily vanished. "And there's truth in the old sayin'," he suggestively added, smacking his lips, "wan swallow niver makes a summer."

An Embarrassing Moment.

Cleveland Plain Dealer.

There are moments when a man would sooner be anywhere than where he is.

Take the case of the young man who was walking with an heiress who can write checks with five figures.

"Which do you consider the most conducive to happiness, Mr. Gigglesworth, money or beauty?" she asked.

What could he say?

The heiress is as plain as the law permits heiresses to be.

If the young man said beauty, the lady would be offended. If he said "money" she might consider it a proposal.

Then he rallied.

"Having neither," he said, "I'd rather not be quoted."

MUD

By Walt Mason

The rains of springtime fall apace, recalling Noah's flood, and turn this earth, once pleasant place, into a stretch of mud. The mud is splashing on my clothes, which fills my eyes with tears, and mud is clinging to my nose, and mud is in my ears. My whiskers catch a lot of mud when down the street I creep, and oft I slip, with dismal thud, into a mudhole deep. The good roast beef I eat at noon, and e'en the mealy spud, the pie, the doughnut and the prune, the cake—all taste of mud. From boot heels to my diamond stud, the mud upon me shows; my feet, from paddling in the mud, have webs between the toes. But people say, "Cheer up, old sox! It's splendid for the oats! And it will furnish grass for flocks of cows and geese and goats! This mud is what the farmers need, to make their turnips thrive; they whistle as they sow their seed—they're glad that they're alive!" I try to think of things like these, and thus cool off my blood, when I am wading to my knees in filthy kinds of mud, but it is all in vain, by heck! I simply can't enthuse, for mud is streaming down my neck, and fills my socks and shoes.

Birthdays of Note

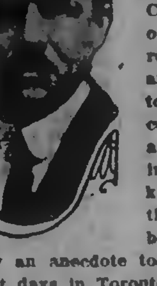
MONDAY, APRIL TWENTY-SEVENTH

HON. H. L. DRAYTON, chairman of the Dominion Board of Railway Commissioners, was born in Kingston forty-five years ago to-day.



Before accepting his present office he spent most of his professional life in the City Hall, Toronto, where he rose from assistant city solicitor to corporation council. He is a man characterized by a very kindly disposition, which may be well illustrated by an anecdote told of his more recent days in Toronto. In going to his office, he used to alight from the street car at a corner of Yonge street. On this corner a blind man was stationed, who offered small articles for sale. The corporation counsel was touched by the man's appearance and came at last to wish him regularly a good morning and drop a piece of money in his cup. At length, when he removed to Ottawa, he asked the blind man for his address and sent him as a farewell gift a fur-lined overcoat.

COWARDICE COURT
BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON

As she neared the river the neighing of a horse hard by caused her to sit erect with burning ears. Then she relapsed into a smile, remembering that it might have come from the game warden's horse. A moment later her searching eyes caught sight of Shaw's horse tied to a sapling and on Bazelhurst ground, many hundred feet from his own domain. She drew rein sharply and looked about in considerable trepidation. Off to the right lay the log that divided the lands, but nowhere along the bank of the river could she see the trespasser. Carefully she resumed her way, ever on the lookout, puzzled not a little by the unusual state of affairs.

Near the river trail she came upon the man, but he paid no heed to her approach. He sat with his face in his hands, and—she could not believe her eyes and ears—he was sobbing bitterly. For an instant her lips curled in the smile of scornful triumph, and then something like disgust came over her. There was mockery in her voice as she called out to him:

"Have you stubbed your toe, little boy?"

He looked up, dazed. Then he arose, turning his back while he dashed his hand across his eyes. When he glanced back at her he saw that she was smiling. But she also saw something in his face that drove the smile away. Absolute rage gleamed in his eyes.

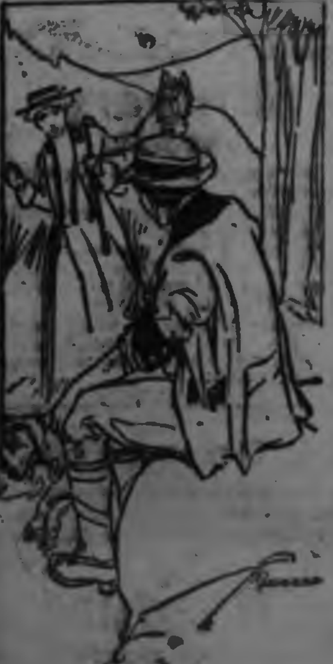
"So it is real war?" he said hoarsely, his face quivering. "Your pitiful cowards want it to be real, do they? Well, that's what it shall be, hang them! They shall have all they want of it. Look! This is their way of fighting, is it? Look!"

He pointed to his feet. Her bewildered eyes saw that his hand was bloody and a deathly sickness came over her. He was pointing to the outstretched, inanimate form of the dog that had been his friend and comrade. She knew that the beast was dead and she knew that her brother's threat had not been an idle one. A great wave of pity and horror swept over her. Moisture sprang to her eyes on the moment.

"He—he is dead?" she exclaimed.

"Yes; and killed by some cowardly brute whose neck I'd like to wring. That dog—my Bonaparte—who knew no feud, who did no wrong! Your brother wants war, does he? Well, I'll give him all"—

"But my brother could not have done a thing like this," she cried, slipping from her saddle and advancing toward him quickly. "Oh, no, no! Not this! He is not that sort, I know. It must have been an accident and"—



"Accident! Don't come near me."

"Accident! Don't come near me! I mean it. God, my heart is too full of vengeance. Accident? Is this blood on my arm accidental? Bah! It was a deliberate attempt to murder me!"

"You—you, too?" she gasped, reeling.

"Yes; they've winged me, too. Oh, God, if I only had been armed. There would have been a killing."

"Let me see, let me help you!" she cried, coming up to his side, white faced and terrified. "I won't stay away! You are hurt. Please, please. I am not your enemy."

For a long minute he held back, savagely resentful, glowering upon her; then his face softened and his hand went out to clasp hers.

"I knew you had nothing to do with it. Forgive me—forgive my rudeness. Don't be alarmed about me. Two or three scattered shot struck me in the arm. The fellow's aim was bad when it came to me. But he—he got the dog! Poor old Bonaparte! It's as if he were a—a brother, Miss Drake. I loved him and he loved me."

"You must let me see your arm. I will not take no for an answer. It must need attention"—

"Believe me, it is nothing. I have tied my handkerchief about it—two little shot, that's all. The first charge riddled the dog. But I forgot. I am still on your sister's land. At any minute I may be shot from behind some tree. I—I couldn't help crying, Miss Drake. It was cruel—fiendish! Now, if you'll permit me I'll take my dead off of your land."

"Stop! I must know about it. Tell me; how did it happen?"

"I can't talk about it to you."

"Why not? Do you think I condone this outrage? Do you think I can support such means of warfare? You do not know me, Mr. Shaw; you do not know an Englishwoman's love of fairness."

"By Jove, do you mean it?" His eyes lighted up. "But, after all, you belong to the other camp," he added dejectedly. "I—I wish to heaven, Miss Drake, you were not one of them!"

"My brother—Cecil would not have permitted this," she tried to apologize, remembering with a cold heart that Lord Bazelhurst had given the very instructions of which this was the result.

"We can't discuss it, Miss Drake. Some one from your side of the line killed my dog and then fired at me. I'll admit I was trespassing, but not until the dog was shot. He was on Lady Bazelhurst's land when he was shot. It was not until after that that I trespassed, if you are pleased to call it such. But I was unarmed, hang the luck!" The way he said it conveyed much to her understanding.

"Tell me, please."

"I've had murder in my heart for half an hour, Miss Drake. Somehow you soothe me." He sat down on the log again and leaned his head upon his hand. With his eyes upon the dead dog he went on, controlling his anger with an effort: "I rode down the river road this morning for a change, intending to go up later on to our trysting place through the wood." She heard him call it a trysting place without a thought of resentment or shame. "When I came to the log there I stopped, but Bonaparte, lawless old chap, kept on. I paid no attention to him, for I was thinking of—of something else. He had raced around in the forbidden underbrush for some time before I heard the report of a gun near at hand. The dog actually screamed like a human being. I saw him leap up from the ground and then roll over. Of course, I—well, I trespassed. Without thinking of my own safety I flew to where the dog was lying. He looked up into my face and whined just as he died. I don't remember how I got off the horse. The next I knew I was rushing blindly into the brush toward a place where I saw smoke curling like a fiend. Then came the second shot and the stinging in my arm. It brought me to my senses. I stopped and a moment later I saw a man running down along the bank of the stream. I—oh, well, there isn't any more to tell. I don't know who fired the shots. I couldn't see his face."

"It was Tompkins," she cried. "I know it was. He had his orders"—but she checked herself in confusion.

"His orders? Do you mean to say—Miss Drake, did your brother instruct him to kill me?" She quailed beneath his look.

"I—I can't say anything more about it, Mr. Shaw," she murmured, so piteously that he was touched. For a seemingly interminable length of time his hard eyes looked into hers, and then they softened.

"I understand," he said simply. "You cannot talk about it. I'll not ask any questions."

"My brother is weak in her hands," she managed to say in extenuation.

"After all, it isn't a pleasant subject if you don't mind we'll let it drop—that is, between you and me, Miss Drake. I hope the war won't break off our"—

"Don't suggest it, please. I'd rather you wouldn't. We are friends, after all. I thought it was playing at war, and I can't tell you how shocked I am."

"Poor old Bonaparte!" was all he said in reply. She stooped and laid her hand on the fast chilling coat of the dog. There were tears in her eyes as she arose and turned away, moving toward her horse. Shaw deliberately lifted the dead animal into his arms and strode off toward his own land. She followed after a moment of indecision, leading the horse. Across the line he went and up the side of the knoll to his right. At the foot of a great tree he tenderly deposited his burden. Then he turned to find her almost beside him.

"You won't mind my coming over here, will you?" she asked softly. He reached out and clasped her hand thoughtlessly with his blood covered fingers. It was not until long afterward that she discovered his blood upon the hand from which she had drawn her riding glove.

"You are always welcome," he said. "I am going to bury him here this afternoon. No; please don't come. I'll bring the men down to help me. I suppose they think I'm a coward and a bounder over at your place. Do you remember the challenge you gave me yesterday? You dared me to come over the line as far into Bazelhurst land as you had come into mine. Well, I dared last night."

"You dared? You came?"

"Yes, and I went farther than you have gone, because I thought it was play, comedy, fun. I even sat upon your gallery just outside the billiard room—and smoked two cigarettes. You'll find the stubs on the porch railing if her ladyship's servants are not too exemplary." She was looking at him in wide eyed unbelief. "I was there when you came out on the lawn with the Frenchman."

"Did you hear what he was—what we were saying?" she asked nervously and going pale.

"No. I was not eavesdropping. Besides, you returned to the house very abruptly, if you remember."

"Yes, I remember," she said, a sigh of relief accompanying the warm glow that came to her cheek. "But were you not afraid of being discovered? How imprudent of you!"

"It was a bit risky, but I rather enjoyed it. The count spoke to me as I left the place. It was dark, and he mistook me for one of your party. I couldn't wait to see if you returned to renew the tete-a-tete"—

"I did not return," she said. It was his turn to be relieved.

To be Continued.

BODY FOUND

Negro From Chatham Was Run Over By Train

CHATHAM, April 27. — A body, which has since been identified as that of James Oxindine, a local colored man, was found about five miles east of the city yesterday on the Grand Trunk right of way. The body is badly disfigured and dismembered, and identification is made possible only by the clothing and a book found in the pocket.

Oxindine had been in considerable trouble in one way and another in the city, and was a frequent Police Court character on account of drink.

Fall Crops a Failure.

GALT, April 27. — Farmers throughout a wide range of this western country are greatly disappointed in the conditions of the fall wheat and clover crops. Early in the spring when the snow disappeared there was every evidence of promising crops of wheat and hay, and apparently the winter had injured them very little. But the cold, wet, backward spring and the continued frost by night, in which the ground was frequently frozen to a depth of several inches, has caused the destruction of the plants and in many instances fields of wheat have been almost ruined. Much of the wheat and clover will be plowed up and re-seeded with spring crops.

PRINTED CRAPES.

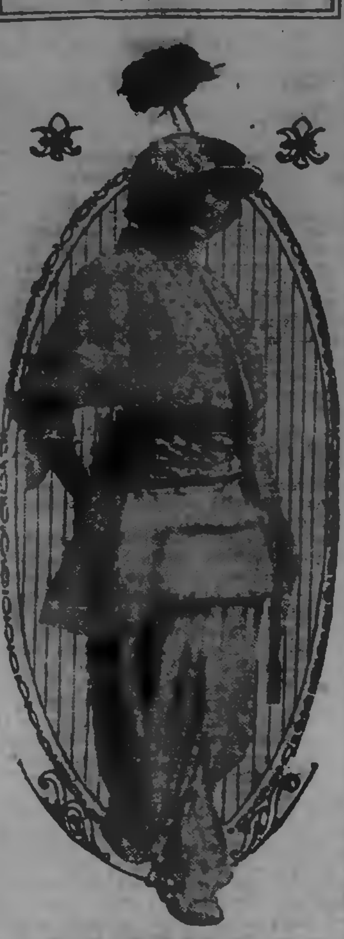
They Are Fashionable For Spring Costumes.



CRAPE AFTERNOON GOWN.

Never were the cottons more varied or beautiful than they are now, and there is an equal diversity in prices. Ratines and crapes are sharing favor, with a noticeable preference for the latter, and the long popular voiles are again in great demand. This is but natural, since these fabrics are ideal for draperies and the clinging effects that are again fashionable.

Printed effects are especially popular, and the flowered crapes are very dainty. In voiles the embroidered designs seem to be preferred, and many of the new ratines are in stripes, checks and plaids.

In the white crapes there are many beautiful fancy weaves. The jacquard and broche designs on crape grounds are new and pretty. White goods generally show the preference for rough surfaces. Ratine is largely used to produce this effect, and it is applied in broken checks or stripes and in conventional or floral designs.

Printed crape in bordered material was used for this very pretty spring gown. The skirt was very fully draped and cut in the front to give a glimpse of the flounce of lace. The long shoulder lines were imparted by means of the deep collar. The wide satin girdle was adjusted above the short tunic with clasp fastenings so that it was removable. The little hat with the ribbon crown was finished with a smart feather ornament.

ADVANCE PLANTING.

Flowers For the Garden May Be Started in Window Boxes.

Sow hardy annual flowers in the window boxes this month. You will then have good sized plants ready for putting out of doors in May. Here are the names of a few of the best to sow: Sweet alyssum, mallows, godetia, annual chrysanthemums, larkspurs and lupins, cornflowers, gilia, linum, mignonette.

But don't forget that plants with a "taproot," such a poppies, eschscholtzia and yellow bartonia, do not like transplanting, so do not sow these in the greenhouse. Keep them to put in a little later in the outdoor garden.

Don't forget that perennial flowering plants can be raised most successfully from seed sown in the house now. Sow some seeds of perennial phloxes at once. They will flower the first year after planting out if you are lucky.

Put the seeds in shallow boxes of sandy soil in a warm spot. Later you will be able to transplant the seedlings to the garden, first putting them in a cold frame to "harden off," as it is called.

Lighting the Dining Room.

The preferred custom for lighting a dining room is to have shaded electric side lights from the walls and to use lighted candles in old fashioned silver candlesticks on the table. Colored silk candle shades or openwork silver shades lined with a colored silk are liked. If no side lights are in a room and there is the necessity of having a light from overhead, at least it should not be glaring. Although a dining room should not be too brilliantly lighted it is undesirable to go to the other extreme and have it dimly lighted. That is unbecoming and depressing. Flowers, candlesticks or ornaments should be arranged so that they may not interfere with the view across the table or with conversation with guests opposite.

Care of the Basket.

To save a clothes basket from getting dirty and worn at the bottom, get four clothes pegs (those with a tin band), split them as far as the band and insert them at each corner of the basket. They will thus act as feet by raising the basket from the ground.

The most charming foot ruffles are seen on taffeta gowns.

ROME, April 25. — The volcanoes Vesuvius and Etna are causing much anxiety in the Mediterranean. The rumblings of Vesuvius are now continuous and are accompanied by earth tremors and clatter, emitting cinders, sulphurous matter and an enormous mass of lava. Prof. Malladra, director of the Vesuvius Observatory, says the phenomena are exactly similar to those preceding the great eruption in 1906. Similar phenomena are observed at Mount Etna.

REPRESENTATIVES OF ALL NATIONS AT WOMEN'S COUNCIL IN ROME

Countess of Aberdeen the President is Completing Arrangements for Quinquennial

Representative women of all nations will meet in Rome next month for the session of the International Council of Women, held once every five years for the review of women's progress and planning of new activities. The total membership of the organizations included in the international council is about 6,500,000 women from 21 countries.

This great affiliation of interests was founded by Susan B. Anthony and other American women leaders in 1888, and the women of the United States represented in it, numbering 3,000,000, lead those of all other countries.

The Countess of Aberdeen, president of the organization, is busy at the vice-regal lodge in Dublin, concluding arrangements for the gathering, which she believes will be the largest in the history of the movement. The purpose of the international meeting is the broad inclusion of all movements designed to better humanity—men not excepted.

Planning the Details.

Lady Aberdeen has a corner of the vice-regal lodge set apart as a "business room," where she and Dr. Alice Salomon, of Berlin, corresponding secretary of the International Council, have been working early and late on details of the gathering. The dates set are from May 5 to 14, inclusive, and the meeting place will be the Hotel Quirinal in Rome.

The list of national councils affiliated with the international organization, all of which are expected to be represented at Rome, includes the United States, Canada, Germany, Sweden, Great Britain, Denmark, Netherlands, Australia, Italy, France, Argentina, Switzerland, Austria, Hungary, Norway, Belgium, Greece and Bulgaria. Woman leaders from Russia, Turkey and China, India and Japan, are also expected.

Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, president of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, will deliver an address on woman suffrage, while Mrs. Kate Waller Barrett, of Alexandria, Va., president of the Florence Crittenton Mission of the United States, will also attend.

"In many ways this is to be one of the most important of the meetings of the council. The women of Italy are said to have been "waking up" the past few years, and "sentiment is ready to crystallize." This meeting is expected to help to focus the thought of the women of Italy; because the International Council of Women stands for the less radical reforms of feminism; representing "the spirit of every woman who has begun to think outside of herself of her home, and stands for the alleviation of the grossest social abuses affecting women and children."

The Italian women's organizations have invited the delegates to remain after the adjournment of the session of the council and attend a congress of women. The council's meeting will last one week; the congress will be in session two weeks.

Objects of the Council.

The International Council can identify itself only with such movements as have been unanimously accepted by its members. The survival of the fittest of the propositions thus far considered includes:

1. To further international peace and arbitration.
2. To combat the "white slave" traffic.
3. To win suffrage for women.
4. To promote legislation concerned with the general welfare of women and their legal position.
5. To promote the improvement of public health.
6. To protect emigrants, and especially safeguard women and children.

The preamble to the statement of the aims and objects of the International Council is:

"We, women of all nations, sincerely believing that the best good of humanity will be advanced by great unity of thought, sympathy and purpose, and that an organized movement of women will best insure the highest good of the family and of the State, do hereby band ourselves together in a confederation of workers to further the application of the golden rule to society, customs and law."

Lady Aberdeen has been president of the International Council for three quinquennial terms. She had expected to retire this year, but at the unanimous request of the presidents of the various national councils she has allowed her name to stand for renomination.—Washington Star.

ASQUITH CABINET MAY MAKE ANOTHER MOVE IN ULSTER

Successful Importation of Arms Is Occasion For a Hurried Conference of Premier Asquith and His Associates—Police Spies Are Active Throughout the North—Debate This Week.

LONDON, April 27.—The gun-running exploit of the Ulster Volunteers, resulting in receipt of 40,000 rifles, stirred the British Cabinet into sudden activity Saturday. Premier Asquith, who was on the way to his country residence for the week-end, was stopped by telegraph and returned to London immediately. On his arrival he conferred with Augustine Birrell, Chief Secretary for Ireland, and other colleagues in the Cabinet. Major-Gen. Sir Cecil McCready of the War Office participated in the conference.

It is unlikely that one result will be a statement in Parliament that what has happened is the very thing the Government feared when they took steps to find out the possible action of the officers of the army if detailed to prevent such a rush-in of munitions of war or in preventing the seizure of the Government stores already located in Ulster.

The Times' Belfast correspondent says conviction is growing to-day that the authorities are again contemplating action against Ulster. Belfast is in the same condition of suppressed excitement which prevailed on March 18, when it became known the Government were about to concentrate military and naval forces.

Belfast Unionists say there is considerable activity among the police, and opinion is prevalent that they and not the troops will be "called upon to initiate the provocative action." Some confirmation of this is afforded by the repeated spying by the police near private houses throughout the whole of Ulster and renewed shadowing of prominent Unionists.

Although the motion has been modified to include the word "inaccuracy," which will give Mr. Austen Chamberlain opportunity to bring up the whole of the Irish issues, especially those as one Unionist puts it, which concern the Government's attempt to conceal the vital facts. More than sixty questions will be put to Mr. Asquith and Mr. Churchill during the two days' debate next week.

Questions will be asked about the personal assurance which Sir John French appended, exempting Curragh officers from fighting in Ulster, and about the reasons which led the Government to think that the safeguarding of stores had become necessary. One wants to know what Sir A. Paget did to carry out his instructions to guard the stores in the south of Ireland. Mr. Austen Chamberlain will submit the motion, and will be followed by Mr. Churchill on behalf of the Government. Mr. Bonar Law and Mr. Asquith will conclude the debate on Wednesday night.

The Standard (Unionist) remarks that there will no doubt be a demand from the radical benches that severe steps be taken, but the responsibility, especially in view of the warning of a month ago, is so appalling that it can scarcely be believed that the Prime Minister will sanction measures in the least degree likely to be effective. The police are obviously powerless to deal with a population of trained determined men, who will assuredly not submit to disarmament without a struggle. To attempt to use the military force for the purpose is only to precipitate calamities from which the country was providentially saved a month ago. Asquith has no longer the excuse which we take the liberty of calling a poor excuse, of being hustled into a reckless adventure by a cabal of hot-headed subordinates. He now knows the whole danger, and he has full power over the army. If he takes a false step the blood will be on his own head. It can only be hoped that even at the eleventh hour he will see the situation, in its true gravity and act not as a party leader, but as a statesman.

CANADIAN IS NAMED FOR ELEVATION IN THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH

List of Churchmen Who Will be Created Members of the Sacred College Does Not Contain Name of Mgr. Bruchesi, But Instead of It That of Archbishop of Quebec—New Cardinal is 74 Years Old.

ROME, April 27.—Pope Pius yesterday decided to hold a consistory May 25 for the purpose of creating Cardinals. Among those who will be elevated to membership in the Sacred College are: Most Rev. Louis Nazaire Begin, Archbishop of Quebec; Monsignor Giusasola Menendez, Archbishop of Toledo, Spain; Monsignor Serafini, Assessor of the Congregation of the Holy Office; Monsignor J. Delachiesa, Archbishop of Bologna; Monsignor Csernoch, Archbishop of Strigonia; Monsignor Sevin, Archbishop of Lyons; Monsignor de Bettinger, Archbishop of Munich; Monsignor de Hartmann, Archbishop of Cologne; Monsignor Pifl, Archbishop of Vienna; Monsignor Giustini, Secretary of the Congregation of the Sacraments; Monsignor Lega, Senior Judge of the Rota Tribunal; Monsignor Tecchi, Assessor of the Consistorial Congregation, and Abbot Gasquet, President of the English Benedictines.

The long-expected list of cardinals to be created at the consistory is causing some surprise, as they expected Monsignor Bruchesi, Archbishop of Montreal, to be included, while nobody thought Abbot Gasquet would receive the honor, although all agree he is most worthy. It is stated that the decision to hold the consistory was due chiefly to the insistence of Germany, which would otherwise cause a conclave without a representative of the Sacred College. However, evidently, Cardinals Gibbons, Farley and O'Connell knew the consistory would be at the end of May, as all had decided to be in Rome at that time.

The Most Rev. Louis Nazaire Begin was born at Levis, Que., in 1840. At one time he was principal of Laval Normal School, Quebec. From 1888-91 he was Bishop of Chicoutimi. From 1891 to 1898 he was coadjutor to Cardinal Taschereau, with the title of Archbishop of Cyrene. He was administrator of the archdiocese from 1894 to 1898, and was made Archbishop of Quebec April 12, 1898. He has traveled widely, and is the author of a number of religious and other books and pamphlets.

TOWN TAKEN BY STRIKERS

NEWS OF THE CAPTURE OF CHANDLER, CAL., IS RECEIVED AT DENVER

DENVER, Col., April 27. — The town of Chandler and the mining camp there was captured just at dusk last evening by 1,000 strikers, according to a message which just reached the governor's office from Florence.

The news was taken to Florence by auto. It is said the strikers had taken absolute possession of the place.

A crowd of men and women—from 5,000 to 6,000 in number—stood in a pouring rain on the lawn in front of the Capitol building here yesterday afternoon and heard the state administration denounced for permitting the murders in the southern coal strike district.

At the conclusion of the speechmaking the mass meeting adopted resolutions condemning Governor E. M. Ammons as an accessory to the murder of babies, and demanding his impeachment at a special session of the Legislature, which Ammons has agreed to call for May, or, in the event of his failure to call the special session, those at the meeting are pledged to have him recalled.

The Denver Federation of Labor yesterday afternoon adopted a resolution to be presented to the national organization asking that each of the 2,000,000 members be assessed five cents a month so as to provide money and arms for the strikers. This would be $100,000 a month.

London Papers See Little Prospect of Successful Mediation

LONDON, April 27.—The London morning newspapers in their editorial comment on the Mexican situation are not sanguine that the offer of mediation by the Presidents of Brazil, Argentina and Chili will result in a peaceful solution of the trouble, declaring that the United States is bent on the elimination of President Huerta, and that it will be impossible for Huerta to accept such terms.

VICTOR HERBERT IS VERY ILL

LONDON, April 27.—Victor Herbert, the composer and conductor, underwent an operation Saturday for appendicitis. His condition had become so critical that the doctors decided that an operation was necessary to save his life. They consider in view of the seriousness of the case that the composer's condition is as good as can be expected. Mr. Herbert came to London a week ago.

SUFFRAGETTES IN BATHING TIGHTS

LONDON, April 27.—Because the police yesterday refused to permit the suffragettes to hold a procession of boats on Serpentine Pond, in Hyde Park, a large party of militants tried to cut the boats on the pond adrift. The women, attired in bathing tights, swam among the boats and cut a number of the mooring ropes.

SASKATOON TO TRY NEW STYLE GARBAGE WAGON

SASKATOON, April 27.—The city commissioners are of the opinion that the garbage wagons operated by the city at the present time are insanitary, out of date and some of them are not properly covered. They accordingly recommend to the council that a new wagon be used the same as the covered garbage wagon made by the Bristol Wagon and Carriage Works, Limited, of Great Britain, which has been universally adopted by the municipalities, and which was awarded the prize medal by the Royal Sanitary Institute Health Exhibition held in 1906. The cost of this wagon f.o.b. Saskatoon is $472. George C. Riddel, of this city, has had experience in the construction of this description of wagon, and has in his employ a man who was employed by the Bristol Wagon and Carriage Works. Mr. Riddel has submitted an estimate to make a wagon exactly similar to the one submitted, amounting to $475. The commissioners recommend that one wagon be given a trial before purchasing any number, and that Mr. Riddel's offer be accepted.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE CHILD LIFE.

Editor of The Review:

Dear Sir, — Your recent editorial "Keep it out of Peterborough," shows your interest in the much-discussed subject of sex hygiene. The following recent remarks by the Editor of the Ladies' Home Journal may be of interest to your readers:

"Let us get one fact clearly in our minds, for if we don't there is a grave danger that we will get a very serious and delicate question badly muddled up. And here is the fact: Because we parents in the home have for years failed to be frank with our children in telling them the truth about the origin of life, and have made a grievous mistake in maintaining a policy of silence that we now see has been wrong, is no reason for unloading the burden of enlightening our sons and daughters on this vitally important subject upon school teachers and instructors who were never intended to discharge that duty.

What we want rather than a course of sex hygiene in the public schools is a little more knowledge and moral stamina on the part of parents. To teach a child the wonderful lesson of life—the most beautiful that can be told a child—is the highest prerogative of the parent, and we must not use the public school as a makeshift nor ask it to teach that which it was never intended to teach, and cannot teach safely or effectively. The school was intended to supplement the home: not to supplant it. There is a parental duty and there is a teacher's part in the training of our young, and woe to our children if we confuse the two and try to shift what is properly the parents' part upon the shoulders of strangers. It is a healthy sign that we are turning from the baneful policy of silence on this great question, but we will turn a healthy trend into a distinctly unhealthy, yes dangerous, direction if we now let the pendulum swing too far. We are dealing with a very simple question if we keep it in its proper place, but the moment we transfer this sacred and rare trust to other hands we transform it into a grave and complicated issue, the dire results of which it is not easy to forsee. It is truly a time of sane thinking: of extreme caution, "lest we forget."

THE DEAD ARE REALLY DEAD

Says J. M. Perrin, at I.B.S.A. Lecture—The Resurrection

There was nothing slow about the I.B.S.A. Bible lecture delivered here yesterday. The speaker seemed much enthused as he gradually unfolded the glorious features of God's Plan of Salvation, through which ultimate victory over the grave will be given to all who will. His pleasant manner, earnest countenance and evident knowledege of the Scriptures, won him the closest attention from start to finish.

In no uncertain terms, the speaker set forth from the Scriptures that the dead are really dead, and that it is a mistake to suppose, contrary to the Bible, that they are more alive than ever—that like a bird liberated from its cage, the soul has taken its flight to the Heavenly realms without waiting for the Resurrection. As proof texts, he referred to Ecclesiastes 9:5: "The dead know not anything"; Psalm 146:4: "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish"; Job. 14:21: "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." While this is considerably different from what ministers used to preach, the lecturer contended that they are now awakening to the fact that nowhere in the Bible is the thought held out that the dead are alive and in Heaven. To the contrary, the Lord Himself declares in John 3:13: "No man hath ascended up to Heaven, but He that came down from Heaven, even the Son of Man...." "Any, then," said the speaker, "who prefer to believe that their dead are alive and in Heaven, contradict the Bible; they deny the Lord's own words."

Resurrection Necessary to Life.

The lecturer then pointed out what he believed to be the only hope of life as laid down in the Scriptures—the resurrection. "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." (Acts 24:15.) "If the dead rise not, then they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." (1 Cor. 15:16-18)—never to live again. They would be as thought they had not been. (Obidiah 16.) The grave, according to the speaker, has for centures been gradually swallowing up mankind; death has been working in the human race to such an extent that the average length of life has been reduced to approximately 35 years. The source of this great River of Death was shown to lie in the fallen Adam, and the victory over the grave to lie in Christ, who took Adam's place, paying the penalty for his sin—death—which is legally to free Adam and his race. In God's appointed time, all will be released from the prisonhouse of death, and be brought forth to life. "As all in Adam die, even so all in Christ shall be made alive."

Thousand-Year Resurrection.

That the Scriptures do not set forth the puerile idea of a twenty-four hour Resurrection Day, was one of the striking points of the lecture. So short a space of time would be quite inadequate for the wonderful work to be accomplished. The speaker declared that according to the Bible, 1000 years are appointed for the individual judgment and resurrection of the whole world, and that the Apostle Peter clearly indicates this in 2 Peter 3:7,8, where, speaking of the Day of Judgment, he reminds us that it is to be a thousand-year Day. This entire Day will be devoted to the awakening, instruction and gradual resurrection, or restoration of the human race to the full life and perfection once enjoyed by Father Adam before he fell a victim to the process of dying.

The resurrection of the unjust was shown to include all others who have not sinned wilfully against full light, including the heathen, both at home and abroad. These have never had the mists sufficiently rolled away to see and appreciate God in the true light, and to understand His wonderful and loving Plan of Salvation, and they will come forth from the grave to learn of their privilege of salvation through Christ. If they gladly accept it and live in harmony with the laws of justice, they shall attain unto eternal life as human beings in the perfected earth. If they reject, they shall be deprived of the wonderful boon of everlasting life, which they do not properly appreciate and would only abuse were they to have it. These, with Satan and his angels, will go into the Second Death, eternal death. Earth and Heaven will thus be purified, of all that would offend; for "all the wicked will God destroy." "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

THE KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS AT ST. PETER'S CATHEDRAL

The Knights of Columbus were present at the eight o'clock Mass in St. Peter's Cathedral yesterday morning and received Holy Communion in a body. His Lordship, Bishop O'Brien, D.D., who celebrated the Mass, spoke a few words commending the Knights of Columbus on their edifying practice of receiving Holy Communion together at different intervals of the year, and remarked how a society having such customs could not but be a grand success. They brought assistance to the society in its undertakings, divine grace to the individual members in their everyday life and above all, they set a beautiful example for other Catholic men.

Owing to the new pipe organ being installed at the Church of the Sacred Heart, low mass was celebrated at ten-thirty yesterday morning, while Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament and a sermon formed the evening devotions. The organ will, it is expected, be installed in the course of eight or ten days, and will be in readiness for its opening at the ten-thirty mass on Sunday, May 17th.

Commencing with Tuesday, the morning mass will be celebrated at seven o'clock instead of seven-thirty, thus the numerous parishioners who commence work at eight o'clock will have an opportunity of assisting at the morning mass during the summer months. The masses for Friday, the first Friday in May, will be at five-thirty and seven. There will be no exposition of the Blessed Sacrament all day, but there will be devotions in the evening.

CAILLAUX WINS

Husband of Slayer of Editor Supported in Elections.

PARIS, April 27. — The elections passed off quietly yesterday.

For the 602 seats, 2,902 candidatures were originally declared. Of these 350 were withdrawn in the past few days. Six hundred others may be disregarded as being of a fantastic character, leaving something under 2,000 candidates. Up to midnight only 86 results were known. Of these 40 were indefinite, necessitating a second ballot on May 10.

Joseph Caillaux, who resigned the Ministry of Finance after the killing of Caston Calmette, editor of The Figaro, by Mme. Caillaux, and who decided to become a candidate for the Chamber at the request of his friends, was re-elected.

ST. LAWRENCE FREE OF ICE

MONTREAL, April 27.—The river is clear from the Atlantic to this port to-day. This is a three-day job. The first ships from the ocean should be here within three or four days.

TORNADO HITS VILLAGES.

Illinois County Hamlets Devastated—One Dead and One Dying.

KANKAKEE, Ill., April 27.—One woman was killed, one man was fatally injured and hundreds of head of farm stock were killed when three villages were rased by a tornado that tore through Kankakee, Illinois County, early Saturday, according to meagre reports here yesterday afternoon. When the twister struck Clifton, destroying three business blocks and eight houses, Mrs. Hortense Collins was caught in the debris of her ruined home, suffering fatal injuries.

At Otto, Ray Madrix, an operator, was fatally injured when the tornado demolished a railroad watch tower.

Momence also suffered heavy property damage, but reports from that village are meagre. The path of the tornado was only a hundred feet wide in most places.

Necessities For the Amateur Gardeners

"You want to know what's best to do when starting a garden? That's not so tough as the tariff. If you'd have a good garden there's a lot of goods you've got to have."

"What are they?"

"For one thing there is good soil. It's a positive necessity. That is unless you would go in for raising soup beans and some other sorts. You can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, nor can you produce or grow tip-top garden edibles on ground that's as poor as Job's turkey."

"What's the best fertilizer?"

"There is no best. It is as has been said of some sorts of whisky: it is all good, but some is of course to be preferred. Wood ashes have no superior. Stable manure in abundance is excellent, and you want salt, lime, bone-dust, nitrate of soda and so on along with it. Manure or fertiliser on a farm or garden is like money in the bank: You can't get too much of it."

"And what about cultivation?"

"That's another all-important part of the gardening business or pastime. The ground, after it has been thoroughly cleaned up, all stones removed, but weeds and litters to be spared or plowed under, should be plowed or spaded. There can't be too much of such breaking, loosening, stirring. Make the garden as loose as an ash heap. In fact it's not a bad plan to use some sticks of dynamite to loosen up the earth, the same as is now done by many when planting fruit trees. The loose ground is the thing to give the roots of trees and vegetables a chance to spread and penetrate downward or toward China."

"Talking about fertilizers, what do you think of liquid manures?"

"Excellent! No doubt about them, and serve two purposes in the summer or dry season. They irrigate while at the same time they furnish plant food or nourishment. Another thing in their favor is the ease with which the liquid may be applied. Take a barrel, whisky barrel now that they are so plentiful in some quarters, and fill half up with stable or other manure and then fill with water. Let it soak well, and there you are, and all you have to do is dip it out and pour or sprinkle it on. Then you may also easily, more easily, make a liquid manure out of nitrate of soda. In small quantities in the drug store nitrate is rather expensive as a fertiliser, but it may be bought by wholesale, and is then quite reasonable. And it is little less than wonderful how nitrate will hustle the growth of vegetation."

"And now how about planting?"

"Considerable of it should have been done already, and much is in cold frames and hotbeds and greenhouses. In them is of course out of the question with many who will be likely to take advantage of the city gardening plan as outlined by the park commission and the park superintendent, Mr. Lionel Evans, but as far as hotbed goes it is within the easy reach of anyone with a bit of ambition and disposition to do a little extra work on the side. It isn't much of a job to make an enclosure something after the fashion of a wagonbed covered with framed glass. In it have the best soil you can get or make, and get in the seeds early. Any suggestion as to hotbeds and cold frames comes rather late now, when it is even high time to be getting in seeds and plants in the open garden. Onions' peas, lettuce and parsley may go in any old time the ground is fit, and so also radishes, as well as other varieties. Any seedsman would be glad to give information, which, indeed, is generally printed on the seed packets themselves.

"At the present time or very soon the garden should be arranged, mapped out; it should be cleaned up and plowed or spaded; beds should be outlined or marked, so that, just so soon as dry, planting may begin without delay."

STRAWBERRIES

May is the very best month to set out a new strawberry bed, although some climates will permit of this being done earlier, and many successful beds are set out as late of June 15. Select well drained, warm land which has been used for a garden patch the previous year, if possible. Perfect drainage is highly important for strawberries. Plow or spade the ground from six to eight inches deep, turning under a couple of inches of well-rotted stable manure and then cultivate the surface until it is very fine and smooth.

Buy good plants from your seedsman, or, better still, from some man who has a good strawberry bed already started, and be careful to get good strong plants which are not run down. The variety which will do best on your soil depends so much upon local conditions that it is not possible to give advice in this department, but you will be safe in getting your plants from any reliable seedhouse or from some grower in your neighborhood who has a successful bed of his own.

The rows may be placed from two and a half to three feet apart where the bed is to be cultivated by hand, or four feet where a horse cultivator is to be used. Make a furrow just deep enough so that the plant roots are well spread and the crown of the plant, the joint where the roots and the stems join, is just above the surface of the soil. Cover the roots deeply, and tread the soil firmly around the plants. Pick off the blossoms and dead leaves and keep the blossoms off the plants during the first season so as to conserve the energy of the plant and get it well established. Be careful not to allow the roots of the plants to become dry before they are placed in the ground.

Some of the plants are perfect and can fertilize the seed, while other plants in the same bed do not produce pollen, hence require pollen from other plants to produce fruit. For this reason it is a good plan to set one row of perfect plants for every two rows of the imperfect plants, although this rule admits of a great deal of variation.

As soon as the plants are set in the ground, water them well to bring the soil particles in close contact with the roots, and then either cultivate the ground between the rows or cover it with straw to prevent weed growth. The cultivation is much preferable during the first season. However, many successful growers find it advisable to cover the ground with straw until after the fruit is harvested from a bearing bed, as it not only prevents the growth of weeds by shading them, but it keeps the ripening fruit from being covered with mud when it rains during the picking season.

The plants should be set about 18 inches apart in the row, and the runners or vine-like tendrils, must be kept back with a hoe the first season.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

The vinegar in which pickles have been preserved is excellent to use in salad dressing instead of ordinary vinegar.

If a glazed appearance is desired on baked potatoes, they should be greased with a little butter before they are baked.

A crochet needle is a good thing to use in mending knitted underwear. With thread to match the stitches.

REFUGEES ARRIVING

PARTY OF AMERICANS SUFFERED ILL TREATMENT FROM MEXICANS

GALVESTON, April 27.—Driven out of Mexico by armed mobs, insulted, taunted and sometimes shot and otherwise tortured, 2,654 Americans have arrived here within the last 24 hours, all glad to escape with their lives, which they had all but despaired of. One United States battleship, two United States colliers and three other steamers were necessary to bring this number of refugees to Galveston. All of the vessels brought word that other steamers were behind them in the Gulf, and officials here are expecting and preparing to care for fully 4,000 refugees before the end of the week. Many of these who escaped from the neighboring republic suffered insults and indignities. They say that several were shot at or carried away by an armed mob of Mexicans and some few were shot and tortured. Many women and children are in the party.

All of the refugees are being held for five days in quarantine. In the meantime food and clothing are being sent to them and a camping ground being prepared. Individual stories of losses of property and hardship are countless. Many of those on board the vessels now anchored in the Galveston roads are without any funds whatever or any method of obtaining money. Many are barely clothed.

The Tampico situation has continued so serious, according to a wireless message reaching here yesterday, that two torpedo boats Saturday were sent up the Panuco river from Tampico to get Americans. Refugees arriving here from Tampico yesterday said they were saved from rioting Mexicans early Wednesday morning by German sailors.

PRUNING ROSES.

If your rose bushes have not already been pruned, attend to them at once. Cut back to good live wood, no matter if there's nothing left but a stump. The more severe the pruning, the bigger and better the flowers, but there won't be so many of them. This doesn't apply to climbers and Rugosas. Always cut to an outside eye, so the bush will grow to an open centre. Besides roses, some of the flowering shrubs may be pruned now—those which bloom after Midsummer and in Fall, as a general rule. The others flower on last year's wood, and cannot be cut back now without sacrificing flowerbuds already formed.

BOTH MEXICO AND U. S. ARE FAVORABLE TO OFFER OF REPUBLICS

Argentina, Brazil and Chile Will Use Their Persuasive Powers to Secure an Agreement Between Gen. Huerta and the United States—Wilson, in Accepting, Lays Down Conditions.

WASHINGTON, April 27. — Spanish Ambassador Riano announced late last night that he received private advices from Mexico City stating that Gen. Huerta had accepted the offer of Argentina, Brazil and Chile to use their good offices to bring about an amicable settlement of the difficulty between the United States and Mexico.

Wilson Also Accepts.

WASHINGTON, April 27. — President Wilson last night announced he had accepted an offer from Brazil, Argentina and Chile to use their good offices in an attempt to bring about a peaceful and friendly settlement of the difficulty between the United States and Mexico.

The offer was formally submitted by the three South American envoys to Secretary Bryan and laid before the President.

It is held that Mr. Wilson's reply means that he will insist upon the elimination of Huerta from the Mexican Presidency.

The reply of the President, made through the Secretary of State to the diplomatic representatives, was as follows:

"The Government of the United States is deeply confident of the friendliness, the good feeling and the generous concern for the peace and welfare of America manifested in the joint note, just received from your Excellency tendering the good offices of your Government to effect, if possible, a settlement of the present difficulty between the Government of the United States and those who now claim to represent our sister Republic of Mexico. Conscious of the purpose with which the proffer is made, the Government does not feel at liberty to decline it. Its own chief interest is in the peace of America, the cordial intercourse of her republics and our people, and the happiness and prosperity which can spring only out of frank, mutual understandings and the friendship which is created by common purpose. The generous offer of your Government is, therefore, accepted.

"This Government hopes most earnestly that you may find those who speak for the several elements of the Mexican people willing and ready to discuss terms of satisfactory and therefore permanent settlement. If you should find them willing this Government will be glad to take up with you for discussion in the frankest and most conciliatory spirit any proposals that may be authoritatively formulated, and will hope that they may prove feasible and prophetic of a new day of mutual co-operation and confidence in America.

"This Government feels bound in candor to say that, its diplomatic relations with Mexico being for the present severed, it is not possible for it to make sure of an uninterrupted opportunity to carry out the plan of intermediation which you propose. It is, of course, possible that some act of aggression on the part of those who control the military forces of Mexico might oblige the United States to act to the upsetting of the hopes of immediate peace, but this does not justify us in hesitating to accept your generous suggestion. We shall hope for the best results within a brief time, enough to relieve our anxiety lest most ill-considered hostile demonstrations should interrupt negotiation and disappoint our hopes of peace."

The text of the offer made by the three countries was:

"Mr. Secretary of State:

"With the purpose of subserving the interests of peace and civilization in our continent and with the earnest desire to prevent any further bloodshed to the prejudice of the cordiality and union which have always surrounded the relations of the Governments and the people of America, we, the plenipotentiaries of Brazil, Argentina and Chile, duly authorized hereto, have the honor to tender to your Excellency's Government our good offices for the peaceful and friendly settlement of the conflict between the United States and Mexico.

"This offer puts in due form the suggestions which we have had occasion to offer heretofore on this subject to the Secretary, to whom we renew the assurances of our highest and most distinguished consideration.

Consul In Jail Two Days.

WASHINGTON, April 27.—United States Consul-General Philip Hanna, at Monterey, reported to Secretary Bryan last night that he had been humiliated and placed in jail by Mexican Federal officials on April 22, and left behind the bars until released two days later by the Constitutionalists when they captured the city.

Mr. Hanna's message to Secretary Bryan was despatched yesterday from Monterey. The Secretary took it to the White House at once, and it was the subject of a long conference between him and President Wilson. Mr. Hanna reported that he had been courteously treated by the Constitutionalists.

RADIUM AND IT'S ORES

By R. A. A. Johnston

The discovery of the element radium by Mme. Curie at the end of the last century was the culmination of a long series of experiments and researches prosecuted by many investigators. A few years previous to this discovery Becquerel had observed that a photographic plate wrapped in black paper was markedly affected when brought into proximity with a compound of uranium. Later on Mme. Curie found that the residues left after the extraction of uranium from its ores were much more active in this respect than was uranium itself. Stimulated by this discovery Mme. Curie carried her researches still further and in the course of a long and laborious series of separations of the constituents of these residues found that there were two substances which were capable of affecting a photographic plate in the way mentioned. In the course of these separations one of these substances was found to associate itself with the bismuth; to this substance Mme. Curie gave the name of polonium after her native country Poland; the other associated itself with barium and on account of its strongly radio-active properties was caled radium.

It must be remembered here that radium itself has not been literated as a separate entity and that it is only in its compounds such as the chloride, bromide, nitrate, etc., that it has been studied. These compounds are luminous of themselves and have the power of imparting luminosity to many other substances when brought into proximity with them; they charge electrically vessels containing them; they of themselves give off heat continuously; they have marked effect on photographic plates and in many other ways display remarkable properties.

These active properties of radium are due to a kind of decay by which it, in all probability, gives rise to their elements. This decay is so uniform and of such potentiality that the amount of radium in a substance may be actually estimated from the emanations issuing from it. This is done by means of an instrument called an electrometer.

---

It is natural to suppose that a substance possessing such unusual properties should at once attract attention with a view to ascertaining its possible practical applications, and nowhere has greater activity been shown than in its possible application as a curative agent for some of the ills to which humanity has fallen heir; and in this connection extensive investigations have been carried on with a view to ascertaining the effect of the emanations from radium upon that greatest of human evils, malignant cancer. The results have undoubtedly been most startling, but the public would be well advised to reserve final judgment upon the merits of radium as a curative agent until the permanency of these results has been proved. In the opinion of the best authorities this may not be ascertained for some years to come. For all this the results of these experiments have been of such a character that various Governments have thought it expedient to take such steps as will tend to conserve any supplies of radium ores coming within their jurisdiction and in some instances have gone so far as to prohibit their export.

---

As has already been stated the ores or uranium were the first to attract attention as possessing any unusual radio-active properties and it is from such ores that all of the radium of commerce has been obtained. Radio-activity of greater or less potentiality has been observed in a great variety of materials both liquid and solid, but whether this radio-activity is in all cases due to the presence of radium is not absolutely clear. The waters of some springs are known to show considerable activity and on this account wonderful curative properties have rightly or wrongly been ascribed to them. The petroleums issuing from many oil wells show more or less radio-activity; some of the petroleum from the Interlake Peninsula of the Province of Ontario have been shown to exhibit remarkable radio-activity; this has been particularly marked in some of the heavy oils found in the deeper wells. Amongst the solid constituents of the earth's crust, crystalline rocks such as the granites have been noted as sources of radio-active emanations and in this case the emanations are probably due to the presence of uranium bearing minerals; generally speaking, however, the amount of uranium in these rocks is so minute that its presence may only be detected by the most critically conducted chemical analysis and the instances in which the presence of uranium is manifested in the form of a distinct mineral are comparatively rare and for the most part are found in the coarse granites known as pegmatites; occurrences of this kind have not yet been found to be profitable sources of uranium or radium. Until quite recently certain metalliferous veins of secondary origin furnished the only source of commercial radium; the silver and copper-bearing veins of Schneeberg in Saxony, Joachimsthal in Bohemia, and Resbanya in Hungary, which sometimes hold more or less of the mineral pitchblende, are examples of this kind. At a few places in the world uranium-bearing minerals have been found in connection with certain sand-stones and conglomerates, rocks of sedimentary origin. These rocks have been formed from the detritus occasioned by the break down, by acqueous or other agencies, of vast quantities of crystalline rocks; the constituents of these rocks during transportation by steam agencies have undergone a selective process according to the laws of gravity by which the heavier materials have been segregated amongst themselves; in this way the uranium bearing constituents of the crystalline rocks have become concentrated; these constituents have subsequently become oxidized and have given rise to a class of minerals different in some respects to those indicated previously; examples of this kind are the commercially important deposits of carnotite found within recent years in Colorado and Idaho in the United States.

---

A brief description of the principal uranium bearing minerals may not be out of place here.

The mineral uraninite, which includes a number of varieties such as cleveite, broggerite, and pitchblende based on slight differences in composition, is found as a primary constituent of some granite rocks and also as a secondary mineral along with ores of silver, copper, lead, etc. It is a heavy mineral with a specific gravity of about 9 to 9.7 (water-); the lustre varies from sub-metallic through greasy to dull and the colour from grey through green and brown to velvet black. It contains from 75 to 88 per cent. of oxides of uranium.

Gummite occurs in the form of rounded or flattened pieces frequently with uraninite in dikes of pegmatite. It has a greasy lustre, and in color varies from reddish yellow to reddish brown. It occurs as an alteration of uraninite and includes a number of sub-varieties.

Then there are a number of other minerals more or less closely allied with these in point of composition and modes of occurrences, but which need not be touched upon here as so far they have not attained to any commercial importance.

Then we come to that class of uranium-radium minerals which are found in sedimentary deposits, and these for the time being at least bid fair to attain to the greatest importance commercially. Their mode of formation has already been touched upon. The principal mineral of this class is carbonite a compound containing vanadium, uranium, and potassium often with more or less adventitious materials. Carnotite is of a bright yellow colour and appears both as a very fine powder and as a crystalline efflorescence.

---

In Canada the number of localities in which uranium bearing minerals are known to occur is comparatively small and so far only small quantities have been obtained from them. Many years ago the mineral uraninite was reported from Mamainse on the eastern shore of Lake Superior and was described under the name of coracite. It was said to occur in a vein 2 inches in width in syenite in contact with a trap rock. Efforts have been made at various times within recent years to rediscover this vein but so far these have been fruitless. The mineral uraconite, a sulphate of uranium, has been observed lining cavaties in the magnetic iron-ore of Snowdon in Peterborough County and a similar occurrence has been noted in Madoc in Hastings county; a pegmatite in the township of Lyndoch in Renfrew county has also yielded specimens of minerals possessing radio-active properties. These localities are in the Province of Ontario. In the Province of Quebec uraninite and its alternation product gummite have been observed at the Villeneuve mica mine in the township of Villeneuve and also in a pegmatite vein in Wakefield, both in Ottawa county; the mineral monazite, a phosphate of rare earths, which also possesses radio-active properties, has been found at the Villeneuve locality. In the township of Maisonneuve in the county of Berthier the mineral samarskite has been found in a mica-bearing pegmatite; this mineral was found by Hoffmann to contain 10.75 per cent. of oxide of uranium. Uraninite is also known to occur at a mica mine about 18 miles north of Murray Bay in the county of Saguenay. At this locality too a curious carbonaceous mineral resembling anthracite in its general appearance has been noted by Obalski. This mineral yielded 2.56 per cent. of uranium.

---

While as yet no commercial deposits of uranium ores are known to exist in Canada there is no reason to suppose that such may not be found, and prospectors would do well to maintain a close watch for anything that may contain this element. Special regard should be had for any minerals with a pitchy lustre and also for earthy or finely crystalline minerals having a bright yellow colour. It might be well to provide onself with one or two simple instruments for detecting radio-activity. An electroscope is particularly useful, but cannot always be carried about conveniently. For all practical purposes a scintilloscope is the most convenient instrument; one may be had for about a dollar, but it should be carefully tested with a mineral of known radio-active properties before taking it to the field and great care should be taken to maintain its efficiency; its usefulness may soon vanish through careless handling.

STAN CRESWELL TURNS ASIDE FIRST FIVE MEN TO FACE HIS OFFERINGS

Home Brew Heaver Shows Something Against Pittsburg Team—Petes Win 9-1

Youngstown, April 27.—Excellent weather greeted the baseball artists of the Peterboro Canadian League team and the Pittsburg Independents in their exhibition game at Wright Park yesterday afternoon. The field was a trifle heavy, occasioned no doubt by the recent heavy rains, nevertheless the Canadians dished up a fair class of ball and cleaned up 9-1.

The crowd was a trifle below par, but the fans were well pleased with Stanley Creswell and gave him the glad hand. The lanky boy is a wonder. He began at the fourth and made his presence known by striking out the first five men who faced him. He pitched for four innings and struck out nine, allowed one hit, no runs and nothing doing in the line of a free pass to first. Bob Sterling pitched the opening three stanzas, but was inclined to be a little wild, nevertheless he showed good form. The Independents gathered their only counter off his delivery in the first, but after that they were below average. Ken. Tracey pitched the last innings without allowing a hit.

Receivers Worked Well.

Miller, Kelly and Ryberg all shared in the receiving and had the Pittsburg crew nailed to the bases all the time. Buck Freeman made a very favorable impression with his work at first. He covered the bag to a nicety and secured three bingles out of four times up. Frank Fox, who played in the field had two hits to his credit, while Blount, Byrne, Price and Ryberg all had one.

The team is showing more class every day, and should be in grand shape by the opening of the league. The squad is to be reduced to-night. Very likely O'Hearne and Flanagan will be let out.

HIGHER RATING FOR THE CANADIAN LEAGUE

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, April 27.—President Fitzgerald received word this morning from Secretary Farrel of the National Baseball Commission, that after a long fight, the rating of the Canadian Baseball League has been raised from Class "C" to Class "B," a concession which gives the league greater prestige and also means that twelve hundred dollars instead of seven hundred and fifty must be paid for players drafted from this league. The rating is for this year only, but will doubtless be confirmed at the annual meeting of the Commission in Omaha in November. Class B rating was previously refused on the technical ground that the population figures of the last census did not call for it, but President Fitzgerald was successful in showing that the increase since last census was sufficient to justify the change.

Will Play With Campbellford, Hastings and Havelock.

The Peterboro Lacrosse Club has been placed in a district with Havelock, Campbellford, and Hastings. This district is arranged for the intermediate and Junior teams.

BASEBALLITIS

The Pittsburg club has put cigaret smoking under the ban, and recently, when a tobacco firm made an offer for the privilege of advertising the cigaret on pictures of the players, the club officials declined to consider it.

And Rube Deneau's clan must be known hereafter as the Brants. At that you can hardly blame them for shaking the Red Sox stuff.

Bill Baker, of the Saints, is up to his old tricks again. He pitched the first three innings of the game against Battle Creek on Saturday, showed lots of speed, allowed one hit and better still he didn't walk one man.

There are a couple of other pitching staffs which are fifty-fifty as well as the Petes'. Take a slant at Heck, Hammond, Beebe, Steiger and Reisling, of London, and Baker, Wilkinson, Clements, Howick and Reilly with Midge Craven's crew.

Dawson, recently released by Blount, is trying out with the Erie squad.

Shafer and Kelly Harris of the Yankees, are heavy on the home run idea. They have several circuit wallops to their credit in their game with the Yannigans. Your pitching staff must be weak, Mr. O'Neil, we saw Harris before.

LAWN BOWLING

The Peterboro Lawn Bowling Club have been fortunate enough to secure the services of Mr. W. James as caretaker of their green for the coming season. Mr. James has had considerable experience in caring for cricket and other sporting grounds in the Old Country, and should be quite capable of assuming the duties which Mr. W. Gray performed so well for the past few years.

PASSIONATE PANTOUM.

I guess I never loved till now!
  And yet the secret in my breast
I haven't got the nerve to vow—
  Although I'm sure I love you best.

And yet the secret in my breast
  I've felt some several times before.
Although I know I love you best,
  I have loved other girls of yore.

I've felt some several times before
  These palpitations of the heart.
I have loved other girls of yore,
  And after all we had to part.

These palpitations of the heart
  I've felt for Jess and Mame and Kate,
And after all we had to part—
  And still I'm not disconsolate.

I've felt for Jess and Mame and Kate
  The passion that I feel for thee—
And still I'm not disconsolate—
  Why, you, dear, still believe in me!

The passion that you feel for me
  I guess I never loved till now,
Why, you, dear, still believe in me!
  I haven't got the nerve to vow!

Odd Weaves and Uncommon Colorings in Summer Wash Goods

The Kind that Makes the Pretty Dresses

WOMEN AND MISSES who delight in rich materials and bright colorings, will be able to satisfy their taste to the full this season, for not in many years, if ever, have manufacturers of wash goods produced so wide a variety of quaint new weaves or so great a profusion of lovely colors as the ones originated for the summer season.

Radical changes have been made in the surface of textures—and while a few may seem delicate and unusually light and sheer in quality, nevertheless, they're exceptionally durable.

The common and the old are not displayed here—only the new fashionable weaves are given space on our counters—if your desire is for something unusually pretty in wash goods for summer wear—the "Hall Store," can certainly supply your every need and quickly satisfy you in color, weave and price.

H. B. COLLIER GIVES LECTURE AT GUELPH

Told Royal Astronomical Society About the Moon.

(Guelph Herald.)

Last evening H. B. Collier, Ph. B., of Toronto, formerly of the Peterboro Centre, gave a lecture in the Carnegie Hall, dealing with the earth's nearest celestial neighbor, the moon, in a practical and convincing manner. The affair was an open lecture, under the auspices of the Royal Astronomical Society Canada.

His early remarks dealt principally with a model of the moon, sculptured by the speaker's own hands during eight months' of spare time. This interesting object has a diameter of twelve inches; it had the wonderful Parisian prints of the celestial body. In explaining the more common points of the latter, he alluded to the distance between the earth and its neighbor of 240,000 miles. This he had taken into consideration on working a model which represented one hundred and eighty miles to the inch. "Some people have asked," he added, "why the model shows only half a moon. One must remember that all we ever see on earth of it is half, except at certain times, when various movements, called by us vibrations, allow us to see about 59 per cent. of surface. But the other side of the moon we never see, and likely never will, although it may have been apparent in ages past.

MR. H. B. COLLIER.
